They best the wise Creator's praise declare.

Dryden.

Now mourn thy fatal search:

It is not safe to have too quick a sense. Dryden.

By the philosophical use of words, I mean such an use as conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may be satisfied with in its search
after knowledge. Locke.

The parents, after a long search for the boy, gave him for drowned in a canal. Addison.

This common practice carries the heart aside from all that is honest in our search after truth.

Watts.

4. Quest; pursuit.

If zealous love should go in search of virtue,

Where should he find it purer than in Blanche?

Shakespeare.

Stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into: in that it is a thing of his own search, and altogether against my will. Shaks. As you like it.

Nor did my search of liberty begin,

Till my black hairs were chang'd upon my chin.

Dryden.

SE'ARCHABLE.* adj. [from search.] That may be explored. Cotgrave, and Sherw.

SE'ARCHER. n. s. [from search.]

1. Examiner; trier.

The Agarenes that seek wisdom upon earth, the authors of fables, and searchers out of understanding. Bar. iii. 23.

The searchers found a marvellous difference between the Anakins and themselves. Raleigh.

Religion has given us a more just idea of the divine nature: he whom we appeal to is truth itself, the great searcher of hearts, who will not let fraud go unpunished, or hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. Addison.

2. Seeker; inquirer.

In vain we lift up our presumptuous eyes

To what our Maker to their ken denies:

The searcher follows fast; the object flies. Prior.

Avoid the man who practises any thing unbecoming a free and open searcher after truth. Watts.

3. Officer in London appointed to examine the bodies of the dead, and report the cause of death.

The searchers, who are ancient matrons sworn to their office, repair to the place where the dead corps lies, and by view of the same, and by other inquiries, examine by what disease the corps died.

Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

SE'ARCHING.* n. s. [from search.] Examination; inquisition.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

For the divisions of Reuben there were great searchings of heart. Judges, v. 16.

SE'ARCHLESS.* adj. [search and less.]

Avoiding or escaping search; inscrutable.

The modest-seeming eye,

Beneath whose beautiful beams, belying heaven,

Lurk searchless cunning, cruelty, and death.

Thomson, Spring.

SE'AREDNESS.* n. s. [from To sear.] State of being seared or cauterized: from the practice of surgeons, who apply burnings in order to heal corrupt flesh, which becomes afterwards insensible; hence, figuratively, insensibility.

He wonders at my extreme prodigality of credit, and searedness of conscience, in citing an epistle

so convicted by Bellarmine!

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 261.

Delivering up the sinner to a stupidity, or carelessness of conscience. South, Sermon. ix. 54.
He is sealed up under a spirit of sear'dness and reprobation. South, Sermon. x. 233.

SE'ASON.† n. s. [saison, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—Probably from the Lat. occasione, abl. of occur; whence the Ital. cagione,
the same.]

1. One of the four parts of the year,
Spring, Summer, Autumn, Winter.

The fairest flowers of the season
Are our carnations and streak'd gillyflowers.

Shakespeare.
Then Summer, Autumn, Winter did appear;
And Spring was but a season of the year. Dryden.
We saw, in six days' travelling, the several seasons of the year in their beauty. Addison on Italy.

2. A time as distinguished from others.
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits of the season. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
The season prime for sweetest scents and airs.

Milton, P. L.
3. A fit time; an opportune concurrence.
At season fit let her with thee partake.

Milton, P. L.
All business should be done betimes; and there's as little trouble of doing it in season too, as out of season. L'Estrange.
For active sports, for pleasing rest,
This is the time to be possess'd;
The best is but in season best. Dryden.

I would indulge the gladness of my heart!
Let us retire: her grief is out of season. Philips.
There is no season to which such thoughts as these are more suitable. Atterbury.

The season when to come, and when to go,
To sing, or cease to sing, we never know. Pope.

4. A time not very long.
We'll slip you for a season, but our jealousy
Does yet depend. Shakespeare, Cymb.

5. [From the verb.] That which gives a high relish.

You lack the season of all natures, sleep.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Salt too little, which may season give.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.
To SE'ASON.† v. a. [assaisonnement, Fr.;
Dr. Johnson.—Ital. salsare; German, salzen; from salio, Lat. to salt.]

1. To mix with food any thing that gives a high relish.

Every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt. Lev. ii. 13.

They seasoned every sacrifice, whereof a greater part was eaten by the priests. Brown, Vulg. Err.
For breakfast and supper, milk and milk-pottage are very fit for children; only let them not be seasoned with sugar. Locke.

The wise contrivance,
To keep the waters from corruption free,
Mixt them with salt, and season'd all the sea.

Blackmore.
2. To give a relish to; to recommend by something mingled.

You season still with sports your serious hours;
For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours. Dryden.

The proper use of wit is to season conversation, to represent what is praiseworthy to the greatest advantage, and to expose the vices and follies of men. Tillotson.

3. To qualify by admixture of another ingredient.

Mercy is above this sceptred sway;
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly power does then shew like God's,
When mercy seasons justice. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Season your admiration but a while,
With an attentive ear, till I deliver
This marvel to you. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.

Whatever thing
The sith of time mows down, devour unspair'd,
Till I, in man residing, through the race
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect,
And season him thy last and sweetest prey.
Milton, P. L.

Secure their religion, season their younger years with prudent and pious principles. Bp. Taylor.

Sin, taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons:
the touch and unction go together. South.

5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature.

The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren:

How many things by season season'd are,
To their right praise and true perfection! Shaks.
Who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly seasons him his enemy.

We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself unto a power tyrannical. Shaks. Coriol.

The archers of his guard shot two arrows every man together against an inch board of well season'd timber. Hayward.

His plenteous stores do season'd timber send;
Thither the brawny carpenters repair. Dryden.
A man should harden and season himself beyond the degree of cold where he lives. Addison.

To SE'ASON.† v. n.
1. To become mature; to grow fit for any purpose.

Carpenters rough plane boards for flooring, that they may set them by to season. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

2. To betoken; to savour.
Lose not your labour and your time together;
It seasons of a fool. Beaumont and Fl. Chances.

SEASONABLE. adj. [saison, Fr.] Opportune; happening or done at a proper time; proper as to time.

Mercy is seasonable in the time of affliction, as clouds of rain in the time of drought. Ecclus. v. 2.

If ever it was seasonable to preach courage in the despised abused cause of Christ, it is now, when his truths are reformed into nothing, when the hands and hearts of his faithful ministers are weakened. South, Sermon.

SEASONABLENESS.† n. s. [from seasonable.] Opportuneness of time; propriety with regard to time.

I durst never lay too much hope on the forward beginnings of wit and memory, which have been applauded in children. I knew they could but attain their vigour; and if sooner, no whit the better; for the earlier is their perfection of wisdom, the longer shall be their witless age. Season-ableness is best in all these things which have their ripeness and decay. Bp. Hall, Holy Observ. (1609.) § 15.

Neither the goodness of the soil, nor the season-ableness of the weather, nor the industry of the husbandman, is now inferior to that of former ages. Hakewill on Prov. p. 145.

A British freeholder would very ill discharge his part, if he did not acknowledge the excellency and seasonableness of those laws by which his country has been recovered out of its confusions.

Addison.
SEASONABLY. adv. [from seasonable.] Properly with respect to time.

This is that to which I would most earnestly,
most seasonably advise you all. Sprat, Sermon.

SEASONAGE.* n. s. [from season.] Seasoning; sauce.

Light gives a seasonage to all other fruitions, lays open the bosom of the universe, and shows the treasures of nature; in a word, gives opportunity to the enjoyment of all the other senses. South, Sermon. viii. 408.

Charity is the grand seasonage of every christian duty. South, Sermon. ix. 152.

SEASONER. n. s. [from To season.] One who seasons or gives a relish to any thing.

SEASONING. n. s. [from season.] That which is added to any thing to give it a relish.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites, and some do nourish
so as divers do live of them alone. Bacon.

Some abound with words, without any seasoning or taste of matter. B. Jonson.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

Political speculations are of so dry and austere a nature, that they will not go down with the public without frequent seasonings. Addison, Freeholder.

The publick accept a paper which has in it none of those seasonings that recommend the writings which are in vogue among us. Addison, Spect.

Many vegetable substances are used by mankind as seasonings, which abound with a highly exalted aromatic oil; as thyme and savory. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SEAT. n. s. [sedes, Lat. sett, old German.
Skinner.]

1. A chair, bench, or any thing on which one may sit.

The sons of light
Hasted, resorting to the summons high,
And took their seats. Milton, P. L.

The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast,
And made the lady of the flower her guest;
When, lo, a bower ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train. Dryden.

2. Chair of state; throne; post of authority; tribunal.

With due observance of thy goodly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall supply Thy latest words. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares fears. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Whatsoever be the manner of the world's end, most certain it is an end it shall have, and as certain that then we shall appear before the judgement-seat of Christ, that every man may receive according to that which he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil. Hakewill on Providence.

3. Mansion; residence; dwelling; abode.

It were enough in reason to succour with virtuals, and other helps, a vast multitude, compelled by necessity to seek a new seat, or to direct them unto a country able to receive them. Raleigh.

O earth, how like to heaven! if not prefer'd
Most justly, seat worthier of gods, as built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton, P. L.

In Alba he shall fix his royal seat;
And, born a king, a race of kings beget. Dryden.
Has winter caus'd thee, friend, to change thy seat, Dryden.

And seek in Sabine air a warm retreat? Dryden.
The promis'd seat of empire shall again
Cover the mountain, and command the plain. Prior.

4. Situation; site.

It followeth now that we find out the seat of Eden; for it was Paradise by God planted. Raleigh.

A church by Strand-bridge, and two bishops' houses, were pulled down to make a seat for his new building. Hayward.

He that builds a fair house upon an ill seat, committeth himself to prison. Bacon.

The fittest and the easiest to be drawn To our society, and to aid the war, The rather for their seat, being next borderers On Italy. B. Jonson, Catiline.

To SEAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place on seats; to cause to sit down. The guests were no sooner seated but they entered into a warm debate. Arbutnot.

2. To place in a post of authority, or place of distinction.

Thus high was king Richard seated.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcaico, such magnificence
Equal'd in all their glories to inshrine
Belus or Scarpis their gods, or seat

A spirit of envy or opposition makes mankind uneasy to see others of the same species seated above them in a sort of perfection. Pope.

3. To fix in any particular place or situation; to settle.

Should one family or one thousand hold possession of all the southern undiscovered continent, because they had seated themselves in Nova Guiana? Raleigh.

By no means build too near a great neighbour, which were, in truth, to be as unfortunately seated on the earth as Mercury is in the heavens; for the most part ever in combustion, or obscurity, under brighter beams than his own. Wotton.

4. To fix; to place firm.

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
From their foundations loosening to and fro,

To SEAT. v. n. To rest; to lie down. Not in use.

Him thither eke for all his fearful threat
He followed fast, and chased him no nie,
That to the folds, where sheep at night doe seat,
And to the little coles, where shepherds lie
In winter's wrathfull time, he forced him to flie. Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 4.

humour, necessary for defending those parts, from which it is seceded, from exhortations. Arbutnot.

SECESS. n. s. [secessus, Lat.] Retirement; retreat.

Silent secess, waste solitude.

More, Song of the Soul, (1647,) Pref. B. 4. b.

SECESSION. n. s. [secessio, Lat.]

1. The act of departing.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown.

2. The act of withdrawing from councils or actions.

The cells and cloysters of retired votaries, whose very secession proclaims their contempt of sinful seculars. Bp. Hall, Peacemaker, § 8.

SECLE. n. s. [siecle, Fr. seculum, Lat.] A century. Not in use.

Of a man's age, part he lives in his father's lifetime, and part after his son's birth; and thereupon it is wont to be said that three generations make one secle, or hundred years in the genealogies. Hammond, Pract. Catech.

To SECLUDE. v. a. [secludo, Lat.] To confine from; to shut up apart; to exclude.

None is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.

Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us, to fence them not only, as he did the interdicted tree, by combination, but with difficulties and impossibilities. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

The number of fishes described may be near five hundred, and of fishes, secluding shell-fish, as many; but if the shell-fish be taken in, more than six times the number. Ray.

Inclose your tender plants in your conservatory, secluding all entrance of cold. Evelyn, Kalendar.

Let eastern tyrants from the light of heaven seclude their bosom slaves. Thomson.

SECLUSION. n. s. [seclusus, Lat.] A shutting out. Coles, Dict. 1685. Separation; exclusion.

Their women appear to have been devoted to a state of seclusion. Warton.

SECOND. adj. [second, Fr. secundus, Lat.]

It is observable, that the English have no ordinal of two, as the Latins and the nations deriving from them have none of duo. What the Latins call secundus, from sequor, the Saxons term oðer, or ærfeapa.

1. The next in order to the first; the ordinal of two.

Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back. Dryden.

2. Next in value or dignity; inferior.

I shall not speak superlatively of them, lest I be suspected of partiality; but this I may truly say, they are second to none in the Christian world. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

None I know
Second to me, or like; equal much less.

Milton, P. L.
My eyes are still the same; each glance, each grace,

Keep their first lustre, and maintain their place,
Not second yet to any other face. Dryden.

Not these huge bolts, by which the giants slain,
Lay overthrow on the Phlegrean plain;
'Twas of a lesser mould and lighter weight;
They call it thunder of a second rate. Addison.

By a sad train of miseries alone
Distinguish'd long, and second now to none. Pope.
Persons of second rate merit in their own country, like birds of passage, thrive here, and fly off when their employments are at an end. Swift.

SECONDO-HAND. n. s. Possession received from the first possessor.

SECONDO-HAND is sometimes used adjectively. Not original; not primary.

Some men build so much upon authorities, they have but a second-hand or implicit knowledge. Locke.

They are too proud to cringe to second-hand favourites in a great family. Swift to Gay.

At SECONDO-HAND. adv. In imitation; in the second place of order; by transmission; not primarily; not originally.

They pelted them with satyrs and epigrams, which perhaps had been taken up at first only to make their court, and at second-hand to flatter those who had flattered their king. Temple.

In imitation of preachers at second-hand, I shall transcribe from Bruyere a piece of rallery. Tatler.
Spurious virtue in a maid;
A virtue but at second-hand. Swift.

SECOND. n. s. [second, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. One who accompanies another in a duel to direct or defend him.

Their seconds minister an oath,
Which was indifferent to them both,
That on their knightly faith and troth
No magick them supplied;
And sought them that they had no charms,
Wherewith to work each other's harms,
But came with simple open arms
To have their causes tried. Drayton, Nymphid.

Their first encounters were very furious, till after some toil and bloodshed they were parted by the seconds. Addison.

Personal brawls come in as seconds to finish the dispute of opinion. Watts.

2. One who supports or maintains; a supporter; a maintainer.

He propounded the duke as a main cause of divers infirmities in the state, being sure enough of seconds after the first onset. Wotton.

Courage, when it is only a second to injustice, and falls on without provocation, is a disadvantage to a character. Collier.

3. A second minute, the second division of an hour by sixty; the sixtieth part of a minute.

Four flames of an equal magnitude will be kept alive the space of sixteen second minutes, though one of these flames alone, in the same vessel, will not last above twenty-five or at most thirty seconds. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

Sounds move above 1140 English feet in a second minute of time, and in seven or eight minutes of time about 100 English miles. Locke.

To SECONDO. v. a. [secondo, Fr. secundo, Lat. from the noun.]

1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.

The authors of the former opinion were presently seconded by other wittier and better learned, who being loth that the form of church polity, which they sought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity and matters of necessity to salvation. Hooker.

Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offering to combat thee his champion bold,
With the utmost of his godhead seconded. Milton, S. A.

Familiar Ovid tender thoughts inspires,
And nature seconds all his soft desires. Roscommon.

If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.

In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce,
Yet serves to second too some other use. Pope.

2. To follow in the next place.

You some permit
To second ill with ill. Shakspeare.

Having formerly discours'd of a marital voyage, I think it not impertinent to second the same with some necessary relations concerning the royal navy. Raleigh.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton, P. L.

Sin is seconded with sin; and a man seldom commits one sin to please, but he commits another to defend himself. South.

SE'COND Sight. n. s. The power of seeing things future, or things distant: supposed inherent in some of the Scottish islanders.

As he was going out to steal a sheep, he was seized with a fit of second sight: the face of the country presented him with a wide prospect of new scenes, which he had never seen before.

Addison, Freeholder.

SE'COND sighted. adj. [from second sight.] Having the second sight.

Savney was descended of an ancient family, renowned for their skill in prognosticks: most of his ancestors were second sighted, and his mother but narrowly escaped for a witch. Addison.

SE'CONDARILY. adv. [from secondary.] In the second degree; in the second order; not primarily; not originally; not in the first intention.

These atoms make the wind primarily tend downwards, though other accidental causes impel them secondarily to a sloping motion. Digby.

He confesses that temples are erected, and festivals kept, to the honour of saints, at least secondarily. Stillingfleet.

It is primarily generated out of the effusion of melancholic blood, or secondarily out of the dregs and remainder of a phlegmonous or oedematick tumour. Harvey.

SE'CONDARINESS. n. s. [from secondary.] The state of being secondary.

That which is peculiar and discriminative must be taken from the primariness and secondariness of the perception. Norris.

SE'CONDARY. † adj. [secondaire, old Fr. secundarius, Lat.]

1. Not primary; not of the first intention. Two are the radical differences: the secondary differences are as four. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Succeeding to the first; subordinate. Wheresoever there is moral right on the one hand, no secondary right can discharge it. L'Estrange.

Gravitation is the powerful cement which holds together this magnificent structure of the world, which stretcheth the North over the empty space, and hangeth the earth upon nothing, to transfer the words of Job from the first and real cause to the secondary. Bentley.

3. Not of the first order or rate.

If the system had been fortuitously formed by the convening matter of a chaos, how is it conceivable that all the planets, both primary and secondary, should revolve the same way from the west to the east, and that in the same plane? Bentley.

4. Acting by transmission or depiction. That we were form'd then, say'st thou, and the work

Of secondary hands, by task transferr'd
From father to his son? Milton, P. L.
As in a watch's fine machine,
Though many artful springs are seen,

The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary power

From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

5. A secondary fever is that which arises after a crisis, or the discharge of some morbid matter, as after the declension of the small-pox or measles. Quincy.

SE'CONDARY. † n. s. [from the adjective.] A delegate; a deputy.

He wishes to take on board the eight secondaries, or minor canons, of his college.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 242.

It was tacitly understood, and was very proper in itself, that these secondaries [ushers of a school] were not to be greedy in engrossing the rarities, when strangers, which often happened, were at dinner. Wakefield, Mem. p. 47.

SE'CONDER.* n. s. [from second.] One who supports or maintains the proposition or assertion made by another.

I do not tell the respectable mover and seconder, by a perversion of their sense and expressions, that their proposition halts between the ridiculous and the dangerous.

Burke, Speech on the Durat. of Parliaments.

SE'CONDLY. adv. [from second.] In the second place.

First, she hath disobeyed the law; and, secondly, trespassed against her husband. Ecclus. xxiii. 23.

First, metals are more durable than plants; and, secondly, they are more solid and hard. Bacon.

The house of commons in Ireland, and, secondly, the privy council, addressed his majesty against these half-pence. Swift.

SE'CONDRATE. n. s. [second and rate.]

1. The second order in dignity or value. They call it thunder of the secondrate. Addison, Ovid.

2. It is sometimes used adjectively; of the second order. A colloquial licence.

He was not then a secondrate champion, as they would have him, who think fortitude the first virtue in a hero. Dryden.

SE'CRECY. n. s. [from secret.]

1. Privacy; state of being hidden; concealment.

That's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

In Nature's book of infinite secrecy,
A little can I read. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. Solitude; retirement; not exposure to view.

Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,
Best with thyself accompany'd, seek'st not Social communication. Milton, P. L.

There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetration of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and put out the great light within him, his conscience; he must get away from himself, and shake off the thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone. South, Sermon.

3. Forbearance of discovery.

It is not with publick as with private prayer; in this rather secrecy is commanded than outward shew; whereas that being the publick act of a whole society, requireth accordingly more care to be had of external appearance. Hooker.

4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity inviolate; close silence.

For secrecy no lady closer. Shakspeare.
Secrecy and fidelity were their only qualities. Burnet.

SE'CRET. adj. [secret, French; secretus, Latin.]

1. Kept hidden; not revealed; concealed. The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us. Deut. xxix. 29.

Be this or aught
Than this more secret now design'd, I haste
To know. Milton, P. L.

2. Retired; private; unseen. Thou open'st Wisdom's way,
And giv'st access, though secret she retire:

There secret in her sapphire cell
He with the Nais went to dwell. Fenton.

3. Faithful to a secret entrusted. Secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

4. Private; affording privacy. The secret top Of Oreb or of Sinai. Milton, P. L.

5. Occult; not apparent. Or sympathy, or some connatural force Powerful at greatest distance to unite
With secret amity things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Milton, P. L.
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet,
Milton, P. L.

6. Privy; obscene.

SE'CRET. n. s. [secret, French; secretum, Latin.]

1. Something studiously hidden. Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakspeare.

Boyle.

Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections.

Locke.

SECTOR. n. s. [secteur, French.] In geometry.

Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhumbs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematicks, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere. All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs.

Harris.

SECULAR.† adj. [seculaire, old French; seculier, modern; secularis, Latin.]

1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.

In pomp appears. Dryden.

Secure from fortune's blows,

Secure of what I cannot lose,
In my small pinnacle I can sail. Dryden, Hor.

6. It has sometimes of before the object in all its senses; but more properly from before evil, or the cause of evil.

To SECURE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.

Nothing left

That might his happy state secure,

Secure from outward force. Milton, P. L.

Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with as without them. Locke.

That prince who shall be so wise as by established laws of liberty to secure protection to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.

Deeper to wound, she shuns the fight;

She drops her arms to gain the field;

Secures her conquest by her flight.

And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.

Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate, by paying an ingenuous and laudable deference to his friend. Broom.

2. To protect; to make safe.

I spread a cloud before the victor's sight,

Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secure d his flight;

Ev'n then secure d him, when I sought with woe;

The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryden.

Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more entertaining, to secure the mind from weariness. Watts.

3. To insure.

SECURELY. adv. [from secure.]

1. Without fear; carelessly.

Love, that had now long time securely slept

In Venus' lap, unarm'd then and naked,

Gan rear his head, by Clotho being wak'd. Spenser.

'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,

A little proudly, and great deal misprizing

The knight oppos'd. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

His daring foe securely him defy'd. Milton, P. L.

A soul that can securely death defy,

And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden, Juv.

Whether any of the reasonings are inconsistent, I securely leave to the judgement of the reader. Aitburby.

2. Without danger; safely.

We upon our globe's last verge shall go,

And view the ocean leaning on the sky;

From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,

And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

SECUREMENT. n. s. [from secure.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.

They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a securément from it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SECURENESS.* n. s. [from secure.] Want of vigilance; carelessness.

Which omission was a strange neglect and secureness, to my understanding. Bacon, Lett. (ed. 1657), p. 20.

Alas, my son, nor fate, nor heaven itself,

Can or would wrest my whole care of your good

To any least secureness in your ill. Beaumont and Fl. Bloody Brother.

SECURER.* n. s. [from secure.] Whoever or whatever secures or protects.

Very excellent things are spoken of thee, O thou rich grace of God, the securer from sin, the deliverer from death. Dr. Clarke, Sermon. (1697), p. 471.

SECURITY. n. s. [securité, Fr. securitas, Lat. from secure.]

1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.

Marvellous security is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Hayward.

2. Vitious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.

How senseless then, and dead a soul hath he, Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;

Or thinks not so, but so would have it be, That he might sin with more security? Davies.

3. Protection; defence.

If the providence of God be taken away, what security have we against those innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed? Tillotson.

4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing; the act of giving caution, or being bound.

There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure, but security enough to make fellowships accurst. Shakespeare.

When they had taken security of Jason, they let them go. Acts, xvii. 9.

It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite; but it is impossible for a man who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable security that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.

Exchequer bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities. Swift, Examiner.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbuthnot on Coins.

5. Safety; certainty.

Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no security for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.

SEDA'N.* n. s. A kind of portable coach; a chair. I believe because first made at Sedan. Dr. Johnson.—Introduced into this country in the time of king Charles I.

The duke of Buckingham is said to have occasioned the introduction of them. In 1634 Sir Sanders Duncomb had the sole privilege allowed, for fourteen years, of letting these portable chairs.

Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick, Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,

And for their wives produce an empty chair. Dryden.

SEDA'TE. adj. [sedatus, Lat.] Calm;

quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed; serene.

With countenance calm and soul sedate,

Thus Turnus. Dryden, Æn.

Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is so necessary to contemplate truth. Watts.

SEDA'TELY. adv. [from sedate.] Calmly; without disturbance.

That has most weight with them that appears sedately to come from their parents' reason. Locke.

SEDA'TENESS. n. s. [from sedate.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

There is a particular sedateness in their conversation and behaviour that qualifies them for council, with a great intrepidity that fits them for action. Addison on the War.

SEDA'TION.* n. s. [from sedate.] Act of composing. Coles.

SEDA'TIVE.* adj. [sedatíf, Fr. Cotgrave.] Assuaging; composing.

SE'DENTARINESS.* n. s. [from sedentary.] The state of being sedentary; inactivity.

Those that live in great towns, together with the wealthier sort in the country, are inclined to sedateness, which may be imputed to their sedentariety, or want of motion; for they seldom stir abroad. L. Addison, West Barbury, (1671), p. 113.

SE'DENTARY. adj. [sedentaire, Fr. sedentario, Ital. sedentarius, from sedeo, Lat.]

1. Passed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.

A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of stirring the body, suffers the spirits to lie dormant.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life.

Arbutnot.

2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.

The sedentary earth,

That better might with far less compass move,

Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains

Her end without least motion. Milton, P. L.

Till length of years,

And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs

To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton, S. A.

The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its resolves, and languishing in its executions.

Addison, Spect.

SEDGE. n. s. [recz, Saxon; whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called a sag or seg.] A growth of narrow flags; a narrow flag.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides, Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;

But when his fair course is not hindered,

He makes sweet music with the enamell'd stones,

Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge

He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;

And so by many winding nooks he strays,

With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakespeare.

Adonis, painted by a running brook,

And Cytherea all in sedges hid;

Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,

Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Shaks.

In hotter countries a fly called lucciole, that shineth as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.

He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.

My bonds I brake,

Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,

Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Denham.

Niphates, with inverted urn,

And drooping sedge, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.

SE'DGED.* adj. [from sedge.] Composed of flags.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wand'ring brooks,

With your sedg'd crowns and ever harmless looks

Leave your crisp channels. Shakespeare, Tempest.

SE'DGY. adj. [from sedge.] Overgrown with narrow flags.

On the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,

In single opposition, hand to hand,

He did confound the best part of an hour,

In changing hardiment with great Glendower. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,

But fear'd the fate of Sinoe's would return:

Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgy bed,

And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

SEDIMENT. n. s. [sediment, Fr. sedimentum, Lat.] That which subsides or settles at the bottom.

The salt water rises into a kind of scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South, Serm.

That matter sunk not down till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest. Woodward.

SEDITION. n. s. [sedition, Fr. sedition, Latin.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.

That sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

In soothing them we nourish, 'gainst our senate,

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shakespeare, Coriol.

SEDITIONARY.* n. s. [from sedition.] An inciter to sedition; a promoter of insurrection.

Barabbas was a thief, murderer, seditionary. By. Hall, Sel. Thoughts, § 49.

A seditionary in a state, or a schismatick in the church, is like a sulphureous fiery vapour in the bowels of the earth, able to make that stable element reel again. By. Hall, Rem. p. 71.

The Jews preferred Barabbas, a thief, a murderer, a seditionary, infamous for all, odious to all, before Christ that came to save them. Juntus, Sin Stigm. p. 765.

SEDITIOUS. adj. [seditieux, Fr. seditiosus, Lat.] Factions with tumult; turbulent.

The cause why I have brought this army hither,

Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,

Seditious to his grace and to the state. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at that time, did not appear yet in this sedition behaviour. Clarendon.

Thou return'st

But if she has deform'd this earthly life

With murd'rous rapine and seditions strife,

In everlasting darkness must she lie;

Still more unhappy that she cannot die. Prior.

SEDITIOUSLY.† adv. [from seditions.] Tumultuously; with factious turbulence.

Beware of such sectaries as (under their many both godly and godly pretences) do thus seditionously endeavour to disturb the land. By. Bancroft, Dang. Post. B. 4. ch. 15.

SEDITIOUSNESS. n. s. [from seditions.] Turbulence; disposition to sedition.

To SEDUCE. v. a. [seduco, Lat. seduire, Fr.] To draw aside from the right; to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

'Tis meet

That noble minds keep ever with their likes;

For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd?

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Me the gold of France did not seduce,

Although I did admit it as a motive,

The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

A beauty-wining and distressed widow,

Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts

To base declension. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Tim. iv. 1.

I shall never gratify the spitefulness of a few with any sinister thoughts of all their allegiance, whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.

Subtle he needs must be, who could seduce Angels. Milton, P. L.

Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,

By arrogating Jonson's hostile name;

Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,

SEDUCEMENT. n. s. [from seduce.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.

To season them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, ere any flattering seducement or vain promise seize them wandering, some easy and delightful book of education should be read to them. Milton on Education.

Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying power,

The nymph's seducements, and the magic bow. Pope.

SEDUCER. n. s. [from seduce.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter; a corrupter.

Grant it me, O king; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone. Shakespeare.

There is a teaching by restraining seducers, and so removing the hindrances of knowledge. South.

The soft seducer, with enticing looks,

The bellowing rivals to the fight provokes. Dryden.

He whose firm faith no reason could remove,

Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.

SEDUCIBLE. adj. [from seduce.] Corruptible; capable of being drawn aside from the right.

The vicious example of ages past poisons the curiosity of the present, affording a hint of sin unto seducible spirits. Brown.

We owe much of our error to the power which our affections have over our so easy seducible understandings. Glanville.

SEDUCTION. n. s. [seduction, Fr. seductus, Lat.] The act of seducing; the act of drawing aside.

Whatever men's faith, patience, or perseverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this sin, the seduction of Balaam, were sure to bring judgments. Hammond.

To procure the miseries of others in those extremities, wherein we hold an hope to have no society ourselves, is a strain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary seduction of hell. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The deceiver soon found out this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him from this way of seduction. Glanville, Scepis.

Helen ascribes her seduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.

A woman who is above flattery, and despises all praise, but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is, morally speaking, out of reach of seduction. Richardson, Clarissa.

SEDUCTIVE.* adj. [from seduction.] Apt to seduce; apt to mislead. Sheridan.

You ask me if I know such a word as seductive. It is used perpetually in conversation, and I feel a consciousness of having met it often in elegant writing. Seward, Lett. ii. 154.

SEDULITY. n. s. [sedulitas, Lat.] Diligent assiduity; laboriousness; industry; application; intenseness of endeavour.

Man oftentimes pursues, with great sedulity and earnestness, that which cannot stand him in any stead for vital purpose. Hooker.

Let there be but the same propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry in men's enquiries into it. South.

SEDULOUS. adj. [sedulus, Lat.] Assiduous; industrious; laborious; diligent; painful.

Not sedulous by nature to indite

What signifies the sound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to such an end? L'Estrange.

The goat, now bright amidst her fellow stars,

Kind Almalthea reach'd her teat, distant

With milk, thy early food: the sedulous bee

Distill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.

The bare majority of a few representatives is often procured by great industry and application, wherein those who engage in the pursuits of malice are much more sedulous than such as would prevent them. Swift.

SEDULOUSLY. adv. [from sedulous.] Assiduously; industriously; laboriously; diligently; painfully.

The ritual, preceptive, prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Gov. of the Tongue.
All things by experience
Are most improv'd; then sedulously think
To meliorate thy stock, no way or rule

SEDULOUSNESS.† n. s. [from sedulous.]
Assiduity; assiduousness; industry;
diligence.

By their sedulousness and their erudition they discovered difficulties.

Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 99.

SEE.† n. s. [sedes, Lat.] The seat of episcopal power; the diocese of a bishop: formerly, the seat of power in a general sense.

Jove laugh'd on Venus from his sov'rainy see.
Spenser, F. Q.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
It is a safe opinion for their sees, empires, and kingdoms; and for themselves, if they be wise.

Bacon.
The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see.
Addison.

Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

To SEE.† v. a. preter. I saw; part. pass. seen. [jeon, Saxon; siēn, Dutch; see, Su. Goth.]

1. To perceive by the eye.

Dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it. Is. xli. 8.
I speak that which I have seen with my Father, and ye do that which I have seen with yours.
St. John, viii. 38.

He'll lead the life of gods, and be
By gods and heroes seen, and gods and heroes see.
Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good for you; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

I see her sober over a sampler. Pope.

2. To observe; to find.

Seven other kine came up, lean fleshed, such as I never saw for badness. Gen. xli. 19.
Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy.

Milton, P. L.
Give them first one simple idea, and see that they perfectly comprehend it, before you go any farther. Locke.

The thunderbolt we see used by the greatest poet of Augustus's age, to express irresistible force in battle. Addison.

3. To discover; to descry.

Who is so gross
As cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold but says he sees it not,
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought?
Shakspeare.

4. To converse with.

The main of them may be reduced to language, and to an improvement in wisdom and prudence by seeing men, and conversing with people of different tempers and customs. Locke.

5. To attend; to remark.

I had a mind to see him out, and therefore did not care for contradicting him. Addison, Freeholder.

To SEE. v. n.

1. To have the power of sight; to have by the eye perception of things distant.
Who maketh the seeing or the blind? have not I the Lord? Ex. iv. 11.

Air hath some secret degree of light; otherwise cats and owls could not see in the night. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To discern without deception.

Many sagacious persons will find us out, will look under our mask, and see through all our fine pretensions, and discern the absurdity of telling the world that we believe one thing when we do the contrary. Tillotson.

Could you see into my secret soul,
There you might read your own dominion doubled. Dryden.

You may see into the spirit of them all, and form your pen from those general notions. Felton.

3. To inquire; to distinguish.

See whether fear doth make thee wrong her. Shakspeare.

4. To be attentive.

Mark and perform it, see'st thou; for the fail
Of any point in't shall be death. Shakspeare.

5. To scheme; to contrive.

Cassio's a proper man: let me see now;
To see his place. Shakspeare, Othello.

To SEE to.* To behold; to look at.

A great altar to see to. Josh. xxii. 10.

A certain shepherd lad,
Of small regard to see to. Milton, Comus.

SEE. interjection. [Originally the imperative of the verb see.] Lo; look; observe; behold.

See, see! upon the banks of Boyne he stands,
By his own view adjusting his commands. Halifax.

See! the sole bliss Heav'n could on all bestow,
Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know? Pope.

See what it is to have a poet in your house. Pope.

SEED. n. s. [ræbe, Saxon; seed, Danish; sæd, Dutch.]

1. The organised particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.

If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Seed of a year old is the best, though some seed and grains last better than others. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That every plant has its seed is an evident sign of Divine Providence. More.

Did they ever see any herbs, except those of the grass-legend tribe, come up without two seed leaves; which to me is an argument that they came all of seed, there being no reason else why they should produce two seed leaves different from the subsequent. Ray.

Just gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine arises from her mother's juice:

When feeble plants or tender flowers decay,
They to their seed their images convey. Prior.

In the south part of Staffordshire they go to the north for seed corn. Mortimer.

2. First principle; original.

The seed of whatsoever perfect virtue groweth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine. Hooker.

3. Principle of production.

Praise of great acts he scatters as a seed,
Which may the like in coming ages breed. Waller.

4. Progeny; offspring; descendants.

Next him king Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no issue male him to succeed,
But three fair daughters, which were well up-train'd
In all that seemed fit for kingly seed. Spenser, F. Q.

The thing doth touch
The main of all your states, your blood, your seed. Daniel.

When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his seed into the grant too. Locke.

5. Race; generation; birth.

Of mortal seed they were not held,
Which other mortals so excell'd;
And beauty too in such excess,
As yours, Zelinda! claims no less. Waller.

To SEED.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow to perfect maturity so as to shed the seed.

What'er I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seeds and runs up to poetry. Swift.

2. To shed the seed.

It hath already flour'd, so that I feare it will shortly seed. Lyte, Herbal. (1578.)

They pick up all the old roots, except what they design for seed, which they let stand to see the next year. Mortimer.

Carry into the shade such seedlings or plants as are for their choiceness reserved in pots. Evelyn, Kalendar.

SEEDLING.† n. s. [ræb-læp, Saxon.] A vessel in which the sower carries his seed. Ainsworth.

SEEDPEARL. n. s. [seed and pearl.] Small grains of pearl.

In the dissolution of seedpearl in some acid menstruum, if a good quantity of the little pearls be cast in whole, they will be carried in swarms from the bottom to the top. Boyle.

SEEDPLOT. n. s. [seed and plot.] The ground on which plants are sowed to be afterwards transplanted.

To counsel others, a man must be furnished with an universal store in himself to the knowledge of all nature: that is, the matter and seedplot; there are the seats of all argument and invention. B. Jonson.

Humility is a seedplot of virtue, especially Christian, which thrives best when 'tis deep-rooted in the humble lowly heart. Hammond.

It will not be unuseful to present a full narration of this rebellion, looking back to those passages by which the seedplots were made and framed, from whence those mischiefs have successively grown. Clarendon.

SEEDTIME.† n. s. [seed and time; Saxon, ræb-tima.] The season of sowing.

While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest shall not cease. Gen. viii. 22.

If he would have two tributes in one year, he must give them two seedtimes, and two harvests.

Bacon.

The first rain fell upon the seedtime about October, and was to make the seed to root; the latter was to fill the ear.

Brown.

Day and night,
Seedtime and harvest, heat and hoary frost,
Shall hold their course, till fire purge all things.

Milton, P. L.

Their very seedtime was their harvest, and by sowing tares they immediately reaped gold.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

He that too curiously observes the face of the heavens, by missing his seedtime, will lose the hopes of his harvest.

Aiturbury.

SEEDNESS. n. s. [from seed.] Seedtime; the time of sowing.

Blossoming time

From the seedness the bare fallow brings

To teeming foison. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

SEEDSMAN. n. s. [seed and man.]

1. The sower; he that scatters the seed.

The higher Nilus swells

The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. One that sells seeds.

SEEDY. adj. [from seed.] Abounding with seed.

SEEING. n. s. [from see.] Sight; vision.

Love adds a precious seeing to the eye. Shakespeare.

SEEING. } adv. [vû que, French; from

SEEING that.] see. It would be more grammatically written, as vû que, pourvû que, in French; seen that, or provided that. Since; sith; it being so that.

Why should not they be as well victualled for so long time, as the ships are usually for a year, seeing it is easier to keep victuals on land than water?

Spenser on Ireland.

How shall they have any trial of his doctrine, learning, and ability to preach, seeing that he may not publicly either teach or exhort, because he is not yet called to the ministry?

Seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are taught the languages of those people who have been most industrious after wisdom.

Milton on Education.

Seeing they explained the phenomena of vision, imagination, and thought, by certain thin fleeces of atoms that flow from the surfaces of bodies, and by their subtlety penetrate any obstacle, and yet retain the exact lineaments of the several bodies from which they proceed: in consequence of this hypothesis they maintained, that we could have no pantasy of any thing, but what did really subsist either intire or in its several parts.

Bentley, Serm.

TO SEEK.† v. a. pret. I sought; part. pass. sought. [ecan, Saxon; soecken, Dutch; soekia, Icel. sokja, M. Goth.]

1. To look for; to search for: often with out.

He did range the town to seek me out. Shakespeare.

I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shakespeare.

Because of the money returned in our sacks, are we brought in, that he may seek occasion against us, and take us for bondmen. Gen. xliii. 18.

He seeketh unto him a cunning workman, to prepare a graven image. Is. xl. 20.

Seek thee a man which may go with thee. Tob. v. 3.

Sweet peace, where dost thou dwell?

I humbly crave,

Let me once know;

I sought thee in a secret cave,

And ask'd if peace were there,

VOL. III.

Herbert.

The king meant not to seek out nor to decline fighting with them, if they put themselves in his way. Clarendon.

So fatal 'twas to seek temptations out! Most confidence has still most cause to doubt.

Dryden.

We must seek out some other original of power for the government of politics than this of Adam, or else there will be none at all in the world.

Locke.

2. To solicit; to endeavour to gain.

Others tempting him, sought of him a sign.

St. Luke, xi. 16.

The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God. Ps. civ. 21.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares, And not molest us, unless we ourselves

Seek them with wandering thoughts. Milton, P. L.

Of our alliance other lands desir'd,

And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.

3. To go to find.

Let us seek death, or, he not found, supply His office. Milton, P. L.

Dardanus, though born

On Latian plains, yet sought the Phrygian shore.

Dryden.

Like fury seiz'd the rest; the progress known,

All seek the mountains, and forsake the town.

Dryden.

Since great Ulysses sought the Phrygian plains,

Within these walls inglorious silence reigns. Pope.

Indulge one labour more,

And seek Atrides on the Spartan shore. Pope.

4. To pursue by machinations.

I had a son,

Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life.

Shakespeare.

David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life.

1 Sam. xxiii.

TO SEEK. v. n.

1. To make search; to make enquiry.

Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read.

Is. xxiv.

I have been forced to relinquish that opinion, and have endeavour'd to seek after some better reason.

Addison, Spect.

2. To endeavour.

Why should he mean me ill, or seek to harm?

Milton, P. L.

Ask not what pains, nor further seek to know

Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden.

3. To make pursuit.

Violent men have sought after my soul.

Ps. lxxvi. 14.

If thy brother's ox or sheep go astray, it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it.

Deut. xxii. 2.

4. To apply to; to use solicitation.

All the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom.

1 Kings.

Unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come. Deut. xii. 5.

5. To endeavour after.

Being a man of experience, he wished by wisdom to order that which the young prince sought for by war. Knolles.

TO SEEK. [An adverbial mode of speech.]

At a loss; without measures, knowledge, or experience.

Being brought and transferred from other services abroad, though they be of good experience in those, yet in these they will be new to seek; and before they have gathered experience, they shall buy it with great loss to his majesty. Spenser.

Unpractic'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek.

Milton, P. L.

But they misplace them all;

And are as much to seek in other things,

As he that only can design a tree,

Would be to draw a shipwreck. Roscommon.

SEEKER.† n. s. [from seek.]

1. One that seeks; an enquirer.

Though I confess that in philosophy I'm a seeker, yet cannot believe that a sceptick in philosophy must be one in divinity. Glanville.

A language of a very witty volatile people, seekers after novelty, and abounding with a variety of notions. Locke.

Cato is represented to be a seeker to oracles.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 54.

2. The name of a sect which professed no determinate religion.

One is a ranter, another is a seeker, a third is a shaker!

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 161.

The seekers deny that there is any true church, or any true minister, or any ordinance.

Pagitt, Heresiograph. p. 128.

A sceptick [is] ever seeking, and never finds; like our new upstart sect of seekers.

Bullock, Expos. (ed. 1656.)

Sir Henry Vane—set up a form of religion in a way of his own; yet it consisted rather in a withdrawing from all other forms, than in any new or particular opinions or forms; from which he and his party were called seekers.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times, in 1661.

SEEKSORROW. n. s. [seek and sorrow.]

One who contrives to give himself vexation.

Afield they go, where many lookers be,

And thou seeksorrow, Klaius, them among:

Indeed thou saidst it was thy friend to see,

Strepthon, whose absence seem'd unto thee long.

Sidney.

TO SEEL.† v. a. [siller les yeux, "to seel or sew up the eyelids; and hence also to hoodwink, blind, keep in darkness;

&c."] Cotgrave. To close the eyes.

A term of falconry, the eyes of a wild or haggard hawk being for a time seeled or closed.

Now she brought them to see a seeled dove, who the blinder she was, the higher she strave. Sidney.

Mine eyes no more on vanity shall feed,

But seeled up with death shall have their deadly meed. Spenser, F. R.

Come, seeling night,

Scarf up the tender eye of painful day.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To seel her father's eyes up, close as oak.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy; for no man will take such parts, unless he be like the seeled dove, that mounts and mounts, because he cannot see about him. Bacon.

Since, blinded with ambition, he did soar,

Like a seel'd dove, his crimes shall be his punishment,

To be depriv'd of sight. Denham, Sophy.

TO SEEL. v. n. [ryllan, Sax.] To lean on one side.

When a ship seels or rolls in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Raleigh.

SEEL or SEELING.† n. s. [from To seel.]

The agitation of a ship in foul weather.

Ainsworth.

At His command black tempests rise;

Then mount they to the troubled skies:

Thence sinking to the depths below,

The ship hulls as the billows flow:

And all aboard, at every seel,

Like drunkards on the hatches reele.

Sandys, Ps. (ed. 1696,) p. 181.

SEEL.* n. s. [xæl, Sax. opportunities.] Season; time.

It is a fair seel for you to come at, i. e. a fair season for time: spoken ironically to them that come late. What seel of day? i. e. what time of day? Essex. Ray, and Grose.

Hay-seel, hay-time; barley-seel, wheat-seel, bark-seel. Norfolk. Grose.

SEELY. † adj. [ælj, Sax. happy, prosperous; from æl, lucky time. See SEEL. Mr. Mason has thought proper to pronounce "Dr. Johnson not very lucky himself in exemplifying either of the senses which he gives," and, after this attempt to be witty, passes over the first meaning as worthy no other notice, alleging that "the word seems to have sometimes had the latter; but more usually that of harmless;" and, in his Appendix, he has added, that, "applied to materials, it seems to have meant plain, rude." The word, however, in the example given by Dr. Johnson from Spenser, certainly means happy. This is the ancient sense, as the Saxon word shews. So in the Prompt. Parv. "Sely, or happy; fortunatus." So Chaucer: "Worldly seliness, which clerkis callen false felicitie." Tr. and Cress. iii. 815. And he uses unselly for unhappy. As to Mr. Mason's meaning of harmless, that is surely contained in Dr. Johnson's simple; and as to seely, applied to "a trough of wood," which he gives, and explains by rude, it is at least dubious, certainly quaint, and not allowable.]

1. Lucky; happy.

My seely sheep like well below,
For they been hale enough, I trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. Silly; foolish; simple; inoffensive.

If thee lust to holden chat
With seely shepherd's swayne,
Come downe, and learne the litle what
That Thomalin can sayne. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

These, so wretchedly abused, resemble the butterfly, which flieeth into the candle, and burneth himself; and those simple seely birds, which fly into the fire, thinking they are in the warm sun.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza, p. 277.

Peacock and turkie, that nibbles off top,
Are very ill neighbours to see's poor fop. Tassur.

TO SEEM. † v. n. [sembler, Fr. unless it has a Teutonic original, as seemly certainly has. Dr. Johnson.—Possibly from the Icel. saeman, to become; zeimen, Germ. the same. See Wachter and Serenius. The latter considers the Su. Goth. sam, 'com, together, as the root. See SEEMLY.]

1. To appear; to make a show; to have semblance.

My lord, you've lost a friend, indeed;
And I dare swear, you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow; it is sure your own.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Speak: we will not trust our eyes
Without our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st.

Shakespeare.

So spake the Omnipotent; and with his words
All seem'd a well pleas'd; all seem'd, but were not all. Milton, P. L.

In holy nuptials ty'd;
A seeming widow, and a secret bride. Dryden.

Observe the youth
Already seems to snuff the vital air. Dryden.

2. To have the appearance of truth.

It seems to me, that the true reason why we have so few versions which are tolerable, is because there are so few who have all the talents requisite for translation. Dryden.

3. In Shakspeare, to seem, perhaps, signifies to be beautiful. Dr. Johnson.—Rather, specious. Steevens.

Sir, she stands:

If aught within that little seeming substance

May fitly like your grace,

She's there, and she is your's. Shaks, K. Lear.

Pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page. Shaks, M. W. of Wind.

4. It SEEMS. A phrase hard to be explained. It sometimes signifies that there is an appearance, though no reality; but generally it is used ironically to condemn the thing mentioned, like the Latin scilicet, or the old English forsooth. Id mihi datur negotii scilicet. This, it seems, is to be my task.

The earth by these, 'tis said,

This single crop of men and women bred;
Who, grown adult, so chance it seems, enjoin'd,
Did male and female propagate.

Blackmore, Creation.

5. It is sometimes a slight affirmation.

A prince of Italy, it seems, entertained his mistress upon a great lake. Addison, Guardian.

The raven, urg'd by such impertinence,
Grew passionate, it seems, and took offence.

Addison.

He had been a chief magistrate, and had, it seems, executed that high office justly and honourably. Atterbury.

It seems that when first I was discovered sleeping on the ground, the emperor had early notice.

Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

6. It appears to be.

Here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
Roderigo meant to have sent. Shaks, Othello.

It seems the camel's hair is taken by painters for the skin with the hair on. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO SEEM.* v. a. To become; to be seem.

This appears to confirm the etymology from the Icel. saeman, which I have offered under the neuter verb.

[She] did far surpass

The best in honest mirth that seem'd her well.

Spenser.

SEEMER. n. s. [from seem.] One that carries an appearance.

Angelo scarce confesses

That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If pow'r change purpose, what our seemers be.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

SEEMING. n. s. [from seem.]

1. Appearance; show; semblance.

All good seeming,

By thy revolt, oh husband, shall be thought

Put on for villany. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Give him heedful note;

And, after, we will both our judgements join
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. Fair appearance.

For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and savour all the winter long. Shaks.

3. Opinion.

Nothing more clear unto their seeming, than that a new Jerusalem, being often spoken of in Scripture, they undoubtedly were themselves that new Jerusalem. Hooker.

His persuasive words impregn'd
With reason for his seeming. Milton, P. L.

SEEMINGLY. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show; in semblance.

To this her mother's plot,

She seemingly obedient, likewise hath

Made promise to the doctor.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

They to their viands fell, not seemingly
The angels, nor in mist. Milton, P. L.

I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Glanville, Seeps.

The city dame was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part. L'Estrange.

The king and haughty empress, to our wonder,
If not ston'd, yet seemingly at peace. Dryden.

This the father seemingly complied with; but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise set aside.

Addison, Frecholder.

They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury.

SEEMINGNESS.† n. s. [from seeming.]

1. Plausibility; fair appearance.

The seemingness of those reasons persuades us on the other side. Digby.

2. Simply, appearance.

Hypocrisy will obstruct, and put in a prejudice against all things, under the seemingness appearance of evil, which are not only allowed of God, but necessary. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 91.

SEE'MLESS.* adj. [seem and less.] Unseemly; indecorous.

Thence he her drew
By the faire lockes, and fowly did array
Withouten pity of her goodly hew,
That Artegall himselfe her seemlesse plight did rew.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 25.

Here I vow

Never to dream of seemless amorous toys.
B. Jonson, Case is altered.

SEE'MLILY.* adv. [from seemly.] Decently; comely.

Huloet, and Sherwood.

SEE'MLINESS. n. s. [from seemly.] Decency; handsomeness; comeliness; grace; beauty.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, seemliness with portliness, and currentness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than full of sweetness? Camden.

SEE'MLY. adj. [soommelig, Dan. from soome, Icelandic, honour or decency.]

Decent; becoming; proper; fit.

Suspense of judgment and exercise of charity were safer and seemlier for Christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hooker.

I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The wife safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.

May we enjoy

Our humid products, and with seemly draughts
Enkindle mirth and hospitable love. Philips.

SEE'MLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a decent manner; in a proper manner.

There, seemly rang'd in peaceful order, stood
Ulysses' arms, now long disus'd to blood.

SEE'MLYED.* n. s. [from seemly.] Decent, comely appearance.

Damoselles two

Right yong, and ful of seemlyhed.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 777.

Yet nathe'more his meaning she ared,
But wondered much at his so selcouth case;
And by his person's secret seemlyhed
Well weend, that he had bene some man of place
Before misfortune did his hew deface.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 14.

SEEN. adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.

Petruchio shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster

Well seen in musick. Shakespeare.

Noble Boyle, not less in nature seen,
Than his great brother read in states and men.

Dryden.

SEER.† n. s. [from see; Sax. reepepe.]

1. One who seers.

We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Addison, Spect.

2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!

Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton, P. L.

By day your frighted seers

Shall call for fountains to express their tears,
And wish their eyes were floods: by night from dreams

Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,

Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show
Emblems of heav'nly wrath and mystick types of woe. Prior.

SEER.* adj. [seer, Su. Goth. an adverb signifying separation. Ihre.] Several. They are gone seer ways.

Ray, North Country Words, and Grosse.

SEERWOOD.* n. s. See SEAR and SERE. Ray considers the adjective sear as spoken only of wood, or the parts of plants.

SEESAW. n. s. [from saw.] A reciprocating motion.

His wit all seesaw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope.

To SEESAW. v. n. [from saw.] To move with a reciprocating motion.

Sometimes they were like to pull John over,
then it went all of a sudden again on John's side;
so they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Arbutnot.

To SEETHE.* v. a. preterite I sod or seethed; part. pass. sotten. [seothan, Saxon; zieden, Dutch; seiden, German; εἶναι and ζειν, Greek. Wachter.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor.

He coude roste, and sethe.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

The Scythians used to seethe the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish. Spenser.

Go, suck the subtle blood o' th' grape,
Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging. Shakespeare, Timon.
Set on the great pot, and seethe the pottage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings, iv.

To SEETHE. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.

The boiling baths at Cairbadon,
Which seethe with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames, which they are warm'd upon. Spenser, F. Q.

I will make a complimentary assault upon him;
for my business seethes. Shaks. Tr. and Cress.
Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shaks.

The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook, and stuck it into the pan. 1 Sam. ii. 13.

SEETHER. n. s. [from seethe.] A boiler; a pot.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone. Dryden.

SEG.* n. s. [recz, Saxon.] Sedge. Still used in part of Yorkshire, and in Gloucestershire. It is also in the old Prompt. Parvulorum.

A place where segges do grow.

Bartlet, Alv. (1580.)

SEG.* n. s. [perhaps from the Lat. seco. Dr. Jamieson.] A castrated bull. Common in the north of England.

SEGAR.* n. s. [cigarro, Span.] A little roll of tobacco, which the Spaniards smoke without a pipe. Swinburne.

Our hostess supplied us with plenty of fruit, and then obligingly smoked a segar with me.

Troass, Trav. through Spain, (1773.)

SEGMENT. n. s. [segment, Fr. segmentum, Lat.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.

Unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles for half a year, some segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round. Brown.

Their segments or arcs, which appeared so numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.

SEIGNITY.* n. s. [seignitas, Lat.] Sluggishness; inactivity.

Dict.

To SEGREGATE.* v. a. [segrego, Lat. segreger, Fr.] To set apart; to separate from others. Sherwood.

Nor does the black dissipate or segregate those purer atoms. Transl. of Loredano, (1664,) p. 5.
Segregating heterogeneous bodies, and congregating those that are homogeneous.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 190.

SEGREGATE.* part. adj. Select.

A kind of segregate or cabinet senate.

Wotton, Rem. p. 240.

SEGREGATION.* n. s. [segregation, Fr. from segregate.] Separation from others.

What shall we hear of this?

— A segregation of the Turkish fleet;
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakespeare, Othello.

To decline offences, to be careful and conscientious in our several actions, is a purity that every man ought to labour for; which we may well do, without a sullen segregation from all society. Feltham, Res. i. 5.

SEJANT. adj. [In heraldry.] Sitting.

SEIGNEURIAL.* adj. [from seigneur.] Invested with large powers; independent.

Those lands were seigneurial. Temple.

They were the statesmen, they were the lawyers; from them were often taken the bailiffs of the seigneurial courts. Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. B. 3. ch. 6.

SEIGNIOR.* n. s. [from senior, Lat. seigneur, Fr. signore, Ital.] A lord. The title of honour given by Italians. See SIGNIOR.

SEIGNIORY. n. s. [seigneurie, Fr. from seigneur.] A lordship; a territory.

O'Neal never had any seigniorie over that country, but what by encroachment he got upon the English. Spenser on Ireland.

Were you not restor'd

To all the duke of Norfolk's seigniories? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Hosea, in the person of God, sayeth of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; they have set a seigniorie over themselves: which place proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not allow. Bacon.

William, earl of Pembroke, being lord of all Leinster, had royal jurisdiction throughout that province, and every one of his five sons enjoyed that seigniorie successively. Davies.

SEIGNORAGE. n. s. [seignuriage, Fr. from seigneur.] Authority; acknowledgement of power.

They brought work to the mint, and a part of the money coined to the crown, for seignorage. Locke.

To SEIGNORIZE.* v. a. [from seignior; Fr. seigneurier.] To lord over.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

As fair he was as Cytherea's make,
As proud as he that seignioriseth hell. Fairfax.

SEINE. n. s. [rejne, Saxon; seine, senne, seme, Fr.] A net used in fishing. See SEAN.

They have cock-boats for passengers, and seine boats for taking of pilchards. Carew.

SEINER. n. s. [from seine.] A fisher with nets.

Seiners complain with open mouth, that these drovers work much prejudice to the commonwealth of fishermen, and reap small gain to themselves. Carew.

To SEJO'IN.* v. a. [sejingo, Lat.] To separate. This is also a Scottish word.

There is a season when God, and nature, sejoins man and wife in this respect.

Whately's Bride-Bush, or Wed. Sermon. (1617,) p. 44.

SEJUNGBLE.* adj. [from sejingo, Lat.] Capable of being separated.

The spawn and egg are sejungible from the fish and fowl, and yet still retain the prolific power of generation. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

SEJUNCTION.* n. s. [sejunctio, Lat.] The act of disjoining, or separating.

The constitution of that people was made by a sejunction and separation of them from all other nations on the earth. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

SEIZABLE.* adj. [from seize.] That may be seized; liable to be seized.

To SEIZE.* v. a. [saisir, Fr. seisia, Arn. the same. Serenius.]

1. To take hold of; to gripe; to grasp.
Then as a tiger who by chance hath spy'd
In some purlieu two gentle fawns at play,
Straight couches close, then rising, changes oft
His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground, Whence rushing he might surest seize them both. Milton, P. L.

2. To take possession of by force.
At last they seize
The sceptre, and regard not David's sons. Milton, P. L.

3. To take possession of; to lay hold on; to invade suddenly.
In her sad breast the prince's fortunes roll,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.

4. To take forcible possession of by law.
An escheator of London had arrested a clothier that was outlawed, and seized his goods. Camden.
It was judged by the highest kind of judgment, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.

5. To make possessed; to put in possession of.

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:
As when a griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encountereth in his flight,
Through wildest air making his idle way. Spenser, F. Q.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom the affrighted maid,
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison, Cato.

6. To fasten; to fix; with on. Dr. Johnson had assigned the examples from Shakspeare, and the Decay of Christian Piety, to a verb neuter.

So down he fell before the cruel beast,
Who on his neck his bloody claws did seize;
That life his crush'd out of his panting breast. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 15.

Fairest Cordelia,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon :
Be't lawful I take up what's cast away ?

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Where there is a design of supplanting, that necessarily requires another of accusing: even Jezebel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge. Dec. of Ch. Piety.

SE'IZE.* n. s. [from seize.] One who seizes.

SE'IZIN. n. s. [saisine, Fr.]

1. [In law.] Is of two sorts: seisin, in fact, and seisin in law.

Seisin in fact, is when a corporal possession is taken: seisin in law, is when something is done which the law accounteth a seisin, as an inrolment. This is as much as a right to lands and tenements, though the owner be by wrong disseized of them. Cowel.

2. The act of taking possession.

Every indulged sin gives Satan livery and seisin of his heart, and a power to dispose of it as he pleases. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Seisin is the same in the canon law as livery and seisin at the common law. Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. The things possessed.

Many recoveries were had, as well by heirs as successors, of the seizin of their predecessors. Hale.

SE'IZURE. n. s. [from seize.]

1. The act of seizing.

2. The thing seized.

Sufficient that thy prayers are heard, and death, Then due by sentence when thou didst transgress, Deceased of his seizure, many days Given thee of grace. Milton, P. L.

3. The act of taking forcible possession.

Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine,

Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands. Shaks.
In the general town he maintained a seizure, and possession of the whole. Watson.

Henry continued to burn protestants, after he had cast off the pope; and his seizure of ecclesiastical revenues cannot be reckoned as a mark of the church's liberty. Swift.

4. Gripe; possession.

And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood, Unyoke this seizure and this kind regret ? Shaks.
Make o'er thy honour by a deed of trust, And give me seizure of the mighty wealth. Dryden.

5. Catch.

Let there be no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it. Watts.

SEKE.* adj. [reoc, Sax.] Sick. Chaucer. See Sick.

SE'LCOUTH.* adj. [rele, rare, Sax. and couth, known.] Rarely known; uncommon.

Yet nathemore his meaning she ared,
But wondred much at his so selcouth case. Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 14.

SELDOM.* adv. [selban, rarely; selbom, more rarely; selbort, most rarely. Selban is supposed to be contracted from selbæn, or rele, rare, and hæanne, when, Saxon; selden, Dutch; selten, German. Dr. Johnson. — Lye considers this term as existing in the M. Goth. sildaleikjan, to admire, to wonder at; which Serenius highly approves. Anciently our word was seld, and selden.] Rarely; not often; not frequently.

Wisdom and youth are seldom joined in one; and the ordinary course of the world is more according to Job's observation, who giveth men advice to seek wisdom amongst the ancients, and in the length of days understanding. Hooker.

There is true joy conveyed to the heart by preventing grace, which pardoning grace seldom gives. South, Sermon.

Where the flight of fancy is managed with good judgment, the seldomer it is seen it is the more valuable. Grew.

SE'LDOM.* adj. [selten, Dutch and German. Mr. Horne Tooke notices the foreign adjective, but knew not that his own language possessed it. See Div. of Purl. ii. 516. Nor indeed have our dictionaries noticed it. It is, however, well authorized.] Rare; not frequent.

The seldom discharge of a higher and more noble office. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1. ch. 4.

By prayer is not meant a formal customary attendance upon the offices of the church, undertook only out of a sordid fear of the eye of man, and then performed with weariness and irreverence, with seldom access, and more seldom devotion. South, Sermon. ix. 151.

His sickness in the later years of his life gave him but short and seldom truce. Fell, Life of Hammond.

SE'LDOMNESS.† n. s. [from seldom.] Uncommonness; infrequency; rareness; rarity. Little used.

Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except perhaps in the seldomness and oftteness of doing well. Hooker.

The strength of delight is in its seldomness or rarity. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 1.

SE'LDOWN.* adj. [seld and shown.] Seldom exhibited to view.

Seldshown flames
Do press among the popular throngs. Shakespeare, Coriol.

TO SE'LECT. v. a. [selectus, Lat.] To choose in preference to others rejected.

The footmen, selected out of all the provinces, were greatly diminished, being now scarce eight thousand strong. Knolles.

The pious chief

SE'LECT.* adj. [from the verb.] Nicely chosen; choice; culled out on account of superiour excellence.

To the nuptial bow'r
I led her, blushing like the morn : all heaven, And happy constellations, on that hour Shed their selectest influence. Milton, P. L.

Select from vulgar herds, with garlands gay,
A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way. Prior.

SE'LECTEDLY.* adv. [from selected.] With care in selection.

Prime workmen of the kingdom, selectedly employed in this service.

Heywood's Descr. K.'s Ship at Woolw. (1637), p. 48.

SE'LECTION. n. s. [selectio, Latin, from select.] The act of culling or chusing; choice.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems but arbitrary. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SE'LECTNESS. n. s. [from select.] The state of being select.

SE'LECTOR. n. s. [from select.] One who selects.

SE'LENITE.* n. s. [selenite, Fr. selenites, SELENITES.] Lat. from σεληνη, Gr. the moon.] A variety of crystallized sulphate of lime, having a silky lustre. Journ. of Science, No. 20. p. 287.

Your mentioning of a selenites that has the shape and appearance of a diamond, puts me in mind of what both you and Mr. Lhwyd have told me; that you have met with a sort of an opaque selenite among the stones I sent from hence.

Ep. Nichol. to Dr. Woodw. (1697), Ep. Corr. i. 84.
SELENITICK.* adj. [from selenite.] Pertaining to selenites.

Nature furnishes us with a very large quantity of selenitic matters: chemists agree that all gypsums or plaster stones, alabasters, and gypseous spars, are nothing else but selenites; and these substances abound within and upon the earth. Chambers.

SELENOGRA'PHICAL. } adj. [selenogra- SELENOGRA'PHICK. } phique, Fr. from selenography.] Belonging to selenography.

SELENOGRAPHY. n. s. [selenographie, Fr. σεληνη and γραφω.] A description of the moon.

Hevelius, in his accurate selenography, or description of the moon, hath well translated the known appellations of regions, seas, and mountains, unto the parts of that luminary. Brown.

SELF.† pronoun. plur. selves. [silba, Gothic; rylf, rylja, Sax. self; selve, Dutch.]

1. Its primary signification seems to be that of an adjective; very; particular; this above others; sometimes, one's own.

Shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

The cruel ministers, by self and violent hands,
Took off her life. Shakespeare.

On these self hills the air is so thin, that it is not sufficient to bear up the body of a bird. Raleigh.

At that self moment enters Palamon
The gate of Venus. Dryden.

2. It is united both to the personal pronouns, and to the neutral pronoun it, and is always added when they are used reciprocally, or return upon themselves: as, I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; the people hiss me, but I clap myself; thou lovest thyself, though the world scorns thee. Dr. Johnson. — See, however, what is added to the fourth definition by Mr. Tyrwhitt.

They cast to build a city,
And get themselves a name. Milton, P. L.

He permits
Within himself unworthy powers to reign
Over free reason. Milton, P. L.

Self is that conscious thinking thing, which is sensible or conscious of pleasure and pain, capable of happiness and misery, and so is concerned for itself, as far as that consciousness extends. Locke.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically in the nominative case: as myself will decide it; myself will come; himself shall revenge it. This use of self, thus compounded, without the pronoun personal, is chiefly poetical.

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun substantive, self is in appearance an adjective: joined to my, thy, our, your, pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive. Even when compounded with him, it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson has very rightly established the primary signification of self to be that of an adjective; but, in its connexion with pronouns, he seems rather inclined to suppose it a substantive; first, because it is joined to possessive or adjective pronouns, as my, thy, her, &c. and secondly, because it has a plural number selves, contrary to the nature of the English adjective. The latter reason, I think, cannot have much weight, when it is remembered, that the use of selves, as the plural number of self, has been introduced into our language since the time of Chaucer. Selven, which was originally the accusative case singular of self, is used by him indifferently in both numbers: I myselfen; ye yourselves; he himselfen. The former reason also will lose its force, if the hypothesis, which I have ventured to propose, shall be admitted, viz. that, in their combinations with self, the pronouns my, thy, her, our, your, are not to be considered as possessive or adjective, but as the old oblique cases of the personal pronouns I, thou, she, we, ye. According to this hypothesis, the use of these combinations, with respect to the pronouns, is almost solecistical; but not more so than that of himself in the nominative case, which has long been authorized by constant custom; and it is remarkable, that a solecism of the same sort has prevailed in the French language, in which moi and toi, the oblique case of je and tu, when combined with même, are used as ungrammatically as our my and thy have just been supposed to be, when combined with self: Je l'ai vu moi-même, I have seen it myself: Tu le verras toi-même, thou shalt see it thyself: And so, in the accusative case, moi-même is added emphatically to me, and toi-même to te. It is probable, I think, that these departures from grammar, in both languages, have been made for the sake of fuller and more agreeable sounds. Je-même, me-même, and te-même, would certainly sound much thinner and more languid than moi-même and toi-même; and myself, thyself, &c. are as clearly preferable in point of pronunciation, to Iself, meself, thouself, theeself, &c. though not all, perhaps, in an equal degree. It should be observed, that itself, where a change of case in the pronoun would not have improved the sound, has never undergone any alteration. Tyrwhitt, Gloss. Chauc. in V. SELF.

No more be mentioned then of violence Against ourselves, or wilful barrenness.

Milton, P. L.

5. Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest, may, contrary to the analogy of my, him, them, be used as nominatives.

A horse well bitted which himself did dress.

Dryden.

And touch'd with miseries myself have known,
I learn to pity woes so like my own.

Dryden.

6. It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded: as, he did it himself.

7. It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent self to excel.

Spenser, F. Q.

Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of our selves seems most worthy of our endeavour.

Hale.

Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self, and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things; in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being.

Locke.

It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to it self now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come.

Locke.

The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our selves, furnishes another long rank of prejudices.

Watts.

8. It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakspeare is often harsh. Dr. Johnson:—The same combination is found in the Saxon language: as, self-pill, self-luncu, &c. It is unnecessary to extend the list of such compounds.

Then held she her tongue, and cast down a self-accusing look, finding that in herself she had shot out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind than she minded to have done.

Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist Of our self-love, so passions do deceive,
We think they hurt, when most they do assist.

Sidney.

Till Strephon's plaining voice him nearer drew,
Where by his words his self-like case he knew.

Sidney.

Ah! where was first that cruel cunning found,
To frame of earth a vessel of the mind,
Where it should be to self-destruction bound?

Sidney.

Before the door sat self-consuming Care,
Day and night keeping wary watch and ward.

Spenser, F. Q.

My strange and self-abuse,
Is the initiate fear that wants hard use.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof:

But being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it.

Shaks. M. N. Dream.

Nor know I aught
By me that's said or done amiss this night,
Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,

When violence assails us,
He walks, and that self-chain about his neck,
Which he forswore.

Shakspeare.

It is in my power, in one self-born hour,
To plant and o'erwhelm custom.

Shaks. W. Tale.

His treasures will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But self-affrighted tremble at his sin.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

The stars above us govern our conditions;
Else one self-mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues.

Shakspeare.

I'm made of that self-metal as my sister,
And prize me at her worth.

Shaks. K. Lear.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight

The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth.

Shakspeare.

He may do some good on her:
A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

But lest myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Shakspeare.

He conjunct and flattering his displeasure,
Tript me behind: being down, insulted, rail'd,
Got praises of the king,
For him attempting who was self-subdu'd.

Shaks.

The Everlasting fixt
His canon 'gainst self-slaughter.

Shaks. Hamlet.

Know if his last purpose hold,
Or whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course? He's full of alteration,
And self-reproving.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

More nor less to others paying;
Than by self-offences weighing:
Shame to him whose cruel striking,
Kills for faults of his own liking!

Shakspeare.

Bellona's bridegroom, lap't in proof,
Confronted him with self-caparisons,
Point against point.

Shaks. Macbeth.

Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.

Shaks. Hen. V.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tries him.

Shakspeare.

His lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city; he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride.

Shakspeare.

You promis'd
To lay aside self-barring heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

In their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digg'd down a wall.

Gen. xlix. 6.

The most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint as to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles.

Bacon.

Hast thou set up nothing in competition with God; no pride, profit, self-love, or self-interest of thy own?

Durpan.

Up through the spacious palace passed she,
To where the king's proudly reposed head,

If any can be soft to tyranny,
And self-tormenting sin, had a soft bed.

Crashaw.

With a joyful willingness these self-loving reformers took possession of all vacant preferments, and with reluctance others parted with their beloved colleges and subsistence.

Walton.

Repeat the sin; but if the punishment
Thou canst avoid, self-preservation bids.

Milton, S. A.

Him fast sleeping soon he found,
In labyrinth of many a round self-roll'd.

Oft times nothing profits more
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well managed.

Milton, P. L.

Self-knowing, and from thence Magnanimous to correspond with Heaven.

Milton, P. L.

So virtue given for lost,
Deprest and overthrow'n, as seem'd,
Like that self-begotten bird,

In the Arabian woods embost,
That no lay ere knows nor third,
And lay ere knows a holocaust,

From out her ashy womb now tem'd.

Milton, S. A.

He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
My motions in him; longer than they move,
His heart I know how variable and vain,
Self-left.

Milton, P. L.

Seneca approves this self-homicide.

Hakewill.

Thyself from flattering self-conceit defend,
Nor what thou dost not know, to know pretend.

Denham.

From reason to self-love declin'd,
Delights to prey upon his kind.

Denham.

Farewell, my tears;
And my just anger be no more confin'd
To vain complaints, or self-devouring silence.

Denham.

They are yet more mad to think that men may rest by death, though they die in self-murder, the greatest sin.

Graunt.

Are not these strange self-delusions, and yet attested by common experience?

South, Sermon.

If the image of God is only sovereignty, certainly we have been hitherto much mistaken, and hereafter are to beware of making ourselves unlike God, by too much self-denial and humility. South.

If a man would have a devout, humble, sin-abhorring, self-denying frame of spirit, he cannot take a more efficacious course to attain it than by praying himself into it. South.

Let a man apply himself to the difficult work of self-examination by a strict scrutiny into the whole estate of his soul. South.

A fatal self-impotence, such as defeats the design, and destroys the force of all religion. South.

When he intends to bereave the world of an illustrious person, he may cast him upon a bold self-opinioned physician, worse than his distemper, who shall make a shift to cure him into his grave. South.

Neglect of friends can never be proved rational, till we prove the person using it omnipotent and self-sufficient, and such as can never need any mortal assistance. South.

By all human laws, as well as divine, self-murder has ever been agreed on as the greatest crime. Temple.

A self-conceited fop will swallow any thing. L' Etranger.

From Atreus though your ancient lineage came;
Yet my self-conscious worth, your high renown,
Your virtue, through the neighb'ring nations blown. Dryden.

He has given you all the commendation which his self-sufficiency could afford to any. Dryden.

Below yon sphere
There hangs the ball of earth and water mixt,
Self-center'd and unmov'd. Dryden.

All these receive their birth from other things,
But from himself the phoenix only springs;
Self-born, begotten by the parent flame
In which he burn'd, another and the same. Dryden.

The burning fire that shone so bright,
Flew off all sudden with extinguish'd light,
And left one altar dark, a little space;
Which turn'd self-kindled, and renew'd the blaze. Dryden.

Thou first, O king! release the rights of sway;
Power, self-restrain'd, the people best obey. Dryden.

Eighteen and nineteen are equal to thirty-seven,
by the same self-evidence that one and two are equal to three. Locke.

A contradiction of what has been said is a mark of yet greater pride and self-conceitedness, when we take upon us to set another right in his story. Locke.

I am as justly accountable for any action done many years since, appropriated to me now by this self-consciousness, as I am for what I did the last moment. Locke.

Each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two it is immediately placed between;
the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

This self-existent being hath the power of perfection, as well as of existence in himself; for he that is above, or existeth without, any cause, that is, hath the power of existence in himself, cannot be without the power of any possible existence. Grew, Comol.

Body cannot be self-existent, because it is not self-movant; for motion is not of the essence of body, because we may have a definitive conception of body, abstracted from that of motion; wherefore motion is something else besides body, something without which body may be conceived to exist. Grew.

Confidence, as opposed to modesty, and distinguished from decent assurance, proceeds from self- opinion, occasioned by ignorance or flattery. Collier of Confidence.

Bewilder'd, I my author cannot find,
Till some first cause, some self-existent mind,
Who form'd, and rules all nature, is assign'd. Blackmore.

If a first body may to any place
Be not determin'd in the boundless space,
'Tis plain it then may absent be from all,
Who then will this a self-existence call? Blackmore.

Shall Nature, erring from her first command,
Self-preservation, fall by her own hand? Granville.

Low nonsense is the talent of a cold phlegma-tick temper: a writer of this complexion gropes his way softly among self-contradiction, and grovels in absurdities. Addison.

This fatal hypocrisy and self-deceit is taken notice of in these words, Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Addison.

The guilt of perjury is so self-evident, that it was always reckoned among the greatest crimes, by those who were only governed by the light of reason. Addison.

Self-sufficiency proceeds from inexperience. Addison.

Men had better own their ignorance than advance doctrines which are self-contradictory. Spectator.

Light, which of all bodies is nearest allied to spirit, is also most diffusive and self-communicative. Norris.

Thus we see in bodies, the more of kin they are to spirit in subtlety and refinement, the more spreading are they and self-diffusive. Norris.

God, who is an absolute spiritual act, and who is such a pure light as in which there is no darkness, must needs be infinitely self-impacting and communicative. Norris.

Every animal is conscious of some individual, self-moving, self-determining principle. Pope and Arbuthnot, Mart. Scrib.

Nick does not pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradesman, a self-seeking wretch. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

By the blast of self-opinion mov'd,
We wish to charm, and seek to be belov'd. Prior.

Living and understanding substances do clearly demonstrate to philosophical enquirers the necessary self-existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their Maker. Bentley.

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commence or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense. Bentley.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul; it is self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning. Bentley.

The philosophers, and even the Epicureans, maintained the self-sufficiency of the Godhead,
and seldom or never sacrificed at all. Bentley.

Matter is not endued with self-motion, nor with a power to alter the course in which it is put: it is merely passive, and must ever continue in that state it is settled in. Echeyne.

I took not arms, till urg'd by self-defence,
The eldest law of nature. Rowe, Amb. Stepmother.
His labour and study would have shewn his early mistakes, and cured him of self-flattering de-lusions. Watts.

This is not to be done in a rash and self-suffi- cient manner; but with an humble dependance on divine grace, while we walk among snares. Watts.

The religion of Jesus, with all its self-denials, virtues, and devotions, is very practicable. Watts.
I heard in Crete, this island's name;
For 'twas in Crete, my native soil, I came Self-banish'd thence. Pope, Odys.

Achilles's courage is furious and untractable;
that of Ajax is heavy and self-confiding. Pope.

I doom, to fix the gallant ship,
A mark of vengeance on the sable deep;
To warn the thoughtless self-confiding train,
No more unlicens'd thus to brave the main. Pope.

What is loose love? a transient gust,
A vapour fed from wild desire,
A wandering self-consuming fire. Pope.

In dubious thought the king awaits,
And self-considering, as he stands, debates. Pope.

By mighty Jove's command,
Unwilling have I trod this pleasing land;
For who self-mov'd with weary wings would sweep
Such length of ocean? Pope.

They who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down;
And while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contenting wits become the sport of fools. Pope.

It may be thought that Ulysses here is too ostentatious, and that he dwells more than modesty allows upon his own accomplishments; but self- praise is sometimes no fault. Broome.

No wonder such a spirit, in such a situation, is provoked beyond the regards of religion or self- conviction. Swift.

SEL'FHEAL.† n. s. [prunella, Lat.] A plant: the name is also sometimes given to another plant called sanicle.

SEL'FISH. adj. [from self.] Attentive only to one's own interest; void of regard for others.

What could the most aspiring selfish man desire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection, and such a goodness as will proportion a reward to it? Addison, Spect.

Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair,
List unto Reason, and deserve her care;
Those that imparted court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name. Pope.

SEL'FISHNESS. n. s. [from selfish.] Attention to his own interest, without any regard to others; self-love.

This sublimer love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, thoroughly refined from all base dross of selfishness and interest, nobly begets a perfect submission of our wills to the will of God. Boyle, Seraph. Love.

SEL'FISHLY. adv. [from selfish.] With regard only to his own interest; without love of others.

He can your merit selfishly approve,
And shew the sense of it without the love. Pope.

SEL'FNESS.* n. s. [from self.] Self-love; selfishness.

Wholly her's, all selfness he forbears.
Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.
The simple good without all selfness or straitness.
Mure, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 366.

O false and wicked colours of desire!
Eternal bondage unto him that seeks
To be possess'd of all things that he likes!
Shall I, a son and subject, seem to dare,
For any selfness, to set realms on fire?
Ld. Brooke, Mustapha.

SEL'FSAME. adj. [self and same.] Exactly
the same.

I have no great cause to look for other than the self-same portion and lot, which your manner hath been hitherto to lay on them that concur not in opinion with you. Hooker, Pref.

Flight pursu'd one way the self-same hour.
Milton, P. L.

I have been base,
Base ev'n to him from whom I did receive
All that a son could to a parent give;
Behold me punish'd in the self-same kind;
Th' ungrateful does a more ungrateful find. Dryden.

SEL'ION. n. s. [selio, low Latin.] A ridge of land. Ainsworth.

SELL.† pronoun. [for self.] Retained in Scotland, and the north of England, for self; and sells in the plural for selves.

They turn round like griddle-stones,
Which they dig out fro' the dells,
For their bairns' bread, wives, and sells. B. Jonson.

SELL.† n. s. [selle, French; sella, Latin.]

1. A saddle. Obsolete.

Turning to that place, in which whilere
He left his lofty steed with golden sell
And goodly gorgeous barbes, him found not there.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. [Selle, old Fr. "Siege, tribunal de justice." Lacombe.] A royal seat; a throne.

The tyrant proud frown'd from his lofty sell.
Fairfax, Tass. B. 4.

3. A sill. See SILL.

To SELL.† v. a. [M. Goth. saljan; Sax. rýllan, rællan; Icel. selia. See SALE.]

1. To give for a price; the word correlative to buy; to vend.

The Midianites sold him unto Egypt, unto Poti-phar.
Gen. xxxvii. 36.

Let us sell him to the Ishmaelites.
Gen. xxxvii. 27.

This sense is likewise mistress of an art,
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell.

Davies.

All the inns and public-houses are obliged to furnish themselves with corn, which is sold out at a much dearer rate than 'tis bought up.

Addison on Italy.

You have made an order that ale should be sold for three half-pence a quart.

Swift.

2. To betray for money: as, he sold his country.

You would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude. Shakespeare.

To SELL.† v. n.

1. To have commerce or traffick with one.

I will buy with you, sell with you; but I will not eat with you. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Consult not with a buyer of selling.

Eccles. xxxvii. 11.

2. To be sold.

Few writings sell, which are not filled with great names.

Addison, Spect. No. 567.

SE'LLANDER. n. s. A dry scab in a horse's hough or pastern.

Ainsworth.

SE'LLER. n. s. [from sell.] The person that sells; vender.

To things of sale a seller's praise belongs.

Shakespeare.

The name of the agent, of the seller, notary, and witnesses, are in both instruments.

Addison on Italy.

SELT.* n. s. [Jelb, rarus, Sax.] Chance; a thing or rare occurrence. A Cheshire word. Wilbraham's *Chesh. Gloss.*SELVAGE.† n. s. [Of this word I know SELVEDGE.] not the etymology.

Skinner thinks selvage is said as salvage, from its saving the cloth. Dr. Johnson.

—I have added selvedge, which Dr. Johnson has overpassed, and is the true word; formerly written selvidge. See Sherwood's Dict. 1632. This points to the word as compounded of edge, and perhaps of salvus, Lat. safe, by corruption selve. But the ingenious compiler of the Craven Dialect says, that the word is from self and edge, i. e. not wanting a hem.] The edge of cloth where it is closed by complicating the threads.

Make loops of blue upon the edge of the one certain from the selvedge in the coupling.

Ezod. xxvi. 4.

Meditation is like the selvedge, which keeps the cloth from ravelling.

Cit. in Echard's Obs. on the Answ. Cont. Cl. p. 110.

SE'LVEDGED.* adj. [from selvedge.] Hemmed; bordered; welte.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SELVES. The plural of self.

Consciousness being interrupted, and we losing sight of our past selves, doubts are raised whether we are the same.

Locke.

SE'MBLABLE. adj. [semblable, French.]

Like; resembling.

Then he abhorr'd

All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
His semblable, yea himself, Timon disdains.

Shakespeare.

With semblable reason we might expect a regularity in the winds.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SE'MBLABLY. adv. [from semblable.] With resemblance.

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Se'mblably furnish'd like the king himself.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

SE'MBLANCE. n. s. [semblance, Fr. from semblant.]1. Likeness; resemblance; similitude; representation.

Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise:
Bethink thee on her virtues, that surmount
Her natural graces, that extinguish art:

Repeat their semblance often.

Shaks.

She's but the sign and semblance of her honour:
Behold how like a maid she blushes here!

O, what authority and shew of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal!

Shaks.

He with high words, that bore
Se'mblance of worth, not substance, gently rais'd
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears.

Milton, P. L.

This last effort brought forth the opinion, that these bodies are not what they seem to be; that they are no shells, but mere sportings of active nature, and only semblances or imitations of shells.

Woodward.

It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and semblance of virtue, only to conceal and disguise our vice.

Rogers.

2. Appearance; show; figure.

Be you the soldier; for you likest are,
For manly semblance and for skill in war. Spenser.

Their semblance kind, and mild their gestures were,

Peace in their hands, and friendship in their face.

Fairfax.

All that fair and good in thy divine
Se'mblance, and in thy beauty's heav'nly ray,
United I behold.

Milton, P. L.

SE'MBLANT. adj. [semblant, Fr.] Like; resembling; having the appearance of any thing. Little used.

Thy picture, like thy fame,

Entire may last; that as their eyes survey
The semblant shade, men yet unborn may say,

Thus great, thus gracious look'd Britannia's queen;

Her brow thus smooth, her look was thus serene.

Prior.

SE'MBLANT. n. s. 'Show; figure; resemblance; representation. Not in use.

Her purpose was not such as she did feign,
Ne yet her person such as it was seen;

But under simple shew, and semblant plain,
Lurks false Duessa, secretly unseen.

Spenser, F. Q.

Full lively is the semblant, tho' the substance dead.

Spenser, F. Q.

SE'MBLATIVE. adj. [from semblant.] Suitable; accommodate; fit; resembling.

Diana's lip

Is not more smooth and ruby; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound;

And all is semblative a woman's part.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

To SE'MBLE. v. n. [sembler, Fr.] To represent; to make a likeness. Little used.

Let Europe, say'd, the column high erect,
Than Trajan's higher, or than Antoine's,
Where sembling art may carve the fair effect,
And full achievement of thy great designs. Prior.

SE'MI. n. s. [Latin.] A word which, used in composition, signifies half: as, semicircle, half a circle.SEMI'NNULAR. adj. [semi and annulus, a ring.] Half round.

Grew, Mus.

SE'MIBRIEF.† n. s. [semibreve, French.]SE'MIBREVE.† n. s. [semibreve, French.]

A semibreve is a note of half the quantity of a breve, containing two minims, four crotchets, &c. It is accounted one measure or time, or the integer infractions and multiples, whereby the time of the other notes is expressed.

Mus. Dict.

The period, colon, semicolon, and comma, are in the same proportion to one another as the semi-brief, the minim, the crotchet, and the quaver, in music.

Louth, Eng. Gram.

SEMI'CIRCLE. n. s. [semicirculus, Lat. semi and circle.] A half round; part of a circle divided by the diameter.

Black brows

Become some women best, so they be in a semi-circle,

Or a half-moon, made with a pen. Shakespeare.

Has he given the lye

In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,

Or direct parallel?

Shakespeare.

The chains that held my left leg gave me the liberty of walking backwards and forwards in a semicircle.

Swift.

SEMI'CIRCLED.† adj. [semi and circular.]SEMI'CIRCULAR.† adj. Half round.

The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semicircled farthinggale.

Shakespeare.

The rainbow is caused by the rays of the sun falling upon a roid and opposite cloud, whereof some reflected, others refracted, beget the semicircular variety we call the rainbow.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The seas are inclosed between the two semi-circular moles that surround it.

Addison on Italy.

SEMI'COLON.† n. s. [semi and κῶλον.] Half a colon; a point made thus [;] to note
a greater pause than that of a comma.

A member of a sentence, whether simple or compounded, that requires a greater pause than a comma, yet does not of itself make a complete sentence, but is followed by something closely depending on it, may be distinguished by a semi-colon.

Louth, Eng. Gram.

SEMI'DIAMETER. n. s. [semi and diameter.]

Half the line which, drawn through the centre of a circle, divides it into two equal parts; a straight line drawn from the circumference to the centre of a circle.

Their difference is as little considerable as a semidiameter of the earth in two measures of the highest heaven, the one taken from the surface of the earth, the other from its centre: the disposition is just nothing.

More.

The force of this instrument consists in the disproportion of distance betwixt the semidiameter of the cylinder and the semidiameter of the rundle with the spokes.

Wilkins.

SEMI'DIAPHANEITY. n. s. [semi and diaphaneity.] Half transparency; imperfect transparency.

SEMI'FLU'ID. adj. [semi and fluid.] Imperfectly fluid.

Phlegm, or petite, is a sort of semifluid, it being so far solid that one part draws along several other parts adhering to it, which doth not happen in a perfect fluid, and yet no part will draw the whole mass, as happens in a perfect solid.

Arbutnot.

SEMI'LU'NAR.† adj. [semilunare, Fr. semi SEMI'LU'NARY. } and luna, Lat.] Resembling in form a half moon.

This bay is of a semilunary form.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 13.

The eyes are guarded with a semilunar ridge. Grew.

SE'MMETAL. n. s. [semi and metal.] Half metal; imperfect metal.

Semimetals are metallic fossils, heavy, opaque, of a bright glittering surface, not malleable under the hammer; as quicksilver, antimony, cobalt, the arsenicks, bismuth, zink, with its ore calamine: to these may be added the semimetallick recrements, tutty and pampholyx. Hill.

SE'MINAL. adj. [seminal, French; seminis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to seed.
2. Contained in the seed; radical.

Had our senses never presented us with those obvious seminal principles of apparent generations, we should never have suspected that a plant or animal would have proceeded from such unlikely materials.

Glanville, Scepis.

Though we cannot prolong the period of a commonwealth beyond the decree of heaven, or the date of its nature, any more than human life beyond the strength of the seminal virtue, yet we may manage a sickly constitution, and preserve a strong one. Swift.

SE'MINAL.* n. s. Seminal state. Not in use.

The seminals of other iniquities.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 4.

SEMINA'LITY. n. s. [from seminal.]

1. The nature of seed.

As though there were a seminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they conceive we behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown.

2. The power of being produced.

In the seeds of wheat there lieth obscurely the seminality of darnel. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SEMINARIST.* n. s. [from seminary.] A Romish priest educated in a seminary.

Watson, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 2.

SEMI'V'WEL. n. s. [semi and vowel.] A consonant which makes an imperfect sound, or does not demand a total occlusion of the mouth.

When Homer would represent any agreeable object, he makes use of the smoothest vowels and most flowing semivowels. Broom.

SE'MPERVIVE. n. s. [semper and vivus, Lat.] that is, always alive. A plant.

The greater sempervive will put out branches two or three years; but they wrap the root in an oil-cloth once in half a year. Bacon.

SEMPITERNAL. adj. [sempiternel, Fr. sempiternus, from semper and eternus, Lat.]

1. Eternal in futurity; having beginning, but no end.

Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, à partie ante, are not contented to suppose it to be sempiternal, or eternal à partie post; but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.

2. In poetry it is used simply for eternal.

Should we the long-depending scale ascend
Of sons and fathers, will it never end?
If 'twill, then must we through the order run,
To some one man whose being ne'er begun;
If that one man was sempiternal, why
Did he, since independent, ever die? Blackmore.

SEMPITERNITY. † n. s. [sempiternitas, Lat.]

Future duration without end.

This silent night, when all things lie in lap of sweet repose,
Ye only wake; the powres of sleepe your eyes do never close;

To shew the sempiternitie, to which their names ye raise,

On wings of your immortal verse, that truly merit praise. Mir. for Mag. p. 557.

The future eternity, or sempiternity of the world, being admitted, though the eternity à partie ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the eman-ation of the divine goodness. Hale.

SEMPSTER.* n. s. [reameſter, Saxon, is what we now call a seamstress, semstress, or sempstress, Lat. satricia. The Saxon reameſter is sartor, sutor, Latin. Yet Mr. Pegge pretends, that there is no such word as seamster. See his Anecd. of the Eng. Lang. 2d ed. p. 326.] One who sews, or uses a needle; a sort of tailor.
The word is not usual; but see SEAM-STER.

He was by trade a sempster in Chancery Lane.
A. Wood, Ath. Ox. (ed. 1691.) vol. i. col. 264.
He [Johnson] supposed that Walton had given up his business as a linen-draper and sempster.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

SEMPSTRESS.† n. s. [reameſter, Sax. See SEAMSTRESS. The word is also often written sempstress.] A woman whose business is to sew; a woman who lives by her needle.

Two hundred sempstresses were employed to make me shirts, and linen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds.

Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

The tuck'd up sempstress walks with hasty strides.

Swift.

SEN.* adv. Since: Sen or sin is still our SENS. } northern word; sens is Spenser's accommodation to his rhyme. See SINCE.

French; jenat, Sax.] An assembly of counsellors; a body of men set apart to consult for the publick good.

We debate

The nature of our seats, which will in time break ope

The locks o' th' senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles, Shakspeare, Coriol.

VOL. III.

They — called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel. Acts, v. 21.

There they shall found

Their government, and their great senate chuse.
Milton, P. L.

He had not us'd excursions, spears, or darts,
But counsel, order, and such aged arts;
Which, if our ancestors had not retain'd,
The senate's name our counsel had not gain'd.

Denham.

Gallus was welcom'd to the sacred strand,
The senate rising to salute their guest. Dryden.

SENATHOUSE. n. s. [senate and house.]
Place of publick council.

The nobles in great earnestness are going
All to the senathouse; some news is come. Shaks.

SENATOR. n. s. [senator, Latin; senateur,
French.] A publick counsellor.

Most unwise patricians,

You grave but reckless senators. Shaks. Coriol.

Like senators, to censure, right or wrong.

Granville.

SENATORIAL.† adj. [senatorius, Latin;
SENATORIAN. } senatorial, senatorien,
French.] Belonging to senators; befitting senators.

The king encircled with the senatorial worthies of the higher and lower order.

Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, (1693.) p. 176.

Propose your schemes, ye senatorial band,
Whose ways and means support the sinking land.

Johnson, London, (1738.)

Go on, brave youths, till, in some future age,
Whips shall become the senatorial badge.

Warton, Newmarket, (1751.)

SENATORIALLY.* adv. [from senatorial.]
In a solemn manner; in a way becoming a senator.

The mother was cheerful; the father senatorially grave. Drummond, Trav. (Lett. dat. 1744.) p. 17.

SENATORSHIP.* n. s. [from senator.]
The office or dignity of a senator.

From which step his courage and wisdom raised him by degrees to the sovereignty of Lucca, the senatorship of Rome, the special favour of the emperor, and a near hope, only by death prevented, of subduing Florence. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

TO SEND. v. a. pret. and part. pass. sent.
[sanđjan, Goth. jenban, Sax. senden,
Dutch.]

We will not have this man to reign over us.

St. Luke, xix. 14.

There have been commissions
Sent down among them, which have flaw'd the heart

Of all their loyalties. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

My overshadowing spirit and might with thee
I send along. Milton, P. L.

To remove him I decree,

And send him from the garden forth to till
The ground whence he was taken, fitter soil.

Milton, P. L.

His wounded men he first sends off to shore.

Dryden.

Servants, sent on messages, stay out somewhat longer than the message requires. Swift.

2. To commission by authority to go and act.

I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran.

Jer. xxiii. 21.

But first whom shall we send

In search of this new world? Here he had need
All circumspection, and we now no less

Choice in our suffrage; for on whom we send,
The weight of all and our last hope relies.

Milton, P. L.

3. To transmit by another; not to bring.
They sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas. Acts, xi. 30.

4. To dismiss another as agent; not to go.
God will deign

To visit oft the dwellings of just men
Delighted, and with frequent intercourse,
Thither will send his winged messengers
On errands of supernal grace. Milton, P. L.

5. To grant as from a distant place: as, if God send life.

I pray thee send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master. Gen. xxiv. 12.

O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me. Psalms.

6. To inflict; as from a distance.

The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto.

Deut. xxviii.

7. To emit; to immit; to produce.

The water sends forth plants that have no roots fixed in the bottom, being almost but leaves.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The senses send in only the influxes of material things, and the imagination and memory present only their pictures or images, when the objects themselves are absent. Cheyne.

8. To diffuse; to propagate.

Cherubick songs by night from neighbouring hills

When the fury took her stand on high,

A hiss from all the snaky tire went round:

The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound,

And through the Achaian cities send the sound.

Pope.

9. To let fly; to cast or shoot.

TO SEND. v. n.

1. To despatch a message.

I have made bold to send in to your wife:
My suit is that she will to Desdemona

Procure me some access. Shakspeare, Othello.

This son of a murderer hath sent to take away
my head. Kings.

They could not attempt their perfect reformation in church and state, till those votes were utterly abolished; therefore they sent the same day again to the king. Clarendon.

2. TO SEND for. To require by message to come, or cause to be brought.

Go with me some few of you, and see the place;
and then you may send for your sick, which bring on land. Bacon.

He sent for me; and, while I rais'd his head,

He threw his aged arms about my neck,

And, seeing that I wept, he press'd me close.

Dryden.

SENDAL.* n. s. [cendalum, low Latin;
cendal, Fr. and Span. See Du Cange
in V. CENDALUM.] A sort of thin silk:

a word formerly much in use.

Lined with taffata and with sendalle.

Thynne, Animad. on Speght's Chaucer, (1598.)

SENDER. n. s. [from send.] One that sends.

This was a merry message.

— We hope to make the sender blush at it.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Love that comes too late,

Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,

To the great sender turns a sour offence. Shaks.

Best with the best, the sender, not the sent.

Milton, P. L.

SENESCENCE. n. s. [senesco, Latin.] The state of growing old; decay by time.

The earth and all things will continue in the state wherein they now are, without the least senescence or decay, without jarring, disorder, or invasion of one another. Woodward.

SENESCHAL. † n. s. [seneschal, Fr. of uncertain original. Dr. Johnson.—“Elegantissima sunt in hanc vocem habet Hiccesius, illam derivans a Su. Goth. sinn, sinne, suus, et Icel. skall, skale, minister, servus; ut sit minister vices domini tenens. Nec inelegerant vocem M. Goth. seneighs, senex, substituit Lye.” Serenius.—There can be no doubt that scalcik, or schalk, the old Goth. and German word for a servant, gave rise to this word. See Wachter in V. SCHAUK. See also MARSHALL. Menage and other also consider senex, old, as forming the first part of the word.]

1. One who had in great houses the care of feasts, or domestic ceremonies.

John earl of Huntingdon, under his seal of arms, made Sir John Arundel, of Trerice, seneschal of his household, as well in peace as in war.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall. Marshall'd feast,

Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals;
The skill of artifice, or office mean. Milton, P. L.
The seneschal rebuk'd, in haste withdrew;
With equal haste a mental train pursue.

Pope, Odyss.

2. It afterwards came to signify other offices.

There eke he placed a strong garrison,
And set a seneschal of dreaded might,
That by his powre oppressed every one,
And vanquished all venturous knights in fight.

Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 30.

SENGREEN. n. s. [sedum.] A plant.

SENNILE. adj. [senilis, Lat.] Belonging to old age; consequent on old age.

My green youth made me very unripe for a task of that nature, whose difficulty requires that it should be handled by a person in whom nature, education, and time have happily matched a senile maturity of judgement with youthful vigour of fancy.

Boyle on Colours.

SENILITY.* n. s. [senilitas, Lat.] Old age.

Mr. Edwards, when going away, again recurred to his consciousness of senility; and, looking full in Dr. Johnson's face, said to him, You'll find in Dr. Young, “O my coevals! remnants of yourselves.” Johnson did not relish this at all.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

SENIOR. n. s. [senior, Latin.]

1. One older than another; one who on account of longer time has some superiority.

How can you admit your seniors to the examination or allowing of them, not only being inferior in office and calling, but in gifts also? Whiggit.

2. An aged person.

A senior of the place replies,
Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden.

SENIORITY.* n. s. [from senior.] Eldership; priority of birth.

As in insurrections the ringleader is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has, by his seniority and primogeniture, a double portion of the guilt. Gov. of the Tongue.

He was the elder brother, and Ulysses might be considered in his care, by the right due to his seniority. Broom.

SENIORITY.* n. s. Seniority. See the second sense of SIGNIORITY.

SE'NNA. n. s. [sena, Lat.] A physical tree. Miller.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug, Would scour these English hence! Shaks. Macbeth.
Senna tree is of two sorts: the bastard senna, and the scorpion senna, both of which yield a pleasant leaf and flower. Mortimer.

SE'NNIGHT. n. s. [Contracted from seven-night.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. See FORTNIGHT.

If mention is made on Monday, of Thursday sennight, the Thursday that follows the next Thursday is meant.

Time trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a sennight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

SENO'CLAR. adj. [seni and oculus, Latin.] Having six eyes. Most animals are binocular, spiders octonocular, and some senocular. Derham, Phys. Theol.

SE'NSATED.* part. adj. Perceived by the senses.

As those of the one are sensated by the ear, so those of the other are by the eye.

Hooke, in the Hist. R. S. iii. 194.

SENSA'TION. n. s. [sensation, Fr. sensation, school Lat.] Perception by means of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances, vary the sensations; and to them of Java pepper is cold. Glanville, Scopsis.

The brain, distempered by a cold, beating against the root of the auditory nerve, and protracted to the tympanum, causes the sensation of noise. Harvey on Consumptions.

This great source of most of the ideas we have, depending wholly upon our senses, and derived by them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke.

When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Addison.

The happiest, upon a fair estimate, have stronger sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SENSE. n. s. [sens, Fr. sensu, Lat.]

1. Faculty or power by which external objects are perceived; the sight; touch; hearing; smell; taste.

This power is sense, which from abroad doth bring

The colour, taste, and touch, and scent, and sound,
The quantity and shape of every thing

Within earth's centre, or heav'n's circle found;

And though things sensible be numberless,

But only five the sense's organs be;

And in those five, all things their forms express,
Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear or see. Davies.

Then is the soul a nature, which contains
The power of sense within a greater power,
Which doth employ and uses the sense's pains;
But sits and rules within her private bower. Davies.

Both contain

Within them every lower faculty —
Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste. Milton, P. L.

Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the senses of learning, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs; and these are hearing and seeing. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

2. Perception by the senses; sensation.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcurion throughout the whole. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If we had nought but sense, then only they Should have sound minds which have their senses sound;

But wisdom grows when senses do decay,
And folly most in quickest sense is found. Davies.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind. Dryden.

3. Perception of intellect; apprehension of mind.

This Basilus, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension. Stiney.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heaven from earth so far. Milton, P. L.

4. Sensibility; quickness or keenness of perception.

He should have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge. Shakspeare.

5. Understanding; soundness of faculties, strength of natural reason.

Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses. Shakspeare.

God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities, which we call natural light and reason, and common sense. Bentley.

There's something previous ev'n to taste; 'tis sense.

Good sense, which only is the gift of heaven,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven:
A light within yourself you must perceive;
Jones and Le Nôtre have it not to give. Pope.

6. Reason; reasonable meaning.

He raves; his words are loose
As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense:
You see he knows not me, his natural father;
That now the wind has got into his head,
And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryden, Span. Friar.

7. Opinion; notion; judgement.

I speak my private but impartial sense
With freedom, and, I hope, without offence. Roscommon.

8. Consciousness; conviction.

In the due sense of my want of learning, I only make a confession of my own faith. Dryden.

9. Moral perception.

Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices. L' Estrange.

10. Meaning; import.

In this sense to be preserved from sin is not impossible. Hooker.

My hearty friends,

You take me in too dolorous a sense. Shakspeare.

A haughty presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves. More.

All before Richard I. is before time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.

In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity. Tillotson.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and affix the other senses or ideas to other words. Watts, Logic.

SE'NSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. A word not in use.

Let the sciolist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are not otherwise sensed by others, than they are by him? And why must his sense be the infallible criterion? It may be, what is white to us, is black to negroes.

Glanville, Scepis.

SENSEFUL.† adj. [from sense and full.]
Reasonable; judicious. Not used.

The lady, hearkning to his sensefull speech,
Found nothing that he said unmeet nor reason.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 37.

Men, otherwise senseful and ingenious, quote such things out of an author as would never pass in conversation. Norris.

SENSELESS. adj. [from sense.]

1. Wanting sense; wanting life; void of all life or perception.

The charm and venom, which they drunk,
Their blood with secret filth infected hath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk,
That through the great contagion direful deadly stunk. Spenser, F. Q.
The ears are senseless that should give us hearing,
To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Shakespeare.

It is as repugnant to the idea of senseless matter, that it should put into itself sense, perception, and knowledge, as it is repugnant to the idea of a triangle, that it should put into itself greater angles than two right ones. Locke.

2. Unfeeling; wanting sympathy.

The senseless grave feels not your pious sorrows.

Rousse.

3. Unreasonable; stupid; doltish; block-ish.

If we be not extremely foolish, knaveless, or senseless, a great joy is more apt to cure sorrow than a great trouble is. Bp. Taylor.

They would repent this their senseless perverseness when it would be too late, and when they found themselves under a power that would destroy them. Clarendon.

The great design of this author's book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world was ever so senseless as to deny. Tillotson.

She saw her favour was misplac'd;

The fellows had a wretched taste:

She needs must tell them to their face,

They were a senseless stupid race. Swift.

4. Contrary to true judgement; contrary to reason.

It is a senseless thing in reason, to think that one of these interests can stand without the other,
when in the very order of natural causes, government is preserved by religion. South, Serm.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, little wiser than they, destroy their young by senseless fondness, and too much embracing. Locke.

5. Wanting sensibility; wanting quickness or keenness of perception. Not in use.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or that hot-spurred Harpalice in Virgil, proceedeth from a senseless and overcold judgment. Peachment.

6. Wanting knowledge; unconscious; with out.

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep,
Fatten'd in vice; so callous and so gross,
He sins and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines,
Senseless of any charm in love, beyond
The prostitution of a common bed. Southern.

SENSELESSLY. adv. [from senseless.] In a senseless manner; stupidly; unreasonably.

If any one should be found so senselessly arrogant as to suppose man alone knowing and wise, but yet the product of mere ignorance and chance, and that all the rest of the universe acted only by that blind hap-hazard, I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully.

Locke.

SENSELESSNESS.† n. s. [from senseless.]
Folly; unreasonableness; absurdity;
stupidity.

That we fall not therefore into that like ἀναισθησία, stupidity and senselessness, our way is to catch those young foxes, and strangle them in the nest. Hales, Rem. p. 176.

The senselessness of the tradition of the crocodile's moving his upper jaw, is plain from the articulation of the occiput with the neck, and the nether jaw with the upper. Grew.

SENSIBILITY.† n. s. [sensibilité, Fr.]

1. Sensibleness; perception.

Any sensibility of his power and will for the illustration of his own glory.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

2. Quickness of sensation.

3. Quickness of perception; delicacy.
Modesty is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul: it is such an exquisite sensibility, as warns a woman to shun the first appearance of every thing hurtful. Addison, Spect.

SENSIBLE.† adj. [sensible, Fr. sensilis, Lat.]

1. Having the power of perceiving by the senses.

Would your cambrick were as sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity.

Shakespeare.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects those that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

A blind man conceives not colours, but under the notion of some other sensible faculty.

Glanville, Scepis.

2. Perceptible by the senses.

By reason man attaineth unto the knowledge of things that are and are not sensible: it resteth, therefore, that we search how man attaineth unto the knowledge of such things unsensible as are to be known. Hooker.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle tow'rd my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still:

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The space left and acquired in every sensible moment in such slow progressions, is so inconsiderable, that it cannot possibly move the sense.

Glanville, Scepis.

It is manifest that the heavens are void of all sensible resistance, and by consequence of all sensible matter. Newton.

The greater part of men are no otherwise moved than by sense, and have neither leisure nor ability so to improve their power of reflection, as to be capable of conceiving the divine perfections without the assistance of sensible objects. Rogers.

Air is sensible to the touch by its motion, and by its resistance to bodies moved in it.

Arbutnot on Air.

3. Perceived by the mind.

Idleness was punished by so many stripes in publick, and the disgrace was more sensible than the pain. Temple.

4. Perceiving by either mind or senses;
having perception by the mind or senses.

I saw you in the east at your first arising: I was as soon sensible as any of that light, when just shooting out, and beginning to travel upwards to the meridian. Dryden.

I do not say there is no soul in man, because he is not sensible of it in his sleep; but I do say, he cannot think at any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it. Locke.

The versification is as beautiful as the description complete; every ear must be sensible of it.

Broom on the Odyssey.

5. Having moral perception; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so great a shew of zeal. Shaks.

6. Having quick intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected.

Even I, the bold, the sensible of wrong,
Restrain'd by shame, was forc'd to hold my tongue.

Dryden.

7. Convinced; persuaded. A colloquial use.

They are very sensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatick; for then their territories would have lain together. Addison.

8. In conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonable; judicious; wise.

I have been tired with accusations from sensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge. Addison.

SENSIBLE.* n. s.

1. Sensation: a poetical conversion of the adjective into the substantive.

Our torments also may in length of time
Become our elements; these piercing fires
As soft as now severe, our temper chang'd
Into their temper; which must needs remove
The sensible of pain. Milton, P. L.

2. Whatever is perceptible around us.

The creation

Of this wide sensible.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 195.

SENSIBLENESS.† n. s. [from sensible.]

1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses.

Nor was it altogether bodily pains that made him so; but there was something extraordinary:
as, a withdrawing the sensibleness of divine assistance from him. As the sun at our Saviour's crucifixion, though not disjoined from the world, yet for a time deserted the world by withdrawing his light from it. And although this withholding the sensibleness of the divine presence was done without any aversion, or dislike, of the person of our blessed Lord, which not only before but at that very instant was tenderly beloved of God, yet the apprehension of it could not but make him bemoan his case in that sad exclamation, "My God, my God, why (or how) hast thou forsaken me!"

Haltwell, Saving of Souls, (1677.) p. 22.

2. Actual perception by mind or body.

The retirement or privacy used by sober women here in England, when they apply any thing helpful to their looks or complexion, is no argument of any sinful shame, but of modesty, civility, and that discretion, which commands us to do many things apart from any witnesses or spectators, which yet are no sins, but only sensibleness and reflexions upon those infirmities to which our vile bodies are subject.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 167.

3. Quickness of perception; sensibility.

The sensibleness of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp medicaments. Sharp.

4. Painful consciousness.

There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate sinner, being a kind of numbness of soul; and, contrariwise, this feeling and sensibleness, and sorrow for sin, the most vital quality. Hammond.

5. Judgement; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation.

SENSIBLY.† adv. [from sensible.]

1. Perceptibly to the senses.

He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed
Of that self-blood, that first gave life to you.

Shakespeare.

A sudden pain in my right foot increased sensibly.
Temple.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive; and so they affect the fibres of the brain more sensibly than other parts. Arbuthnot.

2. With perception of either mind or body.
3. Externally; by impression on the senses.

That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

4. With quick intellectual perception.

What remains past cure

Bear not too sensibly; nor still insist

To afflict thyself in vain. Milton, S. A.

5. [In conversation.] Judiciously; reasonably.

SENSITIVE. adj. [sensitif, Fr.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated so as not to fall into sin; yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in painting called passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body suffers and is sensibly altered. Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endued with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

SENSITIVE PLANT. n. s. [mimosa, Lat.] A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having many stamina in the centre: these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat-jointed pod, which opens both ways and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched the pedicle of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Miller.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen, that the plant, which well

We name the sensitive, should move and feel?
Whence know her leaves to answer her command,
And with quick horror fly the neighbouring hand?

Prior.
The sensitive plant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner.

The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself, more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

SENSORY. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensories, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

As sound in a bell or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensorium 'tis a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the sensory of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensible species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance? Newton.

2. Organ of sensation.

That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism. Bentley.

SENSUAL. adj. [sensuel, Fr.]

1. Consisting in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses.

Men in general are too partial, in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it. L'Estrange.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual, mental pow'rs ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual.

The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatsoever is most divine. Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious.

From amidst them rose
Belial, the dissoluted spirit that fell,
The sensualist; and, after Asmodai,
The fleshliest incubus. Milton, P. L.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein sensual men place their felicity. Atterbury.

SENSUALIST. n. s. [from sensual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporal pleasures.

Let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able; the former of which will find, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose hers. South.

SENSUALITY. n. s. [sensualité, Fr. Cotgrave.] Devotedness to the senses; addiction to brutal and corporal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality. Shakspeare.

Kill not her quickening power with surfeitings;
Mar not her sense with sensuality:

Cast not her serious wit on idle things;
Make not her free-will slave to vanity. Davies.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is. South.

They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings. Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples. Bentley.

TO SENSUALIZE. v. a. [from sensual.]

To sink to sensual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses.

A sensualized soul would carry such appetites with her thither, for which she could find no suitable objects. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 165.

Not to suffer one's self to be sensualized by pleasures, like those who were changed into brutes by Circe. Pope.

SENSUALLY. adv. [from sensual.] In a sensual manner.

Epicures, as sensually are bent.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign. K. l.

She had lived most corruptly and sensually.

SENSUOUS. adj. [from sense.] Tender; pathetick; full of passion. Not in use. Dr. Johnson. — This meaning, which Dr. Johnson has assigned to the word in the example from Milton's Treatise on Education, may be doubted. Milton had before used it; and the sense seems to be simply that of sensual, as affecting the senses.

The soul by this means of overboding herself, given up to fleshly delights, hated her wing pace downward; and finding the ease she had from her visible and sensuous colleague the body, in performance of religious duty, her pinions now broken and flagging, shifted off from herself the labour of high soaring any more. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

To this poetry would be made precedent as being less subtle and fine; but more simple, sensuous, and passionate. Milton on Education.

SENT. The participle passive of send.

I make a decree that all Israel go with thee; forasmuch as thou art sent of the king. Esra, vii. 14.

SENTENCE. n. s. [sentence, Fr. sententia, Lat.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge civil or criminal.

The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth, concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do. Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that so pronounced of them, neither sentence of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proof, that they, in whose hands it is to alter them, may likewise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity. Hooker.

How will I give sentence against them.

Jer. iv. 12.
If matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, still there are other lenitives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence. South, Serm.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sentence upon his doctrines. Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom.

By the consent of all laws, in capital causes, the evidence must be full and clear; and if so, where one man's life is in question, what say we to a war, which is ever the sentence of death upon many? Bacon, Holy War.

What rests but that the mortal sentence pass?
Milton, P. L.

3. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral.
An excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding, and shewing of hard sentences, were found in Daniel. Dan. v. 12.

A sentence may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words. Broomo on the Odyssey.

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing.
A simple sentence has but one subject and one finite verb: a compounded sentence has more than one subject or one finite verb, either expressed or understood; or it consists of two or more simple sentences connected together. Louth, Eng. Grammar.

TO SENTENCE. v. a. [sentencier, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To pass the last judgement on any one.

After this cold judgement, sentence me;
And, as you are a king, speak in your state,
What I have done that misbecame my place. Shakspeare.

Came the mild judge and intercessor both,
To sentence man. Milton, P. L.

2. To condemn; to doom to punishment.

Could that decree from our brother come?
Nature herself is sentenc'd in your doom:

Pity is no more. Dryden.
Idleness, sentenced by the decurions, was punished by so many stripes. Temple.

3. To relate, or express, in a short and energetic way.

The best way for speech, is to be short, plain, material. Let me hear one wise man sentence it, rather than twenty fools, garrulous in their lengthened tale. Feltham, Res. i. 93.

SENTENTIAL.* adj. [from sentence.] Comprising sentences.

Dr. Geddes is an advocate for a translation, which is not literal or verbal, but "sentential;" that is, where "every sentence of the English corresponds exactly to the Hebrew as the difference of the two idioms will permit."

Abp. Newcome on the Transl. of the Bib. p. 264.

SENTENTIÖSITY. n. s. [from sententious.] Comprehension in a sentence.

Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententiousity of common conceits with us.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SENTENTIOUS. adj. [sentencieux, Fr. from sentence.]

1. Abounding with sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetic.

He is very swift and sententious.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues:
Sententious showers! O let them fall!

Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.

Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms,
Foretold us useful and sententious truths. Waller.

How he apes his sire,
Ambitiously sententious! Addison, Cato.

2. Comprising sentences.

The making of figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them; as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain. Grew, Cosmol.

SENTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from sententious.] In short sentences; with striking brevity.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath.

Bacon, Ess.

Nausicaa delivers her judgement sententiously, to give it more weight. Broomer.

SENTENTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from sententious.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength.

The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy. Dryden.

SENTERY. n. s. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army.

What strength, what art can then suffice, or what evasion bear him safe
Through the strict sentries, and stations thick
Of angels watching round? Milton, P. L.

SENTINEL. adj. [sentiens, Lat.] Perceiving; having perception.

This acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horse is under the sense of hunger, and that without any formal syllogism preseth him to eat. Hale.

SENTIENT. n. s. [from the adjective.]

He that has perception.

If the sentient be carried, passivus æquis, with the body, whose motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is insensible.

Glanville, Sceptis.

SENTIMENT.† n. s. [sentiment, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — This word might be supposed to be of modern introduction into our language, in consequence of Dr. Johnson's earliest example being from Locke; but it is ancient: "Lovers that can make of sentiment." Chaucer, Leg. of Good Women, ver. 69.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion.

The consideration of the reason, why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries. Locke.

Alike to council or the assembly came,
With equal souls and sentiments the same. Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sentence in a composition.

Those who could no longer defend the conduct of Cato, praised the sentiments. Dennis.

3. Sensibility; feeling.

He pretends to and recommends sentiment and liberality; but I know him to be artful, close, and malicious: in short, a sentimental knave.

Sheridan, School for Scandal.

SENTIMENTAL.* adj. [from sentiment.] Abounding with sentiment; expressing quick intellectual feeling; affecting sensibility, in a contemptuous sense. See the third sense of sentiment. This word is modern.

The French use the word naïve in such a sense as to be explainable by no English word, unless we will submit to restrain ourselves in the application of the word sentimental. Shenstone.

Shall we imitate the sentimental and deep-searching Barrow? Longhorne.

Petrarch has described the perplexities of a lover's mind, and his struggles betwixt hope and despair, a subject most fertile of sentimental complaint, by a combination of contrarities; a species of wit highly relished by the Italians.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 31.

SENTIMENTALITY.* n. s. [from sentimental.] Affection of fine feeling or exquisite sensibility.

She has even the false pity and sentimentality of many modern ladies.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 436.

SENTINEL.† n. s. [sentinelle, Fr. from sentio, Lat.]

1. One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprise.

Norfolk, lie thee to thy charge;

Use careful watch, chuse trusty sentinels.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another; so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends, it commonly comes to the king's ear.

Bacon, Ess.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing power, Stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel;

Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tow'r;
And though both see, yet both but one thing tell.

Davies.

Love to our citadel resorts

Through those deceitful syllogisms;

Our sentinels betray our forts.

Denham.

The senses are situated in the head, as sentinels in a watch-tower, to receive and convey to the soul the impressions of external objects.

Ray on the Creation.

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unsoldierlike.

Broomer.

2. Watch; guard; the duty of a sentinel. Not in use.

The parson in sentinel: the country parson, wherever he is, keeps God's watch.

Herbert, Country Pars. ch. 18.

SENTRY. n. s. [corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.]

1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprise.

If I do send, dispatch

Those sentries to our aid; the rest will serve
For a short holding. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The youth of hell strict guard may keep,
And set their sentries to the utmost deep. Dryden.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow,
A wakeful sentry, and on duty now. Dryden.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentry.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep,
O'er my slumbers sentry keep;
Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes,
Whose eyes are open while mine close. Brown.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep. Dryden.

SEPARABILITY. n. s. [from separable.]

The quality of admitting disunion or disconnection. Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction. Glanville.

The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation; for nothing can be separated from itself. Norris.

SEPARABLE. adj. [separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separate.]

1. Susceptive of disunion; discernible.

The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood. Arbuthnot.

2. Possible to be disjoined from something; with from.

Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

SEPARABLENESS. n. s. [from separable.]

Capableness of being separated.

Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold. Boyle.

TO SEPARATE. v. a. [separo, Latin; separar, Fr.]

1. To break; to divide into parts.

2. To disunite; to disjoin.

I'll to England.

— To Ireland, I; our separated fortunes

Shall keep us both the safer. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Resolv'd,

Rather than death, or aught than death more dread,
Shall separate us. Milton, P. L.

3. To sever from the rest.

Can a body be inflammable from which it would puzzle a chymist to separate an inflammable ingredient? Boyle.

Death from sin no power can separate. Milton, P. L.

4. To set apart; to segregate.

Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. Acts, xiii. 2.

David separated to the service those who should prophesy. 1 Chron. xxv. 1.

5. To withdraw.

Separate thyself from me: if thou wilt take the left, I will go to the right. Gen. xiii. 9.

TO SEPARATE. v. n. To part; to be dis-united.

When there was not room enough for their herds to feed, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

SEPARATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Divided from the rest; parted from another.

'Twere hard to conceive an eternal watch, whose pieces were never separate one from another, nor ever in any other form. Burnet, Theory.

2. Disjoined; withdrawn.

3. Secret; secluded.

In a secret vale the Trojan sees

A separate grove. Dryden.

4. Disunited from the body; disengaged from corporeal nature. An emphatical sense.

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it can retain without the help of the body too; or else the soul, or any separate spirit, will have but little advantage by thinking. Locke.

SEPARATELY. adv. [from separate.]

Apart; singly; not in union; distinctly; particularly.

It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their council, both separately and together, for private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reserved. Bacon.

If you admit of many figures, conceive the whole together, and not every thing separately and in particular. Dryden.

SEPARATENESS. n. s. [from separate.]

The state of being separate.

Sacred things, which continue their state of separateness and sanctity.

Mede, Rev. of God's House, (1638), p. 3.

SEPARATION. n. s. [separatio, Lat. separatio, Fr. from separate.]

1. The act of separating; disjunction.

They have a dark opinion, that the soul doth live after the separation from the body. Abbot.

Any part of our bodies, vitally united to that which is conscious in us, makes a part of ourselves; but upon separation from the vital union, by which that consciousness is communicated, that which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so. Locke.

2. The state of being separate; disunion.

As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language was a mark of union. Bacon.

3. The chymical analysis, or operation of disuniting things mingled.

A fifteenth part of silver, incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any matter of separation, unless you put a greater quantity of silver, which is the last refuge in separations. Bacon.

4. Divorce; disjunction from a married state.

Did you not hear

A buzzing of a separation
Between the king and Catherine? Shakespeare.

SEPARATIST. n. s. [separatist, Fr. from separate.] One who divides from the church; a schismatick; a seceder.

The anabaptists, separatists, and sectaries' tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.

Our modern separatists pronounce all those heretical, or carnal, from whom they have withdrawn. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Says the separatist, if those, who have the rule over you, should command you any thing about church affairs, you ought not, in conscience, to obey them. South, Serm.

SEPARATOR. n. s. [from separate.] One who divides; a divider.

SEPARATORY. adj. [from separate.] Used in separation.

The most conspicuous gland of an animal is the system of the guts, where the lacteals are the emissary vessels, or separatory ducts.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

SEPIBILE. adj. [sepio, Lat.] That may be buried.

Bailey.

SEPIMENT. n. s. [sepimentum, Lat.] A hedge; a fence.

SEPS.* n. s. [Latin.] A kind of venomous eft.

SEPT. n. s. [septum, Lat.] A clan; a race; a family; a generation. A word used only with regard or allusion to Ireland, and, I suppose, Irish.

This judge, being the lord's brehon, adjudgeth a better share unto the lord of the soil, or the head of that sept, and also unto himself for his judgment a greater portion, than unto the plaintiffs.

Spenser on Ireland.

The English forces were ever too weak to subdue so many warlike nations, or septs, of the Irish as did possess this island. Davies on Ireland.

The true and ancient Russians, a sept whom he had met with in one of the provinces of that vast empire, were white like the Danes. Boyle.

SEPTANGULAR. adj. [septum and angulus, Lat.] Having seven corners or sides.

SEPTEMBER. n. s. [Latin; Septembre, Fr.]

The ninth month of the year; the seventh from March.

September hath his name as being the seventh month from March: he is drawn with a merry and cheerful countenance, in a purple robe.

Peachment on Drawing.

SEPTEINARY. n. s. [septenarius, Lat.] Consisting of seven.

Extolling, as Philo doth, the rare and singular effects of the septenary number.

Hakewill on Prov. p. 174.

Every controversy has seven questions belonging to it; though the order of nature seems too much neglected by a confinement to this septenary number. Watts.

SEPTEINARY. n. s. The number seven.

The days of men are cast up by septenaries, and every seventh year conceived to carry some altering character in temper of mind or body.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

These constitutions of Moses, that proceed so much upon a septenary, or number of seven, have no reason in the nature of the thing. Burnet.

SEPTENNIAL. n. s. [septennius, Lat.]

1. Lasting seven years.

The dreadful disorders of frequent elections have also necessitated a septennial instead of a triennial duration [of parliaments].

Burke on the Cause of the Discontents.

2. Happening once in seven years.

Being once dispensed with for his septennial visit, by a holy instrument from Petropolis, he resolved to govern them by subaltern ministers.

Howell, Voc. For.

SEPTENTRION. n. s. [French; septentrio, Lat.] The north.

Thou art as opposite to every good, As the antipodes are unto us,

Or as the south to the septentrion. Shaks. Hen. VI.

SEPTE'NTRION. n. s. [septentrionalis, Lat.] Northern.

Those septentrional inundations.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. (ed. 1605), sign. S. 2.

The Goths, and other septentrional nations.

Howell, Lett. ii. 59.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That screen'd the fruits of th' earth and seats of men

From cold septentrion blasts. Milton, P. R.

If the spring
Preceding should be destitute of rain,
Or blast septentrional with brushing wings

Sweep up the smoky mists and vapours damp,
Then woe to mortals. Philips.

SEPTE'NTRIONA' LITY. n. s. [from septentrional.] Northerliness.

SEPTE'NTRIONALLY. adv. [from septentrional.] Towards the north; northerly.

If they be powerfully excited, and equally let fall, they commonly sink down, and break the water, at that extreme whereto they were septentrionally excited. Brown.

TO SEPTE'NTRIONATE. v. n. [from septentrio, Lat.] To tend northerly.

Steel and good iron, never excited by the loadstone, septentrionate at one extreme, and australize at another. Brown.

SEPTICAL. n. s. [σηπτικός, Gr. septicus, Fr.] Having power to promote or produce putrefaction.

As a septic medicine, Galen commended the ashes of a salamander.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Cedar, — after the nature of septic and escharotick medicines, corrodes and consumes the flesh in a very short time, if applied to a living body; but, on the contrary, is a sovereign preservative for the same body the very moment it is deprived of life.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 272.

SEPTILATERAL. adj. [septem and lateris, Lat.] Having seven sides.

By an equal interval they make seven triangles, the bases whereof are the seven sides of a septilateral figure, described within a circle.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SEPTUAGINT. n. s. [septuaginta, Lat.] The old Greek version of the Old Testament, so called as being supposed the work of seventy-two interpreters.

Which way soever you try, you shall find the product great enough for the extent of this earth; and if you follow the septuagint chronology, it will still be far higher. Burnet.

SEPTUPLE. adj. [septuplex, Latin.] Seven times as much. A technical term.

SEPULCHRAL. adj. [sepulchral, Fr. sepulchralis, from sepulchrum, Lat.] Relating to burial; relating to the grave; monumental.

Whilst our souls negotiate there,

We like sepulchral statues lay;

All day the same our postures were,

And we said nothing all the day.

Mine eye hath found that said sepulchral rock,

That was the casket of Heaven's richest store.

Milton, Ode.

Sepulchral lies our holy walls to grace,

And new-year odes.

Pope, Dunciad.

SEPULCHRE. n. s. [sepulcre, Fr. sepulchrum, Lat.] A grave; a tomb.

To entail him and his heirs unto the crown,

What is it but to make thy sepulchre?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king.

Bacon.

There where the Virgin's Son his doctrine taught,

His miracles, and our redemption wrought;

Where I, by thee inspir'd, his praises sung,

And on his sepulchre my offering hung.

Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients.

Wilkins.

If not one common sepulchre contains

Our bodies, or one urn our last remains,

Yet Ceyx and Alcione shall join.

Dryden.

TO SEPULCHRE. v. a. [from the noun. It is accented on the second syllable by Shakespeare and Milton; on the first, more properly, by Jonson and Prior.] To bury; to entomb.

Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;

Or, at the least, in her's sepulchre thine.

I am glad to see that time survive,

Where merit is not sepulch'r'd alive;

Where good men's virtues tend to honours bring,

And not to dangers.

B. Jonson.

Thou so sepulch'r'd in such pomp dost lie,

That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

Milton, Ep. on Shaks.

Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,

And, deep surchard'd, by sandy mountains lie,

Obscurely sepulch'r'd.

Prior.

SEFULTURE. n. s. [sepulture, Fr. sepultura, Lat.] Interment; burial.

That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepultures a marble tomb of her own.

Brown.

Where we may royal sepulture prepare;

With speed to Meleinda bring relief,

Recall her spirits, and moderate her grief.

In England, sepulture, or burial' of the dead, may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased.

Ayliffe.

SEQUACIOUS. adj. [sequacis, Lat.]

1. Following; attendant.

Rather a sequacious and credulous easiness.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 111.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,

And trees uprooted left their place,

Sequacious of the lyre;

But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher:

When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,

An angel heard, and straight appear'd,

Mistaking earth for heaven.

Dryden.

Above those superstitious horrors that enslave

The fond sequacious herd, to mystick faith

And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few

The glorious stranger hail!

Thomson.

2. Ductile; pliant.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded.

Ray.

SEQUACIOUSNESS. n. s. [from sequacious.]

State of being sequacious.

This sequaciousness of people seems to be given governments, as a grateful acknowledgment of that peace, which under their good government their subjects enjoy.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653.) p. 37.

That servility and sequaciousness of conscience.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 181.

SEQUA'CITY. † n. s. [from sequax, Lat.]

1. Ductility; toughness.

Matter, whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeness, lensor, and sequacity.

Bacon, Nat. Hist. No. 900.

2. Act of following.

Liberty of judgement seemeth almost lost either in lazy or blind sequacity of other men's votes.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 207.

SE'QUEL. n. s. [sequela, Fr. sequela, Lat.]

1. Conclusion; succeeding part.

If black scandal or foul-faced reproach

Attend the sequel of your imposition,

Your mere enforcement shall acquaintance me.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor: but was he not also successful? True, but still he was poor: grant this, and you cannot keep off that unavoidable sequel in the next verse, the poor man's wisdom is despised.

South.

2. Consequence; event.

Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fail, or swerve, and who doth not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would be ruin both to itself and whatsoever dependeth on it?

Hooker.

In this he put two weights,

The sequel each of parting and of fight.

Milton, P. L.

3. Consequence inferred; consequentialness.

What sequel is there in this argument? An archdeacon is the chief deacon: ergo, he is only a deacon.

Whitgift.

SEQUENCE. † n. s. [sequence, old Fr. from sequor, Latin.]

1. Order of succession. An elegant word, but little used.

How art thou a king,

But by fair sequence and succession?

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

The inevitable sequences of sin and punishment.

Bp. Hall, Works, iii. 199.

2. Series; arrangement; method.

The cause proceedeth from a precedent sequence, and series of the seasons of the year.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SE'QUENT. † adj. [sequent, old Fr. sequens, Latin.]

1. Following; succeeding.

Let my trial be mine own confession:

Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,

Is all the grace I beg.

Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

Either I am

The forehorse in the sequent trace

That draw i' the sequent track.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

There he dies, and leaves his race

Growing into a nation; and now grown

Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks

To stop their overgrowth.

Milton, P. L.

2. Consequential.

SE'QUENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] A follower. Not in use.

Here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which accidentally miscarried.

Shakespeare.

TO SEQUE'STER. v. a. [sequestrer, Fr. sequester, Span. sequestro, low Lat.]

1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train?

Shakespeare.

To the which place a poor sequester'd stag,

That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,

Did come to languish.

Shaks. As you like it.

In shady bower,

More sacred and sequester'd, though but feign'd,

Pan or Sylvanus never slept.

Milton, P. L.

Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possess,

Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions bless,

Bear me, oh bear me to sequester'd scenes

Of bowry mazes, and surrounding greens.

Pope.

2. To put aside; to remove.

Although I had wholly sequestered my civil affairs, yet I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair.

Bacon.

3. To withdraw; to segregate.

A thing as seasonable in grief as in joy, as decent being added unto actions of greatest weight and solemnity, as being used when men most sequester themselves from action.

Hooker.

4. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others: as, his annuity is sequestered to pay his creditors.

5. To deprive of possessions.

It was his taylor and his cook, his fine fashions and his French ragous, which sequestered him; and, in a word, he came by his poverty as sinfully as some usually do by their riches.

South.

TO SEQUE'STER.  v. n.* To withdraw; to retire.

To sequester out of the world into Atlantick and Eutopian politics, which can never be drawn into use, will not mend our condition.

Milton, Areopagitica.

SEQUESTRABLE. adj. [from sequestrate.]

1. Subject to privation.

2. Capable of separation.

Hartshorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not uneasily sequestrable salt.

Boyle.

TO SEQUE'STRATE. v. n. To sequester; to separate.

In general contagions more perish for want of necessities than by the malignity of the disease, they being sequestered from mankind.

Arbutnot on Air.

SEQUESTRA'TION. n. s. [sequestration, Fr. from sequestrate.]

1. Separation; retirement.

His addition was to courses vain:

I never noted in him any study,

Any retirement, any sequestration

From open haunts and popularity.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a sequestration of a man's self from the noise of the world; for truth seems to be seen by eyes much fixt upon interior objects.

South.

2. Disunion; disjunction.

The metals remain unsevered, the fire only dividing the body into smaller particles, hindering rest and continuity, without any sequestration of elementary principles.

Boyle.

3. State of being set aside.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign, Before whose glory I was great in arms, This loathsome sequestration have I had.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.

If there be a single spot in the glebe more barren, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of sequestration.

Swift.

SE'QUESTRATOR. † n. s. [from sequestrate.]

One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.

I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators, and they have taken all from me.

Bp. Taylor.

By their sequestrators, men for the most part of insatiable hands and noted disloyalty, those orders were commonly disobeyed.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 3.

We have complained of armies, committees, sequestrators, triers, and decimators.

South, Serm. v. 97.

SERA'GLIO.† n. s. [Italian, perhaps of Oriental original. The g is lost in the pronunciation. Dr. Johnson.—Seraglio is properly the name of a large house or palace. "There are not many great houses in all the Morea: not above three deserve the name of seraglios, as they call palaces." Randolph's State of the Morea, or Peloponnesus, Oxford, 1686, p. 19. It is derived from the Pers. serai, a large hall or house. Hence the French serrail, which form (hitherto unnoticed) was formerly that in our own tongue, and not the Ital. serraglio. "I could add much more concerning the enormities of Rome and your serrals." Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. 1616, p. 174. "In that stately serrail he discerned a prince." Situation of Parad. 1683, p. 68. Cotgrave renders serrail, according to the vulgar notion of seraglio, "the palace wherein the Great Turke mueth up his concubines." A house of women kept for debauchery.

There is a great deal more solid content to be found in a constant course of well living, than in the voluptuousness of a seraglio. Norris.

SERAPH. n. s. [שראף] One of the orders of angels.

He is infinitely more remote in the real excellency of his nature, from the highest and perfectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most contemptible part of matter, and consequently must infinitely exceed what our narrow understandings can conceive of him. Locke.

As full, as perfect in vile man that mourns,

As the rapt seraph that adores and burns. Pope.

SERA'PHICAL.† adj. [seraphique, Fr. from SERA'PHICK. } seraph.]

1. Angelick; angelical.

Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of angelical purity, of perfect innocence, and seraphical fervour. Bp. Taylor.

2. Pure; refined from sensuality.

'Tis to the world a secret yet,

Whether the nymph, to please her swain,

Talks in a high romantic strain;

Or whether he at last descends,

To like with less seraphick ends. Swift.

SERAPHIM. n. s. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have s added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.

To these cherubim and seraphim continually do cry. Com. Prayer.

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand. Is. vi. 6.

SERE. adj. [reapran, Sax. to dry.] Dry; withered; no longer green. See SEAR.

The muses, that were wont green bays to wear,
Now bringen bitter elder-branches seré. Spenser.

He is deformed, crooked, old and seré,
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where;
Vicious, ungente. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

Ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gath'rd beams,
Reflected, may with matter seré foment.

Milton, P. L.

They seré wood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke.

Dryden.

On a seré branch,
Low bending to the bank, I sat me down,
Musing and still. Roué, Royal Convert.

SERE.† n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except in this passage, the meaning. Can it come, like sheers, from reynan, Sax. to cut? Dr. Johnson.—Certainly not: it is the old Fr. serre, "a hawk's talon," Cotgrave; from serer, to gripe, to close, or shut up. Mr. Malone has made a similar remark.] Claw; talon.

Two eagles,
That, mounted on the winds, together still
Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the council, over every brow
Shook their thick wings, and threatening death's cold fears,

Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager seres.
Chapman.

SERENA'DE. n. s. [serenade, Fr. serenata, Ital. whence, in Milton, serenate, from serenus, Latin, the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights.] Musick or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.

Mixt dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
Or serenade, which the starv'd lover sings
To his proud fair; best quitted with disdain.

Milton, P. L.

Foolish swallow, what dost thou
So often at my window do,
With thy tuneless serenade? Cowley.
Shall I the neighbours' nightly rest invade,
At her deaf doors, with some vile serenade? Dryden.

Will fancies he never should have been the man
He is, had not he broke windows, and disturbed honest people with his midnight serenades, when he was a young fellow. Addison.

To SERENA'DE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with nocturnal musick.

He continued to serenade her every morning, till the queen was charmed with his harmony. Spectator.

To SERENA'DE.* v. n. To perform a serenade.

A man might as well serenade in Greenland as in our region. Tatler, No. 222.

SERENE.† adj. [seren, Fr. serenus, Lat.]

1. Calm; placid; quiet.

Spirits live inspher'd

In regions mild, of calm and serene air.

Milton, Comus.

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky.

Pope.

2. Unruffled; undisturbed; even of temper; peaceful or calm of mind; shewing a calm mind.

There wanted yet a creature might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.

Exciting them, by a due remembrance of all that is past, unto future circumspection, and a serene expectation of the future life. Grey, Cosmol.

3. Applied as a title of respect.

To the most serene Prince Leopold, Archduke of Austria, &c. Milton, Letters of State.

Gutta SERENA. n. s. An obstruction in the optick nerve.

These eyes that roll in vain,
So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs.

Milton, P. L.

SERENE.† n. s. [seren, or serain, Fr. "fair, clear, calm weather; also the harmful dews of some summer's evenings; also the fresh cool air of the evening." Cotgrave.] A calm damp evening.

Where ever death doth please to appear,
Seas, serenes, swords, shot, sickness, all are there.
B. Jonson, Epigr. 32.

The fogs and the serene offend us.

Daniel, Queen's Arcadia.

He hath felt the excess of heat, the dangerous serains. Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 212.

To SERENE.† v. a. [serener, Fr. sereno, Lat.]

1. To calm; to quiet.

She, where she passes, makes the wind to lye
With gentle motion, and serenes the skye.

Fanshau, Lusiad, (1655), p. 178.

Still let my song a nobler note assume,
And sing the effusive force of Spring on man,
When heaven and earth, as if contending, vie
To raise his being, and serene his soul.

Thomson, Spring.

2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.

Take care

Thy muddy beverage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baser ropy lees. Philips.

SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]

1. Calmly; quietly.

The setting sun now shone serenely bright. Pope.

2. With unruffled temper; coolly.

Whatever practical rule is generally broken, cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men would, without shame or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair:
Soft fell her words as flew the air. Prior.

SERENENESS.† n. s. [from serene.] Serenity.

The sereness of a healthful conscience.

Feltham, Res. i. 5.

Those sweet waters of heaven, and those balmy drops of fatness wherewith it was wont to be sprinkled, are restrained, and have given place to unwholesome sereness and killing vapours.

Seasonable Serm. (1644), p. 15.

SERENITUDE. n. s. [from serene.] Calmness; coolness of mind. Not in use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatic humour will flow quietude and serenitude in the affections. Wolton.

SERENITY.† n. s. [serenité, Fr. from serenus, Lat.]

1. Calmness; mild temperature.

In the constitution of a perpetual equinox, the best part of the globe would be desolate; and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reason to expect that it would constantly enjoy that admir'd calm and serenity.

Pure serenity apace

Induces thought, and contemplation still. Thomson.

2. Peace; quietness; not disturbance.

A general peace and serenity newly succeeded a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.

3. Evenness of temper; coolness of mind.

I cannot see how any men should ever transgress those moral rules, with confidence and serenity, were they innate, and stamped upon their minds. Locke.

4. Highness; title of respect.

The sentence of that court, now sent to your serenity, together with these letters, positively declares, &c. Milton to Fr. Leopold, Letters of State.
SERF.* n. s. [serf, old Fr. servus, Lat.] A slave. Not in use.

A great part of them were serfs, and lived in a state of absolute slavery or villinage.

Hume, Hist. App. II. after the Life of K. John.

SERGE. n. s. [serge, French; xerga, Spanish, which Covarruvias derives from arica, Arabic; Skinner from serge, German, a mat.] A kind of woollen cloth.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kersey or serge, and another into arras. Hale.

Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,
 And bid broad-cloths and serges grow. Gay.

SERJEANCY.* n. s. [from serjeant.] The office of a serjeant at law. See SERJEANT.

A call of serjeants was splendidly solemnized, May 6, 1623, who on that day made their appearance before the lord keeper, who congratulated their adoption to that title of serjeancy.

Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 110.

SERJEANT. n. s. [sergent, French; sergente, Ital. from servienti, Latin. Thus the lord keeper Williams, in his address to the serjeants at law, May 6, 1623, says to them, "Your name is a name of reverence, though you are styled servants; for you are the principal of all that practise in the courts of law; servants, that is, officers preferred above all ranks of pleaders: for every thing must be ruled by a gradual subordination." Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 111.]

1. An officer whose business it is to execute the commands of magistrates.

Had I but time, as this fell serjeant, Death,
 Is strict in his arrest, oh! I could tell. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

When it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let these men go. Acts, xvi. 35.

2. A petty officer in the army.

This is the serjeant,
 Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. A lawyer of the highest rank under a judge.

None should be made serjeants, but such as probably might be held fit to be judges afterwards. Bacon.

4. It is a title given to some of the king's servants: as, serjeant chirurgions; that is a chirurgion servant to the king.

SERJEANTRY. n. s. [from serjeant.]

Grand serjeantry is that where one holdeth lands of the king by service, which he ought to do in his own person unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his spear, or to lead his host, or to be his marshal, or to blow a horn, when he seeth his enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four seas, or else to do it himself; or to bear the king's sword before him at his coronation, or on that day to be his sewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit serjeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly some small thing toward his wars; as a sword, dagger, bow, knife, spear, pair of gloves of mail, a pair of spurs, or such like. Cowel.

SERJEANTSHIP. n. s. [from serjeant.] The office of a serjeant.

SERIES. n. s. [serie, Fr. series, Lat.]

1. Sequence; order.

Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text as it lies in the series of the epistle. Ward of Infidelity.

The chasms of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series. Pope.

2. Succession; course.

This is the series of perpetual woe,
 Which thou, alas! and thine are born to know. Pope.

SERIOUS. adj. [serieux, Fr. serius, Lat.]

1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behaviour.

Ah! my friends! while we laugh, all things are serious round about us: God is serious, who exerciseth patience towards us; Christ is serious, who shed his blood for us; the Holy Ghost is serious, who striveth against the obstinacy of our hearts; the Holy Scriptures bring to our ears the most serious things in the world; the Holy Sacraments represent the most serious and awful matters; the whole creation is serious in serving God, and us; all that are in heaven or hell are serious: how then can we be gay? To give these excellent words their full force, it should be known that they came not from the priesthood, but the court; and from a courtier as eminent as England ever boasted. Young.

2. Important; weighty; not trifling.

I'll hence to London on a serious matter. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There's nothing serious in mortality;
 All is but toys. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

SERIOUSLY. adv. [from serious.] Gravely; solemnly; in earnest; without levity.

It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what horror and confusion must needs surprise that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another. South.

All laugh'd to find
 Unthinking plainness so o'erpress'd their mind,
 That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd
 To keep their oaths, and to believe a God. Dryden.

Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Arnobius, tell us, that this martyrdom first of all made them seriously inquisitive into that religion, which could endure the mind with so much strength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors. Addison.

SERIOUSNESS. n. s. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it. Atterbury, Sermon.

The youth was received at the door by a servant, who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day. Addison, Spect.

SERMOCINATION.† n. s. [sermocinatio, Latin.] The act or practice of making speeches.

The orator conveyeth his speech either to propopæia, sermocination, &c.

Pencham, Garden of Eloquence, (1577.) Q. i.
 No sermocinations of ironmongers, felt-makers, cobblers, broom-men! By. Hall, Free Prisoner.

SERMOCINATOR. n. s. [sermocinator, Lat.] A preacher; a speechmaker.

These obtrusive sermocinators make easy impression upon the minds of the vulgar. Howell.

SERMON. n. s. [sermon, Fr. sermo, Lat.]

A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.

As for our sermons, be they never so sound and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguously termed his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed. Hooker.

This our life, exempt from publick haunt,
 Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,

Sermons in stones, and good in every thing. Shakespeare.

Sermons he heard, yet not so many
 As left no time to practise any:
 He heard them reverently, and then
 His practice preach'd them o'er again. Crashaw.

Many, while they have preached Christ in their sermons, have read a lecture of atheism in their practice. South.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;

A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.

TO SERMON. v. a. [sermoner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To discourse as in a sermon.

Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermoned at large, than thus cloudily inwrapped in allegorical devices. Spenser.

2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.

Come, sermon me no farther:
 No villanous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart. Shakespeare, Timon.

TO SERMON.* v. n. To compose or deliver a sermon.

A weekly charge of sermoning. Milton, Areopagitica.

SERMONING.* n. s. Discourse; instruction; advice; persuasion.

I trow there nedeth little sermoning
 To make you assenten to this thing. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

These assiduous prayers, these frequent sermonings. By. Hall, Rem. p. 280.

Canons and quaint sermonings, interlined with barbarous Latin. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

TO SERMONIZE.* v. n. [from sermon.]

1. To preach.

Under a pretence of sermonizing, they have cast off God's solemn worship on this day: — the primitive church never thought preaching the sole work of the Lord's day.

By. Nicholson on the Catechism, (1662.) p. 108.

2. To inculcate rigid rules.

If you consider them as the dictates of a morose and sermonizing father, I am sure they will be not only unattended to, but unread. Ld. Chesterfield.

SERMOUNTAIN, or Selsi.† n. s. [sermountain, Fr. Cotgrave; sileu, Lat.] A plant.

SERO'SITY. n. s. [serosité, Fr.] Thin or watery part of the blood.

In these the salt and lixiviated serosity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds. Brown.

The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing and breathing, proceeds from a serosity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, adenotose, or schirrous, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbutnot.

SEROUS. adj. [sereux, French; serosus, Latin.]

1. Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the grumous or red part.

2. Adapted to the serum.

This disease is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a dropsy by a dilatation of the serous vessels, as that in the ovarium.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

SERPENT.† n. s. [serpens, Latin.]

1. An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous. They are divided into two kinds: the viper, which brings young; and the snake, that lays eggs.

She was arrayed all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water fill'd up to the height;
In which a serpent did himself enfold,
That horror made to all that did behold.

Spenser, F. G.

She struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent-like, upon the very heart.

They, or under-ground, or circuit wide,
With serpent-error wandering, found their way.

Milton, P. L.

The chief I challeng'd: he whose practis'd wit
Knew all the serpent-mazes of deceit,
Eludes my search.

Pope, Odys.

2. A sort of firework.

In fireworks give him leave to vent his spite,
These are the only serpents he can write.

Dryden.

3. A musical instrument, serving as a bass in concerts of wind music.

SERPENTINE.† adj. [serpentin, old Fr. serpentinus, Lat. from serpent.]

1. Resembling a serpent.

I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from so serpentine a companion as I am.

Sidney.

This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock.

Brown.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine, may shew
Thy inward fraud.

Milton, P. L.

They became saved from those destructive sins, which from the devil's serpentine instigations they had incurred.

Barrow, Sermon i. 430.

The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have, I know not what of life and seeming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and serpent.

Dryden.

2. Winding like a serpent; anfractuons.

Now can the sun

Perfect a circle, or maintain his way

One inch direct; but where he rose to-day

He comes no more, but with a cozening line
Steals by that point, and so is serpentine.

Donne.

His hand the adorned firmament display'd,
Those serpentine, yet constant motions made.

Sandys.

How many spacious countries does the Rhine,
In winding banks, and mazes serpentine,
Traverse, before he splits in Belgia's plain,
And, lost in sand, creeps to the German main?

Blackmore.

To SERRPENTINE.* v. n. [from the adjective.] To wind like a serpent; to meander.

In those fair vales by nature form'd to please,
Where Guadalquivir *serpentin*es with ease.

tined* in view for two or three miles.

Ld. Lyttelton.

SERPENTINE. n. s. [dracantium.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

SERPENTINE Stone. n. s.

There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. The one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black ophites; another, called the white ophites, was green also, but variegated with spots of white: the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected.

Hill, Mat. Med.

Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that shall be infused therein for four-and-twenty hours, the taste and operation of the spaw-water, and is very medicinally for the cure of the spleen and gravel.

Wotton.

To SERRPENTIZE.* v. n. [from serpent.]
To meander; to serpentine.

Between these hills, in the richest of valleys, the Lune *serpentin*es for many a mile, and comes forth people, and clear, through a well wooded and richly pastured fore-ground.

Mason, Note on Gray's Letters.

SERPENT'S-Tongue. n. s. [ophioglosson.]
An herb.

Ainsworth.

serpiginous, and was covered with white scales.

Wiceman.

SERPIGO. n. s. [Latin.] A kind of tetter.

For thy own bowels, which do call thee sire,
Do surce the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner.

Shakspeare.

She had a node with pains on her right leg, and a serpigo on her right hand.

Wiceman.

To SERR. v. a. [serrer, Fr.] To drive hard together; to crowd into a little space. Not received into use, nor deserving reception.

The frowning and knitting of the brows is a gathering or serring of the spirits, to resist in some measure; and also this knitting will follow upon earnest studying, though it be without dislike.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Heat attenuates and sends forth the spirit of a body, and upon that the more gross parts contract and serr themselves together.

Bacon.

SERRATE. } adj. [serratus, Latin.]
SERRATED. } Formed with jags or indentures like the edge of a saw.

All that have serrate teeth are carnivorous. Ray.
The common heron hath long legs for wading a long neck answerable thereto to reach prey, a wide throat to pouch it, and long toes with strong hooked talons, one of which is remarkably serrate on the edge.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

This stick is usually knotted, and always armed:
one of them with a curious shark's tooth near an inch long, and indented or serrated on both edges:
a scurvy weapon.

Grew.

SERRATION. n. s. [from serra, Latin.]
Formation in the shape of a saw.

SERRATURE. n. s. [from serra, Lat.] Indenture like teeth of saws.

These are serrated on the edges; but the serratures are deeper and grosser than in any of the rest.

Woodward.

To SERRY.† v. a. [serrer, French; serrato, Ital. Dr. Johnson.—Sera is the Cornish term for lock, or shut up.] To press close; to drive hard together. For serry Bacon uses serr; but neither serr, nor serry, is received.

With them rose

A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appear'd, and serried shields in thick array.

Milton, P. L.

Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout;
Nor serv'd it to relax their serried files.

Milton, P. L.

SERVANT. n. s. [servant, French; servus,
Latin.]

1. One who attends another, and acts at his command. The correlative of master. Used of man or woman.

We are one in fortune; both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most.

Shakspeare.

I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

He disdain'd not

Thenceforth the form of servant to assume.

Milton.

For master or for servant here to call
Was all alike, where only two were all.

Dryden.

2. One in a state of subjection. Unusual.

Being unprepar'd,

Our will became the servant to defect,
Which else should free have wrong'd.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. A word of civility used to superiors or equals.

This subjection, due from all men to all men, is something more than the compliment of course, when our betters tell us they are our humble servants, but understand us to be their slaves.

Swift.

To SERVANT. v. a. [from the noun.] To subject. Not in use.

My affairs

Are servanted to others: though I owe
My revenge properly, remission lies
In Volscian breasts.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

To SERVE. v. a. [servir, French; servio,
Latin.]

1. To work for.

Because thou art my brother, shouldst thou therefore serve me for nought? Gen. xxix. 15.

2. To attend at command.

A goddess among gods ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train.

Milton, P. L.

3. To obey servilely or meanly.

When wealthy, shew thy wisdom not to be
To wealth a servant, but make wealth serve thee.

Denham.

4. To supply with food ceremoniously.

Others, pamper'd in their shameless pride,
Are serv'd in plate, and in their chariots ride.

Dryden.

5. To bring meat as a menial attendant:
with in or up: with in, as meat dress'd in the kitchen is brought into another room; with up, as the room of repast is commonly higher than the kitchen.

Bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.
Soon after our dinner was serv'd in, which was right good viands, both for bread and meat: we had also drink of three sorts, all wholesome and good.

Bacon.

Besmeared with the horrid juice of sepia, they danced a little in phantastic postures, retired a while, and then returned *serv*ing up a banquet as at solemn funerals.

Ep. Taylor.

Some part he roasts; then *serv*es it up so drest,
And bids me welcome to this humble feast:
Mov'd with disdain,
I with avenging flames the palace burn'd.

Dryden.

The same mess should be serv'd up again for supper, and breakfast next morning.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

6. To be subservient or subordinate to.

Bodies bright and greater should not serve
The less not bright. Milton.

They that serve the city shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel. Ezek. xlviii. 19.

8. To obey in military actions: as, he served the king in three campaigns.

9. To be sufficient to.

If any subject, interest, or fancy has recommended, their reasoning is after their fashion; it serves their turn. Locke.

10. To be of use to; to assist; to promote.

When a storm of a sad mischance beats upon our spirits, turn it into some advantage, by observing where it can serve another end, either of religion or prudence. Bp. Taylor.

11. To help by good offices.

Shall he thus serve his country, and the muse
The tribute of her just applause refuse? Tate.

12. To comply with; to submit to.

They think herein we serve the time, because thereby we either hold or seek preferment. Hooker.

13. To satisfy; to content.

As the former empty plea served the sottish Jews, this equally serves these to put them into a fool's paradise, by feeding their hopes, without changing their lives. South.

14. To stand instead of any thing to one.

One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine,
And is at once their vinegar and wine. Pope.

15. [Se servir de, French.] To SERVE himself of. To make use of. A mere Gallicism.

- A complete brave man must know solidly the main end he is in the world for; and withal how to serve himself of the divine's high contemplations, of the metaphysician's subtle speculations, and of the natural philosopher's minute observations. Digby on the Soul.

- They would serve themselves of this form.

I will serve myself of this concession. Chillingworth.

- It is much more easy for men to serve their own ends of those principles, which they do not put into men, but find there. Tillotson.

- If they elevate themselves, 'tis only to fall from a higher place, because they serve themselves of other men's wings, neither understanding their use nor virtue. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

16. To treat; to require: in an ill sense:

as, he served me ungratefully.

17. [In divinity.] To worship the Supreme Being.

- Matters hit—leave thou to God; Him serve and fear. Milton.

said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? St. Luke, x. 40.

4. To engage in the duties of war under command.

Both more or less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Many noble gentlemen came out of all parts of Italy, who had before been great commanders, but now served as private gentlemen without pay.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

5. To produce the end desired.

The look bewrayed, that as she used these ornaments, not for herself, but to prevail with another, so she feared that all would not serve. Sidney.

6. To be sufficient for a purpose.

Take it, she said; and when your needs require,
This little brand will serve to light your fire.

7. To suit; to be convenient.

We have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve to shew in articles.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

As occasion serves, this noble queen

And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Read that; 'tis with the royal signet sign'd,
And given me by the king, when time should serve,

To be perus'd by you. Dryden, Span. Friar.

8. To conduce; to be of use.

Churches, as every thing else, receive their chief perfection from the end whereunto they serve.

Hooker.

Our speech to worldly superiors we frame in such sort as serveth best to inform and persuade the minds of them, who otherwise neither could nor would greatly regard our necessities. Hooker.

Who lessens thee, against his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might. Milton.

First investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs which serve for articulation, and the variety of matter to which those articulations are severally applied. Holder.

Fashion is, for the most part, nothing but the ostentation of riches; and therefore the high price of what serves to that, rather increases than lessens its vent. Locke.

Our victory only served to lead us on to further visionary prospects. Swift.

9. To officiate or minister: as, he served at the publick dinner.

- SERVER.* n. s. [from serve.]

The banish'd Kent, who in disguise
Follow'd his king, and did him service
Improper for a slave. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Attendance of a servant.

Both fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most:

A most unnatural and faithless service. Shaksp.

3. Place; office of a servant.

I have served prince Florizel; but now I am out of service. Shakespeare.

By oppressing and betraying me,
Thou might'st have sooner got another service.

These that accuse him are a yoke of his discarded men; very rogues, now they be out of service. Shakespeare.

A court, properly a fair, the end of it trade and gain; for none would go to service that thinks he has enough to live well of himself. Temple.

4. Any thing done by way of duty to a superiour.

That service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd. Shakespeare, Cymb.

This poem was the last piece of service I did for my master king Charles. Dryden.

5. Attendance on any superiour.

Madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dutieous service.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Riches gotten by service, tho' it be of the best rise, yet when gotten by flattery, may be placed amongst the worst. Bacon.

6. Profession of respect uttered or sent.

I am a woman lacking wit;
To make a seemly answer to such persons;
Pray do my service to his majesty.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

7. Obedience; submission.

Thou, Nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Shaks. K. Lear.

God requires no man's service upon hard and unreasonable terms. Tillotson, Serm.

8. Act on the performance of which possession depends.

Although they built castles and made freeholders, yet were there no tenures and services reserved to the crown; but the lords drew all the respect and dependency of the common people unto themselves. Davies on Ireland.

9. Actual duty; office.

The order of human society cannot be preserved, nor the services requisite to the support of it be supplied, without a distinction of stations, and a long subordination of offices. Rogers.

10. Employment; business.

If stations of power and trust were constantly made the rewards of virtue, men of great abilities would endeavour to excel in the duties of a religious life, in order to qualify themselves for publick service. Swift.

11. Military duty.

When he cometh to experience of service abroad, or is put to a piece or pike, he maketh a worthy soldier. Spenser.

At the parliament at Oxford his youth and want of experience in sea-service had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices of publick liberty were yet set open.

Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

12. A military achievement.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where services were done, at such and such a breach.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

13. Purpose; use.

All the vessels of the king's house are not for uses of honour; some be common stuff, and for mean services, yet profitable. Spelman.

14. Useful office; advantage conferred.

The stork's plea, when taken in a net, was the service she did in picking up venomous creatures.

L'Estrange.

The clergy prevent themselves from doing much service to religion, by affecting so much to converse with each other, and caring so little to mingle with the laity. Swift.

Gentle streams visit populous towns in their course, and are at once of ornament and service to them. Pope.

That service may really be done, the medicine must be given in larger quantities. Mead.

15. Favour.

To thee a woman's services are due,
My fool usurps my body. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

16. Publick office of devotion.

According to this form of theirs, it must stand for a rule, no sermon, no service. Hooker.

If that very service of God in the Jewish synagogues, which our Lord did approve and sanctify with his own presence, had so large portions of the law and prophets, together with the many prayers and psalms read day by day, as equal in a manner the length of ours, and yet in that respect was never thought to deserve blame; is it now an offence that the like measure of time is bestowed in the like manner? Hooker.

I know no necessity why private and single abilities should quite jumble out and deprive the church of the joint abilities and concurrent gifts of many learned and godly men, such as the composers of the service-book were. King Charles.

The congregation was discomposed, and divine service broken off. Watts.

17. A particular portion of divine service sung in cathedrals, or churches.

Those hymns which church-musicians call by the technical name of services, by which they mean the Te Deum, Magnificat, &c. which the rubrick appoints to be sung after the first and second lessons at morning and evening prayer.

Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 141.

18. Course; order of dishes.

Cleopatra made Anthony a supper sumptuous and royal; howbeit there was no extraordinary service seen on the board. Hakewill.

19. A tree and fruit. [serbus, Latin.]

The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose, whose flowercup afterwards becomes a fruit shaped like a pear or medlar: to which must be added, pennated leaves like that of the ash. Miller.

October is drawn in a garment of yellow and carnation; in his left hand a basket of services, medlars, and other fruits that ripen late. Penclum.

- SE'RVICABLE. adj. [servissable, old Fr. from service.]

1. Active; diligent; officious.

He was sent to the king's court, with letters from that officer, containing his own servicable diligence in discovering so great a personage; adding withal more than was true of his conjectures. Sidney.

I know thee well, a serviceable villain; As duteous to the vices of thy mistress As badness could desire. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Useful; beneficial.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, and to make them, in publick affairs, the more serviceable; governors the apter to rule with conscience; inferiors, for conscience sake, the willinger to obey. Hooker.

So your father charg'd me at our parting, Be serviceable to my son. Shakespeare.

His own inclinations were to confine himself to his own business, and be serviceable to religion and learning. Atterbury.

A book to justify the revolution, archbishop Tillotson recommended to the king as the most serviceable treatise that could have been published then. Swift.

What, besides this unhappy servility to custom, can possibly reconcile men that own Christianity to a practice widely distant from it? Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Meanness; dependance; baseness.

3. Submission from fear.

The angels and demons, those by their subservency, and these by the servility of their obedience, manifestly declared Christ and his apostles to be vested with an authority derived from their Lord. West.

4. Slavery; the condition of a slave.

To be a queen in bondage, is more vile Than is a slave in base servility; For princes should be free. Shaks. Hen. VI.

- SE'RVING-MAID.* n. s. [serve and maid.]

A female servant.

They never acknowledged her mistress-servant over them, or themselves to be her servant-maids.

Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

- SE'RVING-MAN. n. s. [serve and man.]

A menial servant.

Your niece did more favours to the duke's servant-man, than ever she bestowed on me. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Just in the nick; the cook knock'd thrice, And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey; Each servant-man, with dish in hand,

March'd boldly up, like our train'd band,

Presented, and away. Suckling.

With Dennis you did ne'er combine, Not you, to steal your master's wine; Except a bottle, now and then,

To welcome brother servant-man. Swift.

- SE'RVITOR.† n. s. [serviteur, French.]

1. Servant; attendant. A word obsolete.

This workman, whose servitor Nature is, being only one, the Heathens imagining to be more, gave him in the sky the name of Jupiter; in the air, of Juno; in the water, of Neptune; in the earth, of Vesta; and Ceres. Hooker.

Thus are poor servitors, When others sleep upon their quiet beds, Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold. Shakespeare.

Fearful commenting

Is laden servitor to dull delay; Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary. Shakespeare.

4. One of the lowest order in the university of Oxford; similar to the sizer in that of Cambridge.

His learning is much of a size with his birth and education; no more of either than what a poor hungry servitor can be expected to bring with him from his college. Swift.

Servitors (or sizers as they are called in Cambridge) were probably appointed when colleges were first established, and when there was a scarcity of fit persons to supply the learned professions. Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 28.

- SE'RVITORSHIP.* n. s. Office of a servitor.

Dr. Johnson, by his interest with Dr. Adams, master of Pembroke College, Oxford, where he was educated for some time, obtained a servitorship for young M^r Aulay.

Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

- SE'RVITUDE. n. s. [servitude, Fr. servitus, Lat.]

1. Slavery; state of a slave; dependance.

Aristotle speaketh of men, whom nature hath framed for the state of servitude, saying, They have reason so far forth as to conceive when others direct them. Hooker.

You would have sold your king to slaughter, His princes and his peers to servitude,

His subjects to oppression and contempt. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Unjustly thou deprav'st it with the name Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains,

Or nature: God and nature bid the same, When he who rules is worstiest. Milton.

Tho' it is necessary, that some persons in the world should be in love with a splendid servitude, yet certainly they must be much beholding to their own fancy, that they can be pleased at it; for he that rises up early, and goes to bed late, only to receive addresses, is really as much abridged in his freedom, as he that waits to present one. South.

2. Servants collectively. Not in use.

After him a cumbrous train Of herds, and flocks, and numerous servitude. Milton, P. L.

- SE'RUN. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The thin and watery part that separates from the rest in any liquor, as in milk the whey from the cream.

2. The part of the blood, which in coagulation separates from the grume.

Blood is the most universal juice in an animal body: the red part of it differs from the serum from the lymph, the lymph from the nervous juice, and that from the several other humours separated in the glands. Arbuthnot.

- SE'SAME.* n. s. [sesame, Fr. sesama, Lat. σάμνα, Gr.] A white grain or corn SESQUIALTER. } adj. [sesquialtere, Fr. SESQUIALTERAL.] } sesquialter, Lat.] In geometry, is a ratio, where one quantity or number contains another once and half as much more, as 6 and 9. Dict.

In all the revolutions of the planets about the sun, and of the secondary planets about the primary ones, the periodical times are in a sesquialter proportion to the mean distance. Cheyne.

As the six primary planets revolve about the sun, so the secondary ones are moved about them in the same sesquialter proportion of their periodical motions to their orbs. Bentley.

SESQUIPEDAL. } adj. [sesquipedalis, SESQUIPEDALIAN.] } Lat.] Containing a foot and a half.

As for my own part, I am but a sesquipedal, having only six foot and a half of stature. Addison, Guardian.

Hast thou ever measured the gigantic Ethiopian, whose stature is above eight cubits high, or the sesquipedalian pigny? Arbutnot and Pope.

SE'SQUIPPLICATE. adj. [In mathematics.] Is the proportion one quantity or number has to another, in the ratio of one and a half to one.

The periodical times of the planets are in sesquipedal proportion, and not a duplicate proportion of the distances from the centre or the radii; and consequently the planets cannot be carried about by an harmonically circulating fluid. Cheyne, Phil. Prim.

SE'SQUITERTIAN. [In mathematics.] Having such a ratio, as that one quantity or number contains another once and one third part more; as between 6 and 8. Dict.

SESS. n. s. [for assess, cess, or cense.] Rate; cess charged; tax.

His army was so ill paid and governed, as the English suffered more damage by the sess of his soldiers than they gained profit or security by abating the pride of their enemies. Davies, Hist. of Ireland.

SE'SSION. n. s. [session, Fr. sessio, Lat.]

1. The act of sitting.

He hath as man, not as God only, a supreme dominion over quick and dead; for so much his ascension into heaven, and his session at the right hand of God, do import. Hooker.

Many, tho' they concede a table-gesture, will hardly allow this usual way of session. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A stated assembly of magistrates or senators.

They are ready to appear Where you shall hold your session. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Summon a session, that we may arraign Our most disloyal lady. Shakespeare.

Call'd to council all the Achaean states, Nor herald sworn the session to proclaim. Pope, Odys.

3. The space for which an assembly sits, without intermission or recess.

It was contrary to the course of parliament, that any bill that had been rejected should be again preferred the same session. Clarendon.

The second Nicene council affords us plentiful assistance, in the first session, wherein the pope's vicar declares that Meletius was ordained by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned. Stillingfleet.

Many decrees are enacted, which at the next session are repealed. Norris.

4. A meeting of justices; as the sessions of the peace.

SESS-POOL. * n. s. An excavation in the ground for receiving foul water. Brockett's N. C. Words. Mr. B. adds, that he has not found this word in any dictionary. It is certainly an expression used in other places; but I can give no further illustration of it.

SE'STERCE. † n. s. [sesterce, Fr. sestertium, Latin.]

1. Among the Romans, a sum of about 8l. 1s. 5d. half-penny sterling. Dict. The sestertium contained a thousand sesterti, about 7l. 16s. 3d. of our money. We do not find it in any ancient author in the singular number, as now it is used, but very often meet with it in the plural, though with the same signification. In reckoning by sesterces, the Romans had an art. Kennet.

Several of them would rather chuse a sum in sesterces, than in pounds sterling. Addison, on Med.

2. A Roman silver and also copper coin.

Suffer him not to droop in prospect of a player, a rogue, a stager; put twenty into his hand, twenty sesterces I mean. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Love call'd i' to haste The son of Maia with severe decree, To kill the keeper, and to set her free. Dryden.

If such a tradition were at any time endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment. Tillotson.

When the father looks sour on the child, every body else should put on the same coldness, till forgiveness asked, and a reformation of his fault has set him right again, and restored him to his former credit. Locke on Education.

His practice must by no means cross his precepts, unless he intend to set him wrong. Locke on Education.

If the fear of absolute and irresistible power set it on upon the mind, the idea is likely to sink the deeper. Locke.

When he has once chosen it, it raises desire that proportionably gives him uneasiness which determines his will, and sets him at work in pursuit of his choice, on all occasions. Locke.

This river, When nature's self lay ready to expire, Quench'd the dire flame that set the world on fire. Addison.

A couple of lovers agreed at parting, to set aside one half hour in the day to think of each other. Addison.

Your fortunes place you far above the necessity of learning, but nothing can set you above the ornament of it. Felton.

Their first movement and impressed motions demand the impulse of an almighty hand to set them agoing. Cheyne.

That the wheels were but small, may be guessed from a custom they have of taking them off, and setting them on. Pope.

Be frequent in setting such causes at work, whose effects you desire to know. Watts.

3. To make motionless; to fix immovably.

Struck with the sight, inanimate she seems, Set are her eyes, and motionless her limbs. Garth.

4. To fix; to state by some rule.

Hereon the prompter falls to flat railing in the bitterest terms; which the gentleman with a set gesture and countenance still soberly related, until the ordinary, driven at last into a mad rage, was fain to give over.

The town of Bern has handsome fountains planted, at set distances, from one end of the streets to the other.

5. To regulate; to adjust.

In court they determine the king's good by his desires, which is a kind of setting the sun by the dial.

God bears a different respect to places set apart and consecrated to his worship, to what he bears to places designed to common uses.

Our palates grow into a liking of the seasoning and cookery, which by custom they are set to.

He rules the church's blest dominions, And sets men's faith by his opinions.

Against experience he believes, He argues against demonstration; Pleas'd when his reason he deceives, And sets his judgment by his passion.

6. To fit to musick; to adapt with notes.

Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute.

Grief he tames that fetters it in verse;

But when I have done so, Some man, his art or voice to show, Doth set and sing my pain; And by delighting many, frees again Grief, which verse did restrain.

I had one day set the hundredth psalm, and was singing the first line, in order to put the congregation into the tune.

7. To plant, not sow.

Whatsoever fruit useth to be set upon a root or a slip, if it be sown, will degenerate.

I prostrate fell, To shrubs and plants my vile devotion paid, And set the bearded leek to which I pray'd.

8. To intersperse or variegate with any thing.

As with stars, their bodies all And wings were set with eyes.

High on their heads, with jewels richly set, Each lady wore a radiant coronet.

The body is smooth on that end, and on that 'tis set with ridges round the point.

9. To reduce from a fractured or dislocated state.

Can honour set to a leg? no: or an arm? no: honour hath no skill in surgery then? no.

Considering what an orderly life I had led, I only commanded that my arm and leg should be set, and my body anointed with oil.

The fracture was of both the foci of the left leg: he had been in great pain from the time of the setting.

Credit is gained by course of time, and seldom recovers a strain; but if broken, is never well set again.

10. To fix the affection; to determine the thoughts.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.

They should set their hope in God, and not forget his works.

Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, the heart of men is fully set in them to do evil.

Some I found wond'rous harsh, Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite.

Set not thy heart Thus overfond on that which is not thine.

When we are well, our hearts are set, Which way we care not, to be rich or great.

Our hearts are so much set upon the value of the benefits received, that we never think of the bestower.

These bubbles of the shallowest, emptiest sorrow,

Which children vent for toys, and women rain For any trifle their fond hearts are set on.

Should we set our hearts only upon these things, and be able to taste no pleasure but what is sensual, we must be extremely miserable when we come unto the other world, because we should meet with nothing to entertain ourselves.

No sooner is one action dispatched, which we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work.

Minds, altogether set on trade and profit, often contract a certain narrowness of temper.

Men take an ill-natured pleasure in disappointing us in what our hearts are most set upon.

An Englishman, who has any degree of reflection, cannot be better awakened to a sense of religion in general, than by observing how the minds of all mankind are set upon this important point, and how every nation is attentive to the great business of their being.

I am much concerned when I see young gentlemen of fortune so wholly set upon pleasures, that they neglect all improvements in wisdom and knowledge.

11. To predetermine; to settle.

We may still doubt whether the Lord, in such indifferent ceremonies as those whereof we dispute, did frame his people of set purpose unto any utter dissimilitude with Egyptians, or with any other nation.

He remembers only the name of Conon, and forgets the other on set purpose, to shew his country swain was no great scholar.

12. To establish; to appoint; to fix.

Of all helps for due performance of this service, the greatest is that very set and standing order itself, which, framed with common advice, hath for matter and form prescribed whatsoever is herein publicly done.

It pleased the king to send me, and I set him a time.

He setteth an end to darkness, and searcheth out all perfection.

In studies, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it; but whatsoever is agreeable to his nature, let him take no care for any set times: for his thoughts will fly to it of themselves, so as the spaces of other business or studies will suffice.

For using set and prescribed forms there is no doubt but that wholesome words, being known, are aptest to excite judicious and fervent affections.

His seed, when is not set, shall bruise my head.

Though set form of prayer be an abomination, Set forms of petitions find great approbation.

Set places and set hours are but parts of that worship we owe.

That law cannot keep men from taking more use than you set, the want of money being that alone which regulates its price, will appear, if we consider how hard it is to set a price upon unnecessary commodities; but how impossible it is to set a rate upon victuals in a time of famine.

Set him such a task, to be done in such a time.

Take set times of meditating on what is future.

Should a man go about, with never so set study and design, to describe such a natural form of the year as that which is at present established, he could scarcely ever do it in so few words that were so fit.

13. To appoint to an office; to assign to a post.

Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou settest a watch over me?

As in the subordinations of government the king is offended by any insults to an inferior magistrate, so the sovereign ruler of the universe is affronted by a breach of allegiance to those whom he has set over us.

14. To exhibit; to display: with before.

Through the variety of my reading, I set before me many examples both of ancient and later times.

Reject not then what offer'd means: who knows But God hath set before us, to return thee Home to thy country and his sacred house?

Long has my soul desir'd this time and place, To set before your sight your glorious race.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew, That set the unhappy Phaeton to view:

The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd, And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd.

When his fortune sets before him all The pomps and pleasures that his soul can wish, His rigid virtue will accept of none.

He supplies his not appearing in the present scene of action, by setting his character before us, and continually forcing his patience, prudence, and valour upon our observation.

15. To propose to choose.

All that can be done is to set the thing before men, and to offer it to their choice.

16. To value; to estimate; to rate.

To have a son set your decrees at naught? To pluck down justice from your awful bench?

The backwardness parents shew in divulging their faults, will make them set a greater value on their credit themselves, and teach them to be the more careful to preserve the good opinion of others.

If we act by several broken views, and will not only be virtuous but wealthy, popular, and every thing that has a value set upon it by the world, we shall live and die in misery.

Have I not set at naught my noble birth, A spotless fame, and an unblemish'd race, The peace of innocence, and pride of virtue?

My prodigality has giv'n thee all.

Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays, Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze, We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r, And always set the gem above the flow'r.

17. To stake at play.

What sad disorders play begets! Desperate and mad, at length he sets Those darts, whose points make gods adore.

18. To offer a wager at dice to another.

Who sets me else? I'll throw at all.

19. To fix in metal.

Think so vast a treasure as your son Too great for any private man's possession; And him too rich a jewel to be set In vulgar metal for a vulgar use.

He may learn to cut, polish, and set precious stones.

20. To embarrass; to distress; to perplex.

[This is used, I think, by mistake, for beset: as, "Adam, hard beset, replied." Milton, P. L. Dr. Johnson.—

There is, perhaps, no mistake in this use of set: the Sax. percan means also to lay snares for, to deceive.]

Those who raise popular murmurs and discontents against his majesty's government, that they find so very few and so very improper occasions

- for them, shew how hard they are set in this particular, represent the bill as a grievance. Addison.
21. To fix in an artificial manner, so as to produce a particular effect.
The proud have laid a snare for me, they have set gins. Psalms.
22. To apply to something, as a thing to be done.
Unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury, that the Lord may bless thee in all that thou settest thine hand to. Deuteronomy.
With what'er gall thou set'st thyself to write, Thy inoffensive satires never bite. Dryden.
23. To fix the eyes.
I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and bring them again to this land. Jer. xxiv. 6.
Joy salutes me when I set My blest eyes on Amoret. Waller.
24. To offer for a price.
There is not a more wicked thing than a covetous man; for such an one settleth his own soul to sale. Eccclus. x. 9.
25. To let; to grant to a tenant.
They care not how high they sell any of their commodities, at how unreasonable rates they set their grounds. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.
26. To place in order; to frame.
After it was framed, and ready to be set together, he was, with infinite labour and charge, carried by land with camels, through that hot and sandy country. Knolles.
27. To station; to place.
Cæsus has betray'd
The bitter truths that our loose court upbraid;
Your friend was set upon you for a spy,
And on his witness you are doom'd to die. Dryden.
28. To oppose.
Will you set your wit to a fool's? Shakspeare.
29. To bring to a fine edge; as, to set a razor.
To point out, without noise or disturbance; as, a dog sets birds.
31. To set about. To apply to.
They should make them play-games, or endeavour it, and set themselves about it. Locke.
32. To set against. To place in a state of enmity or opposition.
The king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem. Ezekiel.
The devil hath reason to set himself against it; for nothing is more destructive to him than a soul armed with prayer. Dryden.
There should be such a being as assists us against our worst enemies, and comforts us under our sharpest sufferings, when all other things set themselves against us. Tillotson.
33. To set against. To oppose; to place in rhetorical opposition.
This perishing of the world in a deluge is set against, or compared with, the perishing of the world in the conflagration. Burnet, Theology.
34. To set apart. To neglect for a season.
They highly commended his forwardness, and all other matters for that time set apart. Knolles.
35. To set aside. To omit for the present.
Set your knighthood and your soldiership aside, and give me leave to tell you that you lie in your throat. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
In 1585 followed the prosperous expedition of Drake and Carlike; in the which I set aside the taking of St. Jago and St. Domingo, as surprises rather than encounters. Bacon.
My highest interest is not to be deceived about these matters; therefore, setting aside all other considerations, I will endeavour to know the truth, and yield to that. Tillotson.
36. To set aside. To reject.

- I'll look into the pretensions of each, and shew upon what ground 'tis that I embrace that of the deluge, and set aside all the rest. Woodward, Nat. Hist.
- No longer now does my neglected mind
Its wonted stores and old ideas find:
Fix'd judgement there no longer does abide,
To taste the true, or set the false aside. Prior.
37. To set aside. To abrogate; to annul.
Several innovations made to the detriment of the English merchant, are now entirely set aside. Addison.
- There may be
Reasons of so much power and cogent force,
As may ev'n set aside this right of birth:
If sons have rights, yet fathers have 'em too. Rowe.
He shows what absurdities follow upon such a supposition, and the greater those absurdities are, the more strongly do they evince the falsity of that supposition from whence they flow, and consequently the truth of the doctrine set aside by that supposition. Atterbury.
38. To set by. To regard; to esteem.
David behaved himself more wisely than all, so that his name was much set by. 1 Sam. xviii. 30.
39. To set by. To reject or omit for the present.
You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue; though the propagation of the faith, whereof we shall speak in the proper place, were set by, and not made part of the case. Bacon.
40. To set down. To explain; or relate in writing.
They have set down, that a rose set by garlic is sweeter, because the more fetid juice goeth into the garlic. Bacon.
Some rules were led me to set down for the government of the army. Clarendon.
The reasons that led me into the meaning which prevailed on my mind, are set down. Locke.
An eminent instance of this, to shew what use can do, I shall set down. Locke.
I shall set down an account of a discourse I chanced to have with one of these rural statesmen. Addison.
41. To set down. To register or note in any book or paper; to put in writing.

To set forth great things by small. Milton.
The two humours of a cheerful trust in providence, and a suspicious diffidence of it, are very well set forth here for our instruction. L'Estrange.
When poor Rutilius spends all his worth,
In hopes of setting one good dinner forth,
'Tis downright madness. Dryden, Juu.
49. To set forward. To advance; to promote.
They yield that reading may set forward, but not begin the work of salvation. Hooker.
Amongst them there are not those helps which others have to set them forward in the way of life. Hooker.
- In the external form of religion, such things as are apparently or can be sufficiently proved effectual, and generally fit to set forward godliness, either as betokening the greatness of God, or as beseeching the dignity of religion, or as concurring with celestial impressions in the minds of men, may be reverently thought of. Hooker.
They mar my path, they set forward my calamity. Job.
Dung or chalk, applied seasonably to the roots of trees, doth set them forwards. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
50. To set in. To put in a way to begin.
If you please to assist and set me in, I will recollect myself. Cotlier.
51. To set off. To decorate; to recommend; to adorn; to embellish. It answers to the French relever.
Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
- The prince put thee into my service for no other reason than to set me off. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Neglect not the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid. Bacon.
May you be happy, and your sorrows past
Set off those joys I wish may ever last. Waller.
The figures of the groupes must contrast each other by their several positions; thus in a play some characters must be raised to oppose others, and to set them off. Dryden.
The men, whose hearts are aimed at, are the occasion that one part of the face lies under a kind of disguise, while the other is so much set off, and adorned by the owner. Addison.
Their women are perfect mistresses in shewing themselves to the best advantage: they are always gay and sprightly, and set off the worst faces with the best airs. Addison.

The general good sense and worthiness of his character, makes his friends observe these little singularities as foils, that rather set off than blemish his good qualities. Addison.

The work will never take, if it is not set off with proper scenes. Addison.

Claudian sets off his description of the Eridanus with all the poetical stories. Addison.

52. To SET on or upon. To animate; to instigate; to incite.

SHA'DINESS.† n. s. [from shady.] The state of being shady ; umbrageousness.

SHA'DOW.† n. s. [rcabu, Saxon ; schaduwe,
Dutch : a shade, rcabepan, to shadow.]
1. The representation of a body by which the light is intercepted.

Poor Tom ! proud of heart, to ride over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor. Shakspeare.
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more. Shakspeare.

Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon. Shakspeare.
The body, though it moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, the thing seems to stand still, as in the hands of clocks, and shadows of sun-dials. Locke.

2. Opacity ; darkness ; shade.

By the revolution of the skies
Night's sable shadows from the ocean rise. Denham.
His countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake and shadow of the eclipse. Addison.

3. Shelter made by any thing that intercepts the light, heat, or influence of the air.

In secret shadow from the sunny ray,
On a sweet bed of lilies softly laid. Spenser, F. Q.
Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host. Shaks. K. Lear.

4. Obscure place.

To the secret shadows I retire,
To pay my penance till my years expire. Dryden.

5. Dark part of a picture.

A shadow is a diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightened body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light spreading itself into the air or medium proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold : the first is a single shadow, and the least of all ; and is proper to the plain surface where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forsake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkeneth by a third part. It is used for the inmost shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulfs, wells, and caves. Peachment.

After great lights there must be great shadowing.
Dryden.

6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight ; a ghost ; a spirit, or shade.

Hence, terrible shadow ! Shakspeare.
Unreal mockery, hence ! Shakspeare.

7. An imperfect and faint representation : opposed to substance.

If substance might be call'd that shadow seem'd
Milton, P. L.
In the glorious lights of heaven we perceive a shadow of his divine countenance. Raleigh.
Without the least impulse or shadow of fate. Milton, P. L.

Amongst the creatures are particular excellencies scattered, which are some shadows of the divine perfections. Tillotson.

8. Inseparable companion.

Sin, and her shadow, death. Milton, P. L.

9. Type ; mystical representation.

Types and shadows of that destin'd seed.
Milton, P. L.

10. Protection ; shelter ; favour.

Keep me under the shadow of thy wings. Psalms.

To SHA'DOW.† v. a. [rcabepan, Saxon ; from the noun.]

1. To cover with opacity.

The warlike elf much wondered at this tree,
So fair and great, that shadowed all the ground. Spenser.

2. To cloud ; to darken.

The Assyrian was a cedar with fair branches,
and with a shadowing shroud. Ezek. xxxi. 3.
Mislike me not for my complexion ;
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun
To whom I am a neighbour. Shakspeare.

Why sad ? —
I must not see the face I love thus shadowed.

3. To make cool or gently gloomy by interception of the light or heat.

A gentle south-west wind comes creeping over flowery fields and shadowed waters in the extreme heat of summer. Sidney.
We may enjoy our own green shadowed walks.
Beaumont and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.

4. To conceal under cover ; to hide ; to screen.

Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear 't before him ; thereby shall we shadow
The number of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us. Shakspeare.

5. To protect ; to screen from danger ; to shroud.

God shall forgive you Cœur de Lion's death,
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war. Shakspeare.

6. To mark with various gradations of colour, or light.

Turnsoll is made of old linen rags dried, and laid in a saucer of vinegar, and set over a chafindish of coals till it boil ; then wring it into a shell, and put it into a little gum arabick : it is good to shadow carnations, and all yellows. Peachment.

From a round globe of any uniform colour, the idea imprinted in our minds is of a flat circle, variously shadowed with different degrees of light coming to our eyes. Locke.

7. To paint in obscure colours.

If the parts be too much distant, so that there be void spaces which are deeply shadowed, then place in those voids some fold to make a joining of the parts. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

8. To represent imperfectly.

Whereat I wak'd, and found
Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
Had lively shadow'd. Milton, P. L.

Augustus is shadowed in the person of Æneas.

Dryden.

I have shadowed some part of your virtues under another name.

Dryden.

9. To represent typically.

Many times there are three things said to make up the substance of a sacrament; namely, the grace which is thereby offered, the element which shadoweth or signifieth grace, and the word which expresseth what is done by the element.

Hooker.

The shield being to defend the body from weapons, aptly shadowing out to us the continence of the emperor, which made him proof to all the attacks of pleasure.

Addison.

SHA'DOWGRASS. n. s. [from shadow and grass; gramen sylvaticum, Lat.] A kind of grass.

SHA'DOWING.* n. s. [from shadow.] Shade in a picture; gradation of light or colour.

I like not praising, when 'tis too loud: a little is as shadowings to a well limned piece: it sets it off the better; but when it is too deep, it dulls the native life, and renders its air unpleasant.

Fellham, Res. ii. 16.

More broken scene made up of an infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings that naturally arise from an agreeable mixture of hills, groves, and vallies.

Addison.

SHA'DOWY.† adj. [ƿæapɪz, Sax. from shadow.]

1. Full of shade; gloomy.

This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods, I better brook than flourishing peopled towns.

Shakespeare.

With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,

A sudden youth the groves enjoy.

Fenton.

2. Not brightly luminous.

More pleasant light

Shadowy sets off the face of things. Milton, P. L.

3. Faintly representative; typical.

When they see

Law can discover sin, but not remove,

Save by those shadowy expiations weak,

The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude

Some blood more precious must be paid for man.

Milton, P. L.

4. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of Sin and Death; by which he hath interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory.

Addison.

5. Dark; opaque.

By command, ere yet dim night

Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste

Homeward.

Milton, P. L.

SHA'DOWNYNESS.* n. s. State of being shadowy.

The shadowyness of the night may help them.

Anot. on Glanville, &c. 1682, p. 116.

SHA'DY.† adj. [ƿæapɪz, Sax. from shade.]

1. Full of shade; mildly gloomy.

The shady trees cover him with their shadow.

Job, xl. 22.

The wakeful bird

Sings darkling, and in shadiest covert hid

Tunes her nocturnal note.

Milton, P. L.

Stretch'd at ease you sing your happy loves,

And Amarillis fills the shady groves.

Dryden.

2. Secure from the glare of light, or sultriness of heat.

Cast it also that you may have rooms shady for summer, and warm for winter.

Bacon.

TO SHA'FFLE.* v. n. [perhaps a corruption of shuffle.] To move with an awkward or irregular gait; to hobble. Used in the north of England.

SHA'FFLER.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who limps, or walks lamely.

Hulot.

SHAFT.† n. s. [ƿæat, Sax.]

1. An arrow; a missive weapon.

To pierce pursuing shield

By parents train'd, the Tartars wild are taught,

With shafts shot out from their back-turned bow.

Sidney.

Who in the spring, from the new sun,

Already has a fever got,

Too late begins those shafts to shun,

Which Phœbus thro' his veins has shot.

Waller.

They are both the archer and shaft taking aim afar off, and then shooting themselves directly upon the desired mark.

More.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow

With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below.

Dryden.

2. [Shaft, Dutch.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.

They sink a shaft or pit of six foot in length.

Carew.

The fulminating damp, upon its accension, gives a crack like the report of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and force bodies of great weight from the bottom of the pit up through the shaft.

Woodward.

Suppose a tube, or, as the miners call it, a shaft, were sunk from the surface of the earth to the centre.

Arbutnot.

3. Any thing straight; the spire of a church.

Practise to draw small and easy things, as a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple.

Peachment.

4. [Schaft, Germ. shaft, Su. Goth.] Handle of a weapon. See SHAFTED.

5. Pole of a carriage.

SHA'FTED.* adj. [from shaft.] Having a handle: a term of heraldry, applied to a spear-head, when there is a handle to it.

SHA'FTMENT.* n. s. [ƿæft-munt, Sax.]

Measure of about six inches with the hand; a span. See Ray, and Lye.

SHAG.† n. s. [ƿæaça, Sax. coma, villus. Skinner. Su. Goth. skæg, barba. Serenius.]

1. Rough woolly hair.

Full often like a shag-hair'd crafty kern,

Hath he conversed with the enemy;

And given me notice of their villanies. Shakespeare.

Where is your husband?

He's a traitor.

—Thou liest, thou shag-ear'd villain! Shakespeare.

From the shag of his body, the shape of his legs,

his having little or no tail, the slowness of his gait, and his climbing up of trees, he seems to come near the bear kind.

Grew.

True Witney broad cloth with its shag unshorn,

Be this the horseman's fence.

Gay.

2. A kind of cloth.

Loth we are to be under the yoke of restraint, though it be lined with velvet and shag of ease and innocence.

Waterhouse on Fortescue, p. 221.

SHAG.* adj. Hairy; shaggy.

A well-proportion'd steed,—

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

TO SHAG.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make shaggy or rough; to deform.

Other scenes,

Of horrid prospect, shag the trackless plain.

Thomson, Winter.

SHAG. n. s. [phalacrocorax, Lat.] A sea bird.

Among the first sort we reckon shags, duck, and mallard.

Carew.

SHA'GGED.† adj. [from shag; Sax.

SHA'GGY. } ƿæcægð, comatus; Dan.

skaggd, barbarus, shag, barba; from the

Su. Goth. See SHAAG.]

1. Rugged; roughly; hairy.

They change their hue, with haggard eyes they stare,

Lean are their looks, and shagged is their hair.

Dryden.

A lion's hide he wears;

About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,

The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin.

Dryden.

From the frosty north

The early valliant Swede draws forth his wings,

In battalious array, while Volga's stream

Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,

Her borders; on mutual slaughter bent. Philips.

2. Rough; rugged.

They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,

Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops

Uplifting bore them in their hands. Milton, P. L.

There, where very desolation dwells,

By grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,

He may pass on with unbleach'd majesty,

Be it not done in pride. Milton, Comus.

Through Eden went a river large,

Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill

Pass'd underneath ingulph'd. Milton, P. L.

How would the old king smile

To see you weigh the paws when tipp'd with gold,

And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders!

Addison.

Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn,

Ye grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn.

Pope.

SHA'GGEDNESS.* n. s. [from shagged.]

State of being shagged.

The inhabitants could not inform him of the colour, shaggedness, and other qualities of the dog.

More, Myster. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 121.

SHAGREEN.† n. s. [An eastern word, sagri, soghré, and shagrain. See D'Ar-vieux's Trav. p. 215. See also Chambers in V. SHAGREEN.] The skin of a kind of fish, or skin made rough in imitation of it.

TO SHAGREEN. v. a. [chagriner, Fr.] To irritate; to provoke. It should be written chagrin.

TO SHAIL.† v. n. [shaga, Icel. gradu ferri obliquo. Serenius. It may rather be referred to the Teut. schall, obliquus.

In some places, our word is pronounced shaul.] To walk sideways. A low word.

Child, you must walk straight, without skewing and shailing to every step you set. L'Estrange.

TO SHAKE.† v. a. pret. shook; part. pass.

shaken, or shook; and formerly shaked,

(which was very common,) as in the first example from Milton under the second definition, and of Shakespeare under the sixth, and of the Tatler under the third.

[ƿæcan, ƿæacan, Sax. schocken, Teut.]

1. To put into a vibrating motion; to move with quick returns backwards and forwards; to agitate.

Who honours not his father,

Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake,

Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by. Shaks.

I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants. Zecl. ii. 9.

I shook my lap and said, so God shake out every man from his house, even thus be he shaken out and emptied. Neh. v.

The stars fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind. Rev. vi.

He shook the sacred honours of his head:

With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding bill,

And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distil.

Dryden.

She first her husband on the poop espies,
Shaking his hand at distance on the main;
She took the sign, and shook her hand again.

Dryden.

2. To make to totter or tremble.

Wert thou some star, which from the ruin'd roof
Of shak'd Olympus by mischance didst fall?

Milton, Ode.

The rapid wheels shake heaven's basis.

Milton, P. L.

Let France acknowledge that her shaken throne
Was once supported, sir, by you alone.

Roscommon.

3. To throw down by a violet motion.

Macheth is ripe for shaking, and the powers above

Put on their instruments, Shakespeare.

The tyrannous breathing of the North

Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakespeare.

When ye depart, shake off the dust of your feet.

St. Matt. x.

He looked at his book, and, holding out his right leg, put it into such a quivering motion, that I thought he would have shaken it off.

Tatler.

4. To throw away; to drive off.

'Tis our first intent

To shake all cares and business from our age, Confering them on younger strengths, whilst we Unburthen'd crawl towards death. Shakespeare.

5. To weaken; to put in danger.

When his doctrines grew too strong to be shook
by his enemies, they persecuted his reputation.

Atterbury.

6. To drive from resolution; to depress; to make afraid.

A sly and constant knave, not to be shak'd.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

This respite shook

The bosom of my conscience. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Be not soon shaken in mind, or troubled, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 2 Thes. ii. 2.

Not my firm faith

Can by his fraud be shaken or seduc'd. Milton.

7. To SHAKE hands. This phrase, from the action used among friends at meeting and parting, sometimes signifies to join with, but commonly to take leave of.

With the slave,

He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nape to the chaps.

Shakespeare.

Nor can it be safe to a king to tarry among them who are shaking hands with their allegiance, under pretence of laying faster hold of their religion.

King Charles.

8. To SHAKE off. To rid himself of; to free from; to divest of.

Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me:

Antonio never yet was thief or pirate. Shakespeare.

If I could shake off but one seven years,

From these old arms and legs,

I'd with thee every foot. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Say, sacred bard! what could bestow

Courage on thee, to soar so high?

Tell me, brave friend, what help'd thee so

To shake off all mortality? Wallen.

Him I reserved to be answered by himself, after

I had shaken off the lesser and more barking creatures. Stillingfleet.

Can I want courage for so brave a deed?

I've shook it off: my soul is free from fear.

Dryden.

Here we are free from the formalities of custom and respect: we may shake off the haughty impertinent.

Collier.

How does thy beauty smooth

The face of war, and make even horreur smile!

At sight of thee my heart shakes off its sorrows.

Addison.

To SHAKE. v. n.

1. To be agitated with a vibratory motion.

2. To totter.

Under his burning wheels

The steadfast empyrean shook throughout,
All but the throne itself of God. Milton, P. L.

3. To tremble; to be unable to keep the body still.

Thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,

Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow. Shakespeare.

What said the wench, when he rose up again?

— Trembled and shook, for why, he stamp'd,

As if the vicar meant to cozen him. Shakespeare.

4. To be in terror; to be deprived of firmness.

He short of succours, and in deep despair,

Shook at the dismal prospect of the war.

Dryden, Æn.

SHAKE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Concussion suffered.

If that thy fame with every toy be sped,

'Tis a thin web, which poisonous fancies make;

But the great soldier's honour was compos'd

Of thicker stuff, which could endure a shake:

Wisdom picks friends; civility plays the rest,

A toy shunn'd cleanly passeth with thee best.

Herbert.

2. Impulse; moving power.

The freeholder is the basis of all other titles:
this is the substantial stock, without which they are no more than blossoms that would fall away with every shake of wind. Addison.

3. Vibratory motion.

Several of his countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and the shadow of the eclipse, which are recorded by this author. Addison.

4. Motion given and received.

Our salutations were very hearty on both sides, consisting of many kind shakes of the hand.

Addison.

5. In music, a graceful close of a song or air; the alternate prolation of two notes in juxtaposition to each other, with a close on the note immediately beneath the lower of them.

A Scottish song admits of no cadence; I mean by this, no fanciful or capricious descent upon the close of the tune. There is one embellishment, however, which a fine singer may easily acquire,
that is, an easy shake.

Tytler, Dissert. on the Scottish Music.

SHA'KFORK.* n. s. [shake and fork.] A fork to toss hay about: so a prong is called in some places. In the north, the word is shakfork; and thus bishop Hall.

Like a broad shakfork with a slender steale.

Bp. Hall, Sat. B. 3. S. 7.

SHA'KER.† n. s. [from shake.] The person or thing that shakes.

O great corrector of enormous times,

Shaker of o'er-rank states!

Beaumont, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

Go then, the guilty at thy will chastise,

He said; the shaker of the earth replies.

Pope, Odyssey.

SHA'KING.* n. s. [from shake.]

1. Vibratory motion.

Darts are counted as stubble; he laugheth at the shaking of a spear. Job, xli. 29.

There was a noise, and behold a shaking; and the bones came together, bone to his bone.

Ezek. xxxvii. 7.

2. Concussion.

We are so conducted in this coach, that these shocks and shakings seem to them without to menance our overturning.

Harnmar, Transl. of Beza, p. 375.

There shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel. Ezek. xxxviii. 19.

3. State of trembling.

A shaking through the limbs they find,

Like leaves saluted by the wind. Wallen.

SHA'KY.* adj. [from shake.] An appellation given by builders to timber, which is cracked either with the heat of the sun or the drought of the wind.

Chambers.

SHALE.† n. s. [corrupted, I think, for shell. Dr. Johnson. — Shale is common in our old writers on lexicography for shell. "Shale of a nut and such like things." Huloet. Sax. jcala, gluma.
"A walnote shale." Chaucer, House of Fame.]

1. A husk; the case of seeds in siliqueous plants.

Behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.

Shakespeare.

2. A black slaty substance, or a clay hardened into a stony consistence, and so much impregnated with bitumen, that it becomes somewhat like a coal. It forms large strata in Derbyshire.

Chambers.

Coals and aluminous earths, or shale.

Philos. Transact. vol. li. p. 591.

To SHALE.* v. a. To peel; perhaps to shell; a northern word. Grose. He need not have doubted its meaning, if he had turned to our old lexicography: "to shale, goussepiller, Fr." Sherwood.
And Cotgrave renders it, "to take pulse out of the swads; and hence to strip or uncase."

SHALL.† v. defective. [real, Sax. is originally I owe, or I ought. In Chaucer,
"the faith I shall to God," means, the faith I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devoir, dois, doit, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification; and the Swedes have skall, and the Ice-landers skal, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.

The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will: but I shall endeavour, crassa Minerva, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense. Dr. Johnson. — The necessity of a thing from some external obligation, whether natural or moral, which we call duty, is expressed, if absolute, by the particle must, ought, shall;
if conditional, by must, ought, should.
Bp. Wilkins, Real Character, P. iii. ch. 5.
Will, in the first person singular and plural, promises or threatens; in the second and third persons only foretells: shall, on the contrary, in the first person simply foretells; in the second and third persons promises, commands, or threatens. But this must be understood of explicative sentences; for when the sentence is interrogative, just the reverse for the most part takes place: Thus, "I shall go; you will go;" express event only; but "you will go?" imports intention; and "shall I go?" refers to the will of another. But again, "he shall go," and "shall he go?" both imply will, expressing or referring to a command. Lowth, Eng. Grammar. They, who would wish minutely to discern when it is proper to use shall, and when will, may be abundantly satisfied in consulting Mr. White's Essay on the English Verb, Lond. 1761, from p. 92. to p. 113.; and also Observations on the use of these words, published at Canterbury in 1813.]

1. I SHALL love. It will so be that I must love; it is resolved to love.
2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? will you permit me to love? will it be that I must love?
3. Thou SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love: [in poetry or solemn diction] it will be that thou must love.

4. SHALT thou love? Will it be that thou must love? will it be permitted to thee to love?

5. He SHALL love. It will be that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.

It is a mind, that shall remain.

— Shall remain!

Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you His absolute shall? Shakspeare, Coriol.

See Romulus the great:

This prince a priestess of your blood shall bear, And like his sire in arms he shall appear.

Dryden, Æn.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon all his despair is founded; and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond on Fundamentals.

6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? In solemn language, Will it be that he must love?

7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singulars.

SHALLO'ON.† n. s. [from Chalons, a town in Champagne, where this kind of stuff was made. It is called in French, "ras de Chalons." Malone.] A slight woollen stuff.

In blue shallon shall Hannibal be clad, And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid. Swift.

SHALLOP. n. s. [chaloupe, Fr.] A small boat.

You were resolved, after your arrival into Oroonoke to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desired to have Sir John Fearn's shallop: I do not allow of that course, because ye cannot land so secretly but that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat. Ralegh.

Our hero set

In a small shallop, forthwain in his debt. Waller.

SHALLO'OT.† n. s. Aneschalot; which see.

SHALLOW.† adj. [this word is probably compounded of shoal and low. Dr. Johnson.—Derived with great probability by Ruddiman, and adopted by

Lemon, from the Sax. ryǫlf, abacus, asser, a shelf; under which word Junius observes, "Anglis ab hac abaci, similitudine shelves, seu shelves, appellatur etiam pulvini. i. e. cumuli arenacei, qui litori maris obtenduntur;" which therefore cause those shoals or shallow waters.]

1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.

I had been drowned, but that the shore was shely and shallow; a death that I abhor.

Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor. That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drowned, perished for want of food.

Bacon.

The like opinion he held of Meotis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably shallower in his days, and would in process of time become a firm land.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

I am made a shallow forded stream, Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scorn'd, And all my faults expos'd. Dryden, All for Love.

Shallow brooks that flow'd so clear,

The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

In shallow furrows vines securely grow. Dryden.

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound; not very knowing or wise; empty; trifling; futile; silly.

I'll shew my mind,

According to my shallow simple skill. Shakspeare.

This is a very shallow monster:

Afraid of him? A very shallow monster,

The man 't' th' moon! A most poor credulous monster. Shakspeare.

The king was neither so shallow, nor so ill advertised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the investing himself of Britaigne.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Uncertain and unsettled he remains,

Deep vers't in books, and shallow in himself.

Milton, P. R.

One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more conceited than the rest. Addison.

3. Not deep of sound.

If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the sound perfecter, and not so shallow and jarring. Bacon.

SHALLOW. n. s. [from the adjective.] A shelf; a sand; a flat; a shoal; a place where the water is not deep.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run, But I should think of shallows and of flats; And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand, Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,

To kiss her burial. Shakspeare, Coriol.

A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Having but newly left those grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported, to be tost with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milton on Education.

You that so oft have sounded And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps And shallows of his heart, should need no instruments

To advance your ends. Denham.

He sounds and fathoms him, to find

The shallows of his soul. Dryden, Span. Friar.

The wary Dutch

Behind their treacherous shallows now withdraw,

And there lay snares to catch the British host.

Dryden.

Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand, And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land.

Dryden, Æn.

In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows.

Burnet.

Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallows.

Ray on the Creation.

With the ease of diligence, and prudent conduct, he may decline both rocks and shallows. Norris.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation?

Bentley.

To SHA'LOW.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To make shallow.

In long process of time, the silt and sands shall so choke and shallow the sea in and about it.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 190.

That thought alone thy state impairs,

Thy lofty sinks, and shallows thy profound.

Young, Night Th. 9.

SHA'LOWBRAIN'D. adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.

It cannot but be matter of just indignation to all good men to see a company of lewd shallow-brained huffs making atheism, and contempt of religion, the sole badge of wit. Soult.

SHA'LOWLY. adv. [from shallow.]

1. With no great depth.

The load lieeth open on the grass, or but shallowly covered. Carew.

2. Simply; foolishly.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence, Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.

Shakspeare.

SHA'LOWNESS. n. s. [from shallow.]

1. Want of depth.

2. Want of thought; want of understanding; futility; silliness; emptiness.

By it do all things live their measure of hour: We cannot ask the thing which is not there, Blaming the shallowness of our request. Herbert.

I cannot wonder enough at the shallowness and impertinent zeal of the vulgar sort in Druids, who were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his successes, when it little concerned their religion or security. Honell.

SHALM.† n. s. [schalmey, Teut. chalemie or chalemelle, old Fr. from calamus, Lat. Our word is also written and pronounced shawm.] A kind of musical pipe.

Every captain was commanded to have his soldiers in readiness to set forward upon the sign given, which was by the sound of a shalm or hoboy. Knotles, Hist. of the Turks.

The hoboy, sagbut deep, recorder, and the flute, Even from the shrillest shawm unto the cornamute. Dryden, Polyolt. S. 4.

SHALT. Second person of shall.

To SHAM.† v. a. [shommi, Welsh, to cheat. Dr. Johnson.—Or from the Teut. schimpfen, to jeer, to scoff; schimp, joke, sport.]

1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences.

A low word.

Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by shame than by conscience, when they find themselves fooled and shammed into a conviction.

L'Estrange.

2. To obtrude by fraud or folly.

We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, sham fallacies upon the world for current reason.

L'Estrange.

To SHAM.* v. n. To make mocks.

Then all your wits that fear and sham,
Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
From whom I jests and puns purlain,
And slyly put them off for mine,
Fond to be thought a country wit.

Prior.

SHAM. n. s. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.

No sham so gross but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatical and inquisitive.

L'Estrange.

It goes a great way when natural curiosity and vulgar prejudice shall be assisted with the shams of astrological judgments.

L'Estrange.

He that first brought the sham, wheedle, or banter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those ideas he made it stand for.

Locke.

That in the sacred temple needs would try
Without a fire the unheated gums to fry,
Believe who will the solemn sham, not I.

Addison.

SHAM. adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious;
pretended.

Never join the fray,
Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way.

Gay.

SHAMBLE.† n. s. [Of uncertain etymology; scannaglia, Ital. Dr. Johnson.—
Our word, no doubt, is from the Sax.
ƿamel, a bench or table, on which the meat is laid. See Lye in V. Scamel, and Dr. Jamieson in the Scott. SKAMYLL.]

1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.

Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament-house.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.
— Oh, ay, as summer-flies are in the shambles,
That quicken ev'n with blowing.

Shaks. Othello.

He warned a flock of sheep, that were driving to the shambles, of their danger; and, upon uttering some sounds, they all fled.

Arbutnot.

2. It is here improperly used.

When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his back the shambles of the executioner, there is no more conviction in the one than in the other.

Watts.

SHAMBLING.† n. s. [See SCAMBLING.]
Act of moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.

By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

SHAMBLING.† adj. Moving awkwardly and irregularly.

So when nurse Nokes to act young Ammon tries,

With shambling legs, long chin, and foolish eyes,
With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.

Smith.

SHAME.† n. s. [ƿeam, ƿama, Sax. skam,
Su. Goth, from skaman, M. Goth, erubescere, to blush. Serenius. Our northern word is sham.]

1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.

Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lye,
And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye.

Spenser.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.
— Urge neither charity nor shame to me:
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd:
My charity is outrage, life my shame;
And in my shame still lives my sorrow's rage.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Hide, for shame,

Romans, your grandsires' images,
That blush at their degenerate progeny.

Dryden.
In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas.

Locke.

2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace; ignominy.

The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him at his departure.

Shaks.

God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion!

South.

This jest was first of the other house's making,
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking
For, 'twere a shame a poet should be kill'd,
Under the shelter of so broad a shield.

Dryden.

O shame to manhood! shall one daring boy
The scheme of all our happiness destroy?

Pope, Odyss.

3. Reproach; infliction of shame.

A foul shame is upon the thief.

Ecclesi. v. 14.

Applause
Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths.

Milton, P. L.

To SHAME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make ashamed; to fill with shame.

To tell thee of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Shakespeare.

If thou hast power to raise him, bring him
lither,

And I've power to shame him hence:
Oh, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil.

Shakespeare.

Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use.

Cleaveland.

Despoil'd
Of all our good, sham'd, naked, miserable.

Milton, P. L.

What hurt can there be in all the slanders and disgraces of this world, if they are but the arts and methods of providence to shame us into the glories of the next?

South.

Were there but one righteous man in the world, he would hold up his head with confidence and honour; he would shame the world, and not the world him.

South.

He in a loathsome dungeon doom'd to lie,
In bonds retain'd his birthright liberty,
And sham'd oppression, till it set him free.

Dryden.

The coward bore the man immortal spite,
Who sham'd him out of madness into flight.

Dryden.

Who shames a scribbler, breaks a cobweb through;
He spins the slight self-pleasing thread anew.

Pope.

2. To disgrace.

Certes, sir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead,
And with foul cowardice his carcass shame.

Spenser, F. Q.

To SHAME. v. n. To be ashamed.

Great shame it is, things so divine in view,
Made for to be the world's most ornament,
To make the bait her gazers to embrew;

Good shames to be to ill an instrument.

Spenser.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art ex-traught,

To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?

Shakespeare.

To the trunk of it authors give such a magnitude, as I shame to repeat.

Rulegh, Hist. of the World.

Cruel Auster thither hy'd him;
And with the rush of one brave blast,
Sham'd not spitefully to waste
All his leaves, so fresh, so sweet,
And lay them trembling at his feet.

Crashaw.

SHAMEFACED.† adj. [ƿeamƿæc, Saxon.
And so our word was anciently shame-fast, and shamefastness. See Spenser under the latter.] Modest; bashful;
easily put out of countenance.

Philoclea, who blushing and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasing, and pleasure shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground.

Sidney.

Conscience is a blushing shamefac'd spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills one full of obstacles.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

A man may be shamefaced, and a woman modest,
to the degree of scandalous.

L'Estrange.

Your shamefac'd virtue shunn'd the people's praise,

And senate's honours.

Dryden.

From this time we may date that remarkable turn in the behaviour of our fashionable Englishmen, that makes them shamefaced in the exercise of those duties which they were sent into the world to perform.

Addison, Freeholder.

SHAMEFACEDLY.† adv. [from shamefaced.]
Modestly; bashfully.

He would have us live soberly, that is to say, honestly, shamefastly, chastely, temperately, and frugally.

Woolton, Chr. Man. (1576.)

SHAMEFACEDNESS. n. s. [from shamefaced.]
Modesty; bashfulness; timidity.

Dorus, having had all the while a free beholding of the fair Pamela, could well have defended the assault he gave unto her face with bringing a fair strain of shamefacedness into it.

Sidney.

She is the fountain of your modesty;
You shamefac'd are, but shamefastness itself is she.

Spenser, F. Q.

None but fools, out of shamefacedness, hide their ulcers, which, if shown, might be healed.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

SHAMEFUL.† adj. [shame and full.]

1. Disgraceful; ignominious; infamous;
reproachful.

This all through that great princess pride did fall,

And came to shameful end.

Spenser, F. Q.

For this he shall live hated, be blasphem'd,
Seiz'd on by force, judg'd, and, to death condemn'd,

A shameful and accurst!

Milton, P. L.

His naval preparations were not more surprising than his quick and shameful retreat; for he returned to Carthage with only one ship, having fled without striking one stroke.

Arbutnot.

The knave of diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins, O shameful chance! the queen of hearts.

Pope.

2. Full of indignity or indecency; raising shame in another.

Phœbus flying so most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies,
And hides for shame.

Spenser, F. Q.

SHAMEFULLY.† adv. [from shameful.]

1. Disgracefully; ignominiously; infam-ously; reproachfully.

But I his holy secret
Presumptuously have publish'd; impiously,
Weakly at least, and shamefully.

Milton, S. A.

Would she shamefully fail in the last act in this contrivance of the nature of man?

More.

Those who are ready enough to confess him, both in judgment and profession, are, for the most part, very prone to deny him shamefully in their doings.

South, Serm.

2. With indignity; with indecency; so as ought to cause shame.

None but that saw, quoth he, would ween for truth,

How shamefully that maid he did torment.

Spenser, F. Q.

SHAMELESS.† adj. [ƿeamleas, Saxon.]
Wanting shame; wanting modesty; im-udent; frontless; immodest; audacious.

To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,

Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Beyond imagination is the wrong
That she this day hath, shameless, thrown on me.

The shameless denial hereof by some of their friends, and the more shameless justification by some of their flatterers, makes it needful to exemplify, which I had rather forbear.

God deliver the world from such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion, and the shameless subverters of morality!

Such shameless bards we have; and yet 'tis true, There are as mad abandon'd critics too.

SHA'MELESSLY. adv. [from shameless.] Impudently; audaciously; without shame.

The king to-day, as one of the vain fellows, shamelessly uncovereth himself.

He must needs be shamelessly wicked that abhors not this licentiousness.

SHA'MELESSNESS.† n. s. [from shameless, Sax.] Impudence; want of shame; immodesty.

Being most impudent in her heart, she could, when she would, teach her cheeks blushing, and make shamefacedness the cloak of shamelessness.

He that blushes not at his crime, but adds shamelessly to his shame, hath nothing left to restore him to virtue.

SHA'MER.* n. s. [from shame.] Whoever or whatever makes ashamed.

My means and my condition are no shamers Of him that owes 'em.

SHA'MMER. n. s. [from sham.] A cheat; an impostor. A low word.

SHA'MOIS. n. s. [from chamois, Fr. See CHAMOIS.] A kind of wild goat.

To clustering fiberds, and sometimes I'll get thee Young shamois from the rocks.

SHA'MROCK. n. s. The Irish name for three leaved grass.

If they found a plot of watercresses, or sham-rocks, there they flocked as to a feast for the time.

SHANK.† n. s. [from schanc, Sax. schinkel, Germ. schenckel, Dutch.]

1. The middle joint of the leg; that part which reaches from the ankle to the knee.

Itsoons her white strait legs were altered To crooked crawling shanks, of marrow emptied;

And her fair face to foul and loathsome hue, And her fine corps to a bag of venom grew.

The sixth age shifts Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon, With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;

His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide For his shrunk shanks.

A stag says, if these pitiful shanks of mine were but answerable to this branching head, I can't but think how I should defy all my enemies.

2. The bone of the leg.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house, O'er cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones, With reeky shanks, and yellow chapless skulls.

3. Leg or support of any thing.

In Somersethire they have a way of setting their mows of corn on a frame, standing upon four stones cut with a shank.

4. The long part of any instrument.

The shank of a key, or some such long hole, the punch cannot strike, because the shank is not forged with substance sufficient.

5. [Bryonia, Lat.] An herb.

SHANKED. adj. [from shank.] Having a shank.

SHANKER. n. s. [from chancere, Fr.] A venereal excrescence.

SHA'NTY.* adj. [perhaps a corruption of jantry.] Showy; gay. Used in the north of England.

Each shant spark that can the fashion hit.

Epilogue to Sir Courtly Nice, (1735.) To SHAPE.† v. a. preter. shaped; part. pass. shaped and shapen; anciently shope.

[from scapian, scapan, Sax. schuppen, Teut. skapu, Su. Goth. creare, formare: vox antiquissima, omnibusque lingu. Septentr. usitatissima. Serenius.]

1. To form; to mould with respect to external dimensions.

I that am not shap'd for sportive tricks, Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;

I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty, To strut before a wanton ambling nymph.

Those nature hath shaped with a great head, narrow breast, and shoulders sticking out, seem much inclined to a consumption.

Mature the virgin was, of Egypt's race, Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her face.

2. To mould; to cast: to regulate; to adjust.

Drag the villain hither by the hair, Nor age nor honour shall shape privilege.

Mr. Candish, when without hope, and ready to shape his course by the east homewards, met a ship which came from the Philippines.

To the stream, when neither friends nor force, Nor speed nor art avail, he shapes his course.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire, And shape my foolishness to their desire.

3. To image; to conceive.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains, Such shaping fantasies that apprehend More than cool reason ever comprehends.

It is my nature's plague To spy into abuse, and oft my jealousy Shapes faults that are not.

When fancy hath formed and shaped the perfectest ideas of blessedness, our own more happy experiences of greater must disabuse us.

4. To make; to create. Obsolete.

I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me.

To SHAPE.* v. n. To square; to suit.

Their dear loss, The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shap'd Unto my end of stealing them.

SHAPE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Form; external appearance.

He beat me grievously in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of a man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam.

The shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared for battle.

If shape it may be call'd that shape had none, Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb.

In vegetables and animals the shape we most fix on, and are most led by.

2. Make of the trunk of the body.

First a charming shape enslav'd me, An eye then gave the fatal stroke;

Till by her wit Corinna sav'd me, And all my former fetters broke.

Fathers and mothers, friends and relations, seem to have no other wish towards the little girl, but that she may have a fair skin, a fine shape, dress well, and dance to admiration.

3. Being; as moulded into form.

Before the gates there sat On either side a formidable shape.

4. Idea; pattern.

Thy heart Contains of good, wise, just, the perfect shape.

5. It is now used in low conversation for manner.

SHA'PELESS. adj. [from shape.] Wanting regularity of form; wanting symmetry of dimensions.

You are born To set a form upon that indigest, Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere; Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless ev'ry where.

Thrice had I lov'd thee, Before I knew thy face or name; So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame, Angels affect us, oft, and worshipp'd be.

Now the victor stretch'd his eager hand, Where the tall nothing stood, or seem'd to stand; A shapeless shade, it melted from his sight, Like forms in clouds or visions of the night!

Some objects please our eyes, Which out of nature's common order rise, The shapeless rock, or haping precipice.

SHA'PESMITH. n. s. [from shape and smith.] One who undertakes to improve the form of the body. A burlesque word.

No shapessmith yet set up and drove a trade, To mend the work that Providence had made.

SHA'PELINESS. n. s. [from shapely.] Beauty or proportion of form.

SHA'PELY.† adj. [from shape.] Symmetrical; well formed.

Shapetich for to ben an alderman.

The shapely column.

SHARD.† n. s. [from schærde, Frisick. Dr. Johnson.—The part participle of the Sax. scapan, to cut, to divide, to separate. Mr. H. Tooke. With this agrees the definition of the word in our old lexicography: "Shards, pieces of stones broken and scattered." Huloet.]

1. A fragment of an earthen vessel, or of any brittle substance.

For charitable prayers, Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;

Yet here she is allow'd her virgin crants, Her maiden strewments.

The splinters and shards of so violent a jousting.

2. The shell of an egg or a snail.

Barret, Alv. 1580. Dr. Johnson overpasses this meaning; but, in his mistaken description of shard-borne, thinks that Shakespeare might intend, by shard, the sheath of the wings of insects.

Shard, or sherd, is undoubtedly our ancient word for a scale or outward covering, a case or sheath. See also SHARDED.

— A dragon— Whose scherdes shynen as the sunne.

3. [Chard.] A plant.

Shards or mallows for the pot, Keep the loosen'd body sound.

4. It seems in Spenser to signify a frith or strait. It is used, says Upton, in the west, for a gap; as it is in some parts of the north for a prospect through an avenue.

Upon that shore he spied Atin stand,
There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phedria's fleet bark, over that per'ulous shard.
Spenser, F. Q.

5. A sort of fish.

SHARDBORNE.† adj. [shard and borne.
Dr. Johnson had defined this compound "born or produced among broken stones or pots;" as Warburton had explained it, "hatched in clefts of wood." But later commentators have rightly shewn it to mean "carried or borne along the air by its scaly wings;" according to the old meaning of shard in the second definition.] Borne along the air by sheathed wings.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shardborne beetle with his drowsy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done

A deed of dreadful note. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
SHARDED.† adj. [from shard.] Having wings within shells as it were; sheath-winged. Dr. Johnson has inaccurately given "inhabiting shards" as the meaning. Mr. Steevens has also made the citation from Gower which illustrates the true sense.

With his sword, and with his speere,
He might not the serpent dere, (i. e. hurt),
He was so sharded all about,
It held all edge tooke withoute.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Often shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold,
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. Shaks. Cymbeline.

To SHARE.† v. a. [ſceapen, ſcepan, Sax. Serenius considers it, in all its significations, as derived from the Su. Goth. skæra, to divide, to separate, to cut.]

1. To divide; to part among many.

Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.
Shakespeare.

Any man may make trial of his fortune, provided he acknowledge the lord's right, by sharing out unto him a toll. Carew.

Well may he then to you his cares impart,
And share his burden where he shares his heart.
Dryden.

In the primitive times the advantage of priesthood was equally shared among all the order, and none of that character had any superiority. Collier.
Though the weight of a falsehood would be too heavy for one to bear, it grows light in their imaginations when it is shared among many.

Suppose I share my fortune equally between my children and a stranger, will that unite them?
Swift.

2. To partake with others; to seize or possess jointly with another.

In vain does valour bleed,
While avarice and rapine share the land.
Milton, Sonnet.

Go, silently enjoy your part of grief,
And share the sad inheritance with me. Dryden.
Wav'd by the wanton winds his banner flies,
All maiden white, and shares the pauper's eyes.
Dryden.

This was the prince decreed
To share his sceptre. Dryden, Æn.
Not a love of liberty, nor thirst of honour,
Drew you thus far; but hopes to share the spoil
Of conquer'd towns and plunder'd provinces.

Addison, Cato.

All night it rains, the shews return with day;
Great Jove with Cæsar shares his sov'reign sway.
Logie.

3. To cut; to separate; to sheer.

With swift wheel reverse deep entering shar'd
All his right side. Milton, P. L.
Scalp, face, and shoulders the keen steel divides,
And the shar'd visage hangs on equal sides.
Dryden.

To SHARE. v. n. To have part; to have a dividend.

I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Had greater haste these sacred rites prepar'd,
Some guilty mouths had in your triumphs shar'd;
But this untainted year is all your own. Dryden.

A right of inheritance gave every one a title to share in the goods of his father. Locke.

This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs. Swift.

SHARE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Part; allotment; dividend obtained.

If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and beseeching share,
Of that which lowly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some few with vast excess.

Milton, Comus.

The subdued territory was divided into greater and smaller shares, besides that reserved to the prince. Temple.

I'll give you arms; burn, ravish, and destroy:
For my own share one beauty I design;
Engage your honours that she shall be mine.
Dryden.

While fortune favour'd,
I made some figure; nor was my name
Obscured, nor I without my share of fame.
Dryden, Æn.

The youths have equal share
In Marcia's wishes, and divide their sister.
Addison, Cato.

In poets, as true genius is but rare,
True taste as seldom is the critic's share. Pope.
He who doth not perform that part assigned him, is a very mischievous member of the publick; because he takes his share of the profit, and yet leaves his share of the burden to be born by others. Swift.

2. To go shares; to partake.

They went a hunting, and every one to go share and share alike in what they took. L'Estrange.

Lady, you are the cruellest she alive,
If you will lead these graces to the grave,
And leave the world no copy. Shaks. Tw. Night.

I was wont

To load my she with knacks; I would have ransack'd
The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

3. The female; not the male.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear,
To win thee, lady. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
The nightingale, if she would sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, wou'd be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakespeare.

He-lions are hirsute, and have great manes, the shes are smooth like cats. Bacon.

Stand it in Judah's chronicles confest,
That David's son, by impious passion mov'd,
Smote a she-slave, and murder'd what he lov'd.

Prior.

SHEAF.† n. s. sheaves, plural. [scæp, Sax. shooft, Dutch; from scœpan, to shove or thrust together. Junius.]

1. A bundle of stalks of corn bound together, that the ears may dry.

These be the sheaves that honour's harvest bears,
The seed thy valiant acts, the field the field.

Fairfax.

He beheld a field,
Part arable and tilth; whereon were sheaves
New-reap'd; the other part sheep-walks and folds.

Milton, P. L.

The reaper fills his greedy hands,
And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands.

Dryden.

2. Any bundle or collection held together.

She vanish'd;
The sheaf of arrows shook and rattled in the case. Dryden.

In the knowledge of bodies, we must glean what we can; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves; and in bundles comprehend the nature of whole species. Locke.

To SHEAF.* v. n. [from the noun.] To make sheaves.

They that reap, must sheaf and bind.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

To SHEAL. v. a. To shell. See SHALE.

That's a shaded peasecod. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To SHEAR.† preter. shore, or sheared; part. pass. shorn. [scœpan, scian, Sax. See To SHARE. Potshare was anciently potscar. Ray. This word is more frequently written sheer, but sheer cannot analogically form shore or shorn; shear, shore, shorn; as tear, to, tear, torn.]

1. To clip or cut by interception between two blades moving on a rivet.

So many days, my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks, ere the poor fools will yearn;
So many months, ere I shall sheer the fleece.

Shakespeare.

Laban went to sheer his sheep. Gen. xxii. 19.
When wool is new shorn, they set pails of water by in the same room to increase its weight.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To lay my head, and hallow'd pledge
Of all my strength, in the lascivious lap
Of a deceitful concubine, who shore me,
Like a tame wether, all my precious fleece.

Milton, S. A.

The same ill taste of sense would serve to join
Dog foxes in the yoke, and sheer the swine.

Dryden.

May'st thou henceforth sweetly sleep!
Shear, swains, oh shear your softest sheep,
To swell his couch.

Gay.

O'er the congenial dust enjoin'd to shear
The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear. Pope.

2. To cut by interception.

The sharp and toothed edge of the nether chap strikes into a canal cut into the bone of the upper;
and the toothed protuberance of the upper into a canal in the nether: by which means he easily sheers the grass whereon he feeds, Grew.

3. To cut down as by the sickle; to reap.

North. [skæara, Su. Goth.] This is also old in our language.
She pulleth up some [herbs] by the roote,
And many with a knife she shereth.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

To SHEAR.† v. n. [In navigation.]

1. To make an indirect course.

2. To pierce.

As a sheering wind, it killeth all in the bud.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. L. 2. b.

SHEAR. } n. s. [from the verb. It is SHEARS. } seldom used in the singular, but is found once in Dryden.]

1. An instrument to cut, consisting of two blades moving on a pin, between which the thing cut is intercepted. Shears are a larger, and scissors a smaller instrument of the same kind. Pope uses shears for scissors.

Alas! thought Philoclea to herself, your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings that already is flown away. Sidney.

Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?

Think you I bear the shears of destiny?

Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shaks.

The fates prepar'd their sharpen'd sheers.

Dryden.

When the fleece is shorn,
Then their defenceless limbs the brambles tear;
Short of their wool, and naked from the sheers.

Dryden.

That people live and die, I knew
An hour ago, as well as you;
And if fate spins us longer years,
Or is in haste to take the shears,
I know, we must both fortunes try,
And bear our evils, wet or dry.

Prior.

How happy should we be if we had the privilege of employing the sheers, for want of a mint, upon foreign gold, by clipping it into half-crowns!

Swift.

Fate urg'd the shears, and cut the sylph in twain,
But airy substance soon unites again.

Pope.

Beneath the shears they felt no lasting smart,
They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart.

Gay.

2. The denomination of the age of sheep.

When sheep is one shear, they will have two broad teeth before; when two shear, four; when three, six; when four, eight: and after that, their mouths break.

Mortimer.

3. Any thing in the form of the blades of shears.

4. Wings, in Spenser.

Two sharp-wing'd sheers

Decked with divers plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back to cut his airy ways.

Spenser.

SHEARD. n. s. [ſceap̄, Saxon.] A fragment. It is now commonly written shard, and applied only to fragments of earthen ware.

There shall not be found in the bursting of it a sheard to take fire from the hearth, or to take water wihal out of the pit.

Isa. xxx. 14.

SHEARER. † n. s. [from shear.]

1. One that clips with shears; particularly one that fleeces sheep.

Of other care they little reckoning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.

Milton, Lycidas.

Was he to be led as a lamb to the slaughter,
patient and resigned as a sheep before her shearers?

Rogers.

2. In the north of England, a reaper.

SHEARMAN. n. s. [shear and man.] He that shears.

Thy father was a plasterer,
And thou thyself a shearman.

Shakespeare.

SHEARWATER. n. s. [laurus niger.] A fowl.

Ainsworth.

SHEATH. † n. s. [ſcæðe, Sax. schede, Teut. scheyd, Germ. from scheiden, to separate; ſceaban, Saxon, the same. Wachter, and Mr. H. Tooke.] The case of any thing; the scabbard of a weapon.

The dead knight's sword out of his sheath he drew,

With which he cut a lock off all their hair.

Spenser, F. Q.

Doth not each look a flash of lightning feel,
Which spares the body's sheath, yet melts the steel?

Cleveland.

Swords, by the lightning's subtle force distill'd,
And the cold sheath with running metal fill'd.

Addison.

To SHEATH. } v. a. [from the noun.]
To SHEATHE. }

1. To inclose in a sheath or scabbard; to inclose in any case.

This drawn but now against my sovereign's breast,

Before 'tis sheath'd, shall give him peace and rest.

Waller.

In his hair one hand he wreaths,
His sword, the other, in his bosom sheaths.

Denham.

Is this her hate to him, his love to me!

'Tis in my breast she sheaths her dagger now.

Dryden.

The left foot naked, when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheath the right.

Dryden.

The leopard, and all of this kind as goes, keeps the claws of his forefeet turned up from the ground and sheathed in the skin of his toes, whereby he preserves them sharp for rapine, extending them only when he leaps at the prey.

Grew.

2. [In philosophy.] To obtund any acid particles.

Those active parts of a body are of differing natures when sheath'd up, or wedged in amongst others in the texture of a concrete; and when extricated from these impediments.

Boyle.

Other substances opposite to acrimony are called demulcent or mild; because they blunt or sheath those sharp salts, as pease and beans.

Arbutnot.

3. To fit with a sheath.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat,

Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing.

Shakespeare.

4. To defend the main body by an outward covering.

It were to be wished, that the whole navy throughout were sheathed as some are.

Raleigh.

SHEATHLESS.  adj.* [from sheath.] Without a sheath.

The fatal cause was now at last explor'd;

Her veil she knew, and saw his sheathless sword.

Ensden, Ou. Met. 4.

SHEATHWINGED. adj. [sheath and wing.] Having hard cases which are folded over the wings.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all vaginipennous, or sheathwinged insects, as beetles and dorrs.

Brown.

SHEATHY. adj. [from sheath.] Forming a sheath.

With a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on earwigs' backs, and you may draw forth two wings.

Brown.

To SHEAVE.  v. a.* [from sheaf.] To bring together; to collect.

As for the work itself, it is sheaved up from a few gleanings in part of our English fields.

Ashmole, Theat. Chem. (1652). Prol.

SHEAVED.  adj.* [from sheaves.] Made of straw.

Her hair, nor loose nor ty'd in formal plait,
Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride;
For some, untuck'd, descended her sheav'd hat,
Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside.

Shakespeare, Lou. Complaint.

SHECKLATON. † n. s. A corruption of the Fr. ciclaton, which originally signified a circular robe of state, from the low Lat. cyclas; and afterwards the cloth of gold, of which such robes were generally made. Spenser was mistaken in his notion that the quilted Irish jacket had any resemblance to this robe in which Chaucer has dressed Sir Thopas. Tyrwhitt.

He went to fight against the giant in his robe of shecklaton, which is that kind of gilded leather with which they use to embroider the jackets.

Spenser.

To SHED. v. a. [ſceban, Sax.]

1. To effuse; to pour out; to spill.

The painful service, and the drops of blood shed for my thankless country, are required

But with that surname of Coriolanus. Shakespeare.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear

In all my miseries. Shakespeare.

For this is my blood which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. St. Matt. xxvi. 28.

Some think one general soul fills ev'ry brain,
As the bright sun sheds light in ev'ry star. Davies.

Around its entry nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing, sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.

You seem'd to mourn another lover dead,
My sighs you gave him, and my tears you shed.

Dryden.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws

Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:

'Tis love of honour, and his country's good;

The consul, not the father, sheds the blood.

Dryden.

In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
These moss-grown domes with spiry turrets crown'd,

Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light,

Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.

2. To scatter; to let fall.

Trees that bring forth their leaves late, and cast them late, are more lasting than those that sprout their leaves early, or shed them betimes.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

So the returning year be blest,
As his infant months bestow

Springing wreaths for William's brow;

As his summer's youth shall shed

Eternal sweets around Maria's head. Prior.

To SHED. v. n. To let fall its parts.

White oats are apt to shed most as they lie, and black as they stand.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

SHED. † n. s. [ſceþ, Sax. a shade.]

1. A slight temporary covering.

The first Aletes born in lowly shed,
Of parents base, a rose sprung from a bribe.

Fairfax.

Though he his house of polish'd marble build,
With Jasper floor'd, and carved cedar ceil'd;
Yet shall it ruin like the moth's frail cell,
Or sheds of reeds, which summer's heat repel.

Sandys.

In such a season born, when scarce a shed
Could be obtain'd to shelter him or me

From the bleak air. Milton, P. R.

So all our minds with his conspire to grace
The Gentiles' great apostle, and deface

Those state-obscuring sheds, that like a chain

Seem'd to confine and fetter him again. Waller.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining osiers fence'd, and moss their beds.

Dryden.

An hospitable house they found,
A homely shed; the roof, not far from ground,

Was thatch'd with reeds and straw together bound.

Dryden.

Then out he steals, and finds where by the head
Their horse hung fasten'd underneath a shed.

Batterton.

Here various kinds, by various fortunes led,
Commence acquaintance underneath a shed. Swift.

Weak as the Roman chief, who strove to hide

His father's cot, and once his father's pride,

By casing a low shed of rural mould

With marble walls, and roof adorn'd with gold.

Harte.

2. In composition. Effusion; as blood-shed. [from the verb.]

SHEEDER. n. s. [from shed.] A spiller; one who sheds.

A shedder of blood shall surely die.

of shine. Dr. Johnson.—It is the Sax.

ſcen, ſcene, bright, clear, shining; and anciently written shene.] Bright; glittering; shewy; fair. A word now not in use.

That lewd ribbald, with vile lust advanc'd,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse so fair and sheen.

Spenser, F. Q.

When he was all dight, he took his way
Into the forest, that he might be seen
Of the wild beasts, in his new glory sheen.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Now they never met in grove or green,
By fountain clear or spangled star-light sheen.

Shakspeare.

Up rose each warrior bold and brave,
Glistening in filed steel and armour sheen.

Fairfax.

Out of the hierarchies of angels sheen,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest.

Fairfax.

By the rusby-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays,
Thick set with agat, or the azure sheen,
Of turquois blue, and emerald green.

Milton, Comus.

Or did of late earth's sons besiege the wall
Of sheeny heaven?

Milton, Od.

SHEEN, n. s. [from the adjective.] Brightness; splendour. Not now used.

Mercy will sit between,
Thron'd in celestial sheen.

Milton, Od.

Far above, in spangled sheen,
Celestial Cupid, her fam'd son, advanc'd,
Holds his dear Psyche sweet entranc'd.

Milton, Comus.

SHEEP, n. s. plural likewise sheep. [reap, Saxon; of which the plural was reep; sheap, Dutch; probably from the Gr. σκήπη, to cover, as Junius and others have supposed; both because the wool of the animal has been used for coverings, or garments; and because itself is well clothed or covered.]

1. The animal that bears wool: remarkable for its usefulness and innocence.

Fire the brambles, snare the birds, and steep
In wholesome water-falls the fleecy sheep.

Dryden.

Of substances there are two sorts of ideas; one of single substances, as they exist separately, as a man or sheep.

Locke.

2. [In contempt.] A foolish silly fellow.

Atinsworth.

3. [In theology.] The people, considered as under the direction of God, or of their pastor,

We are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.

Psalms.

To SHEEPBITE, v. n. [sheep and bite.] To use petty thefts.

Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you;
Shew your sheepbiting face, and be hanged.

Shakspeare.

SHEEPBITER, n. s. [from sheepbite.] A petty thief.

His gate like a sheepbiter fleeing aside, Tusser.
Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheepbiter come to some notable shame?

Shakspeare.

There are political sheepbiters, as well as pastoral: betrayers of public trusts, as well as of private.

L'Estrange.

SHEEPCOT, n. s. [sheep and cot.] A little enclosure for sheep.

Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
From low farms, sheepcots and mills
Inforce their charity.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round,

VOL. III.

If cottage were in view, sheepcot or herd;
But cottage, herd, or sheepcot none he saw.

Milton, P. R.

SHEEPFOLD, n. s. [sheep and fold.] The place where sheep are enclosed.

The bear, the lion, terrors of the plain,
The sheepfold scatter'd and the shepherd slain.

Prior.

SHEEPHOOK, n. s. [sheep and hook.] A hook fastened to a pole by which shepherds lay hold on the legs of their sheep.

The one carried a crosier of balm-wood, the other a pastoral staff of cedar like a sheephook.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

If you dare think of deservng our charms,
Away with your sheephook, and take to your arms.

Dryden.

SHEEPFISH, adj. [from sheep.]

1. Relating to sheep. Not in use.

How to chuse the best tar; to bring in the idle stragglers; how to excell in sheepish surgery; how to please Pan, and enchant the rural gods with your melody.

Stafford's Niobe, P. ii. (1611), p. 218.

2. Bashful; over-moderate; timorously and meanly diffident.

Wanting change of company, he will, when he comes abroad, be a sheepish or conceited creature.

Locke.

SHEEPFISHLY, adv. [from sheepish.] Timorously; with mean diffidence.

It is the part of a good-natured man, neither so rigidly to insist upon the punctilios of his liberty and property, as to refuse a glass recommended to him by civility; nor yet, on the other side, sheepishly submit himself to be taxed in his drink.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

SHEEPFISHNESS, n. s. [from sheepish.] Bashfulness; mean and timorous diffidence.

Thy gentry bleats, as if thy native cloth Transfus'd a sheepfishness into thy story. Herbert.
Sheepfishness and ignorance of the world, are not consequences of being bred at home.

Locke.

Without success, let a man be never so hardy, he will have some degree of sheepfishness.

Grev.

Your books will come and right themselves. Swift.

2. A sand bank in the sea; a rock under shallow water. See SHALLOW.

God wisheth none should wreck on a strange shelf;

To Him man's dearer than t' himself;

And, howsoever we may think things sweet,

He always gives what He knows meet;

Which who can use is happy. B. Jonson, Forest, iii.

Our transported souls shall congratulate each other their having now fully escaped the numerous rocks, shelves, and quick-sands. Boyle.

Near the shelves of Circe's shores they run,
A dang'rous coast. Dryden.

He call'd his money in;

But the prevailing love of self

Soon split him on the former shelf;

He put it out again. Dryden.

3. The plural is analogically shelves;
Dryden has shelves, probably by negligence.

He seiz'd the helm, his fellows cheer'd,

Turn'd short upon the shelves, and madly steer'd. Dryden.

SHE'LFY. adj. [from shelf.]

1. Full of hidden rocks or banks; full of dangerous shallows.

Glides by the siren's cliffs a sheffy coast,

Long infamous for ships and sailors lost,

And white with bones. Dryden.

2. I know not well the meaning in this passage, perhaps rocky.

The tillable fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some so sheffy that the corn hath much ado to fasten its root. Carew.

SHELL.† n. s. [şell, şell, Sax. schale, schelle, Teut. schale, Germ. skal, Icel.
skalja, M. Goth. a shell, a scale. See also SHALE.]

1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.

The sun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the shell of the colipile, and the abyss as the water within it; now when the heat of the sun had pierced through the shell and reached the waters, it rurified them. Burnet, Theory.

Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the shell of the earth. Locke.

2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.

Her women wear

The spoils of nations in an ear;

Chang'd for the treasure of a shell,

And in their loose attires do swell. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Was to Neptune recommended;

Peace and plenty spread the sails;

Venus, in her shell before him,

From the sands in safety bore him. Dryden, Albion.

The shells served as moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards free from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

He, whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
At all times just, but when he sign'd the shell. Pope.

3. The covering of the seeds of siliquous plants.

Some fruits are contained within a hard shell, being the seeds of the plants. Arbuthnot.

4. The covering of kernels.

Chang'd loves are but chang'd sorts of meat;
And when he hath the kernel eat,
Who doth not throw away the shell? Donne.

5. The covering of an egg.

Think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous,
And kill him in the shell. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

6. The outer part of an house.

The marquis of Medina Sidonia made the shell of a house, that would have been a very noble building, had he brought it to perfection. Addison on Italy.

7. It is used for a musical instrument in poetry, from testudo, Latin; the first lyre being said to have been made by straining strings over the shell of a tortoise.

Less than a god they thought there could not dwell

Within the hollow of that shell,

That spoke so sweetly, and so well. Dryden.

8. The superficial part.

So devout are the Romanists about this outward shell of religion, that if an altar be moved, or a stone of it broken, it ought to be reconsecrated.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

9. In artillery, a bomb. See BOMB.

10. A common coarse-made kind of coffin.
Bodies are frequently put into shells, previous to their being laid in the coffin in which they are screwed down.

To SHELL.† v. a. [from the noun. Dr.
Johnson.—Sax. arcealian, arclian, to peel. So in our old lexicography, "to shillen out of the cods." Prompt. Parv.
See also To SHEAL.] To take out of the shell; to strip of the shell.

To SHELL. v. n.

1. To fall off as broken shells.

The ulcers were cured, and the scabs shelled off.
Wiseman.

2. To cast the shell.

SHE'LDUCK.† See SHELDUCK.

SHE'LLFISH.† n. s. [şell-şyçar, Sax.] Fish invested with a hard covering, either testaceous, as oysters, or crustaceous, as lobsters.

The shells, being sound, were so like those they saw upon their shores, that they never questioned but that they were the exuviae of shellfish, and once belonged to the sea. Woodward.

SHE'LLMEAT.* n. s. [shell and meat.] Food consisting of shellfish.

Shellmeats may be eaten after foul hands, without any harm. Fuller, Hol. State, (1648.) p. 386.

SHE'LLY.† adj. [from shell.]

1. Abounding with shells.

The ocean rolling, and the shelly shore,
Beautiful objects, shall delight no more. Prior.

2. Consisting of shells.

The snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Ad.

The conceit of Anaximander was, that the first men and all animals were bred in some warm moisture, inclosed in crustaceous skins, as if they were various kinds of crabfish and lobsters; and so continued, till they arrived at perfect age; when their shelly prisons growing dry, and breaking, made way for their liberty! Bentley, Serms. 4.

SHELLWORK.* n. s. [shell and work.] Work made of or trimmed with shells.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

SHELTER.† n. s. [Of this word the etymology is unknown: Skinner deduces it from shell, Davies from scylb, a shield, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius also refers to the Saxon word. The Icel. skioldr, a shield, is still nearer to our shelter.]

1. A cover from any external injury or violence.

We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.
They wish the mountains now might be again
Thrown on them, as a shelter from his ire.

Milton, P. L.
Heroes of old, when wounded, shelter sought;
But he who meets all dangers with disdain,
Ev'n in their face his ship to anchor brought,
And steeple high stood prompt upon the main.

Dryden.
They may learn experience, and avoid a cave as the worst shelter from rain, when they have a lover in company.

The healing plant shall aid,
From storms a shelter, and from heat a shade.

Pope.

2. A protector; a defender; one that gives security.

Thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy.

Ps. lxi. 3.

3. The state of being covered; protection; security.

Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd;
Which shade and shelter from the hill derives,
While the kind river wealth and beauty gives.

Denham.

Who into shelter takes their tender bloom,
And forms their minds to fly from ills to come?

Young.

To SHELTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover from external violence.

We besought the deep to shelter us. Milton.
Those ruins shelter'd once his sacred head,
When he from Worcester's fatal battle fled,
Watch'd by the genius of this royal place.

Dryden.

2. To defend; to protect; to succour with refuge; to harbour.

What endless honour shall you gain,
To save and shelter Troy's unhappy train.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To betake to cover.

They sheltered themselves under a rock. Abbot.
Comfort thyself with such thoughts, chiefly when all earthly comforts fail thee: then do thou particularly retreat to those considerations, and shelter thyself under them.

Asterbury.

4. To cover from notice. This seems less proper.

In vain I strove to check my growing flame,
Or shelter passion under friendship's name;
You saw my heart.

Prior.

To SHELTER. v. n.

1. To take shelter.

There the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
Shelters in cool.

Milton, P. L.

2. To give shelter.

Then seeks the farthest ooze, the sheltering weed,
The cavern'd bank, his old secure abode.

Thomson.

SHELTERLESS. adj. [from shelter.] Harbourless; without home or refuge.

Now sad and shelterless, perhaps, she lies,
Where piercing winds blow sharp.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

SHELTERY.* adj. [from shelter.] Affording shelter.

They spend their winters under the warm and shelterly shores of Gibraltar and Barbary.

White's Selborne, p. 86.

SHELTIE.* n. s. A small horse, so called in Scotland.

Shetland produces little horses, commonly called shelties; and they are very sprightly, though the least of the kind to be seen any where.

Martin, West. Islands.

To SHELVES. v. a. [from shelf.] To place on shelves.

Here he glanceth wittily at the delicacy of this scholar;
from whence he descendeth to the too accurate disposing or shelving of his books.

Comment on Chaucer, (1665), p. 10.

SHELVING. adj. [from shelf.] Sloping; inclining; having declivity.

Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it,
Without apparent hazard of his life.

Shakspeare.

Amidst the brake a hollow den was found,
With rocks and shelving arches vaulted round.

Addison.

SHELVY. adj. [from shelf.] Shallow; rocky; full of banks.

I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow.

Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

To SHEND. v. a. preter. and part. pass. shent [rcenban, Sax. schenden, Dutch.]

1. To ruin; to spoil; to mischief.

Provide for thy wife, or else look to be shent,
Good milchcow for winter, another for Lent.

Tusser.

Shepherds, should it not yshend
Your rounds fresh, to hear a doleful yerse
Of Rosalind, that Colin made?

Spenser.

Such a dream I had of dire portent,
That much I fear my body will be shent;
It bodes I shall have wars.

Dryden.

2. To disgrace; to degrade; to blame; to reproach.

Debateful strife, and cruel enmity,
The famous name of knighthood foully shend.

Spenser, F. Q.

Sore bruised with the fall, he slow uprose,
And all enraged, thus him loudly shent:
Disleal knight! whose coward courage chose
To wreak itself on beast.

Spenser, F. Q.

My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites,
How in my word soever she be shent,
To give them seals never my soul consent.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

3. To overpower; to crush; to surpass.

She pass'd the rest as Cynthia doth shend
The lesser stars.

Spenser.

4. It is, though used by Dryden, wholly obsolete.

SHEPHERD. n. s. [rccep, sheep, and hýpb, a keeper, Saxon, rceaphýpb.]

1. One who tends sheep in the pasture.

I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze.

Shaks.

More meek came with the firstlings of his flock.

Milton, P. L.

2. A swain; a rural lover.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee, and be thy love.

Raleigh.

3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.

Lead up all those who heard thee, and believe;
'Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
And glad all heaven with millions thou hast sav'd.

Prior.

SHEPHERDESS. n. s. [from shepherd.] A woman that tends sheep; a rural lass.

She put herself into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise lived many years; but discovering herself a little before her death, did profess herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him she first loved; and that she would rather, ten thousand times, live a shepherdess in contentment and satisfaction.

Sidney.
These your unusual weeds to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora
Peering in April's front.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
She like some shepherdess did shew,
Who sat to bathe her by a river's side.

Dryden.
His Dorick dialect has incomparable sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in country russet.

Dryden.
SHEPHERDS Needle. n. s. [scandix, Lat.]

Venus comb. An herb.

SHEPHERDS Purse, or Pouch.† n. s. [bursa pastoris, Lat.] A common weed.

To him that hath a flux, of shepherds-purse he gives,

And mouse-ear unto him whom some sharp rupture grieves.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.
SHEPHERDS Rod. n. s. Teasel, of which plant it is a species.

SHEPHERDISH. adj. [from shepherd.] Resembling a shepherd; suiting a shepherd; pastoral; rustick. Not in use.

He would have drawn her eldest sister, esteemed her match for beauty, in her shepherdish attire.

Sidney.
She saw walking from her ward a man in shepherdish apparel.

Sidney.
SHEPHERDLY.* adj. [from shepherd.]

Pastoral; rustick; a better word than shepherdish.

We read Rebekah, in the primitive plainness and shepherdly simplicity of those times, accepted bracelets and other ornaments, without any disparagement to her virgin modesty.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handson. p. 20.

SHERBET.† n. s. [sharbat, Arabick.] Dr. Johnson. — Sharbat signifies simply a draught; the Persian sherbet, a pleasant liquor, according to Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 316.] A drink that quenches thirst, and tastes deliciously: the composition is cool water, into which they infuse sirrop of lemons and rose-water; in those torrid countries the most refreshing sort of liquor that can be invented.

Herbert.
They prefer our beer above all other drinks; and considering that water is with the rarest especially in this climate, the dearest of sherbets, and plenty of barley, it would prove infinitely profitable to such as should bring in the use thereof.

Sandys.
SHERD. n. s. [rccep, Saxon.] A fragment of broken earthen ware. See SHARD.

The trivet-tale of a foot was lame;
She thrusts beneath the limping leg a sherd.

Dryden.
SHERIFF. n. s. [rcýpegepe, Saxon, from rcepe, a shire, and peve, a steward. It is sometimes pronounced shrieve, which some poets have injudiciously adopted.]

An officer to whom is intrusted in each county the execution of the laws.

A great power of English and of Scots
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown.

Shaks.
3 s 2

Concerning ministers of justice, the high sheriffs of the counties have been very ancient in this kingdom. Bacon.

Now may 'rs and shrieves all hush'd and sate lay. Pope.

SHE'RIFFALTY. } n. s. [from sheriff.] The SHE'RIFFDOM. } office or jurisdiction
SHE'RIFFSHIP. } of a sheriff.
SHE'RIFFWICK. }

There was a resumption of patents of gaols, and re-annexing to them sheriffwicks; privileged officers being no less an interruption of justice than privileged places. Bacon.

Holding by patent the inheritance of the sheriffdom. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.

SHE'RRIS. } n. s. [from Xeres, a town
SHE'RRIS Sack. } of Andalusia in Spain.
SHE'RRY. } A kind of Spanish wine.

Your sherris warms the blood, which before, cold and settled, left the liver white, which is the badge of pusillanimity, but the sherris makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakespeare.

Good sherris sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish dull vapours, and makes it apprehensive. Shakespeare.

While the tinker did dine, he had plenty of wine, Rich canary with sherry, and tent superfine. Old Ballad, Percy's Rel. i. ii. 16.

SHEW. See SHOW.

*TO SHEW. See TO SHOW.

*SHE'WER. n. s. [from shew.] One who sheweth or teacheth what is to be done. Huloet. This old spelling is at least in this word to be preferred; as shower, (which, though not in Dr. Johnson's, is in later dictionaries,) confounds the appearance of this word with a shower of rain or any thing else.

*SHIBBOLETH. n. s. [Hebrew; an ear of corn, and also floods of water. Patrick on Judges, xii. 6.] A word which was made a criterion, whereby the Gileadites distinguished the Ephraimites in their pronouncing s for sh: hence, in a figurative sense, the criterion of a party. Scott.

Adjudg'd to death

For want of well pronouncing shibboleth.

Milton, S. A.

According to the sanctified whine, and peculiar dialect of those times of infatuation, noise and nonsense mightily bore down sense and reason; and the godliness then in vogue turned religion quite out of doors. It was the very shibboleth of the party; nothing being so much in fashion with them as the name, nor more out of fashion, and out of sight too, than the thing itself. South, Serm. vi. 128.

SHIDE.† n. s. rcibe, Sax. scindula; probably from rcaban, to divide; scheiden, Germ. and scheiden, Teut. the same; scidi, Lat. from scindo, to cut.] A piece split off, spoken of wood, a cleft shade. Gloucestershire, according to Grose. In some places it also means a small solid piece of wood, a billet; not a slip or splinter.

SHIELD.† n. s. [rcýlb, Sax. skioldr, Icel. from the Su. Goth. skyla, to cover, according to Ihre and Serenius. But hear also an older etymologist: "Shields, which seemeth to be borrowed from the Hebrew name shiltes, (shilte), hath the signification of power or dominion, as being used of great and mighty men." Leigh's Critica Sacra, 1650. p. 253.]

1. A buckler; a broad piece of defensive armour held on the left arm to ward off blows.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight

With hearts more proof than shields.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

His ponderous shield,

Ethereal temper, massy, large and round,
Behind him cast; the broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon.

Milton, P. L.

2. Defence; protection.

3. One that gives protection or security.

The terror of the Trojan field,
The Grecian honour, ornament, and shield,
High on a pile th' unconquer'd chief is plac'd.

Dryden.

TO SHIELD.† v. a. [from the noun; Sax. rcýlban.]

1. To cover with a shield.

2. To defend; to protect; to secure.

Were't my fitness to let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones: howe'er

A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Shouts of applause ran ringing through the field,
To see the son the vanquish'd father shield.

Dryden.

Hear one that comes to shield his injur'd honour,
And guard his life with hazard of her own. Smith.

3. To keep off; to defend against.

Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations, into the sweet soil of Europe, they brought with them their usual weeds, fit to shield the cold, to which they had been inured. Spenser.

My lord, I must intreat the time alone.
— God shield I should disturb devotion. Shaks.

TO SHIFT.† v. n. [Of this word the original is obscure: skipta, Runick, is to change. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius refers also to skipta. But Lye has pointed out the Sax. rcýrcan, to divide, to distribute. Our old lexicography also thus illustrates the word: "To shiftyn, or departen asunder, or divide." Prompt-Parv. The Su. Goth. skifta, however, is also to change.]

1. To change place.

Vegetables being fixed to the same place, and so not able to shift and seek out after proper matter for their increment, it was necessary that it should be brought to them. Woodward.

2. To change; to give place to other things.

If the ideas of our minds constantly change and shift, in a continual succession, it would be impossible for a man to think long of any one thing. Locke.

3. To change clothes, particularly the linen.

She begs you just would turn you while she shifts. Young.

4. To find some expedient; to act or live, though with difficulty.

We cannot shift: being in, we must go on.

Daniel.

Men in distress will look to themselves, and leave their companions to shift as well as they can.

L'Estrange.

Since we desire no recompence nor thanks, we ought to be dismissed, and have leave to shift for ourselves. Swift.

5. To practise indirect methods.

All those schoolmen, though they were exceeding witty, yet better teach all their followers to shift than to resolve by their distinctions. Ralegh.

6. To take some method for safety.

Nature instructs every creature how to shift for itself in cases of danger. L'Estrange.

TO SHIFT. v. a.

1. To change; to alter.

It was not levity, but absolute necessity, that made the fish shift their condition. L'Estrange.

Come, assist me, muse obedient;
Let us try some new expedient;
Shift the scene for half an hour,
Time and place are in thy power. Swift.

2. To transfer from place to place.

Pare saffron between the two St. Mary's days,
Or set or go shift it that knowest the ways. Tusser.

3. To put by some expedient out of the way.

I shifted him away,
And laid good 'scuses on your ecstacy. Shakespeare, Othello.

4. To change in position.

Neither use they sails, nor place their oars in order upon the sides; but carrying the oar loose, shift it hither and thither at pleasure. Ralegh.

Where the wind

Veers oft, as oft she steers and shifts her sail. Milton, P. L.

Now shift your sails. Dryden, Æn.

5. To change, as clothes.

I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shakespeare, Cymb.

6. To dress in fresh clothes.

As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to shift me. Shaks. Hen. IV.

7. TO SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.

The most beautiful parts must be the most finished, the colours and words most chosen: many things in both, which are not deserving of this care, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expressions. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Struggle and contrive as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gain. Locke.

By various illusions of the devil they are prevailed on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised.

Rogers, Serm.

SHIFT.† n. s. [from the verb; skifte, Su. change.]

1. Change. This primary meaning Dr. Johnson has overpassed.

My going to Oxford was not merely for shift of air. Wotton, Lett. (in 1626), Rem. p. 321.

They had three or four shifts of very good scenes. Drummond, Trav. (Lett. 1744), p. 15.

2. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.

She redoubling her blows, drave the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocence against violence. Sidney.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs, I'll find a thousand shifts to get away.

Shakespeare, K. John.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move up and down in the water.

Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift How to regain my sever'd company,
Compell'd me to awake the courteous echo,
To give me answer from her mossy couch. Milton, Comus.

A fashionable hypocrisy shall be called good manners, so we make a shift somewhat to legitimate the abuse. L'Estrange.

Those little animals provide themselves with wheat; but they can make shift without it.

Addison.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants, and we have made a tolerable shift to reduce them to classes.

Baker.

3. Indirect expedient; mean refuge; last resource.

The very custom of seeking so particular aid and relief at the hands of God, doth, by a secret contradiction, withdraw them from endeavouring to help themselves, even by those wicked shifts, which they know can never have his allowance whose assistance their prayers seek.

Hooker.

To say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term, is but a shift of ignorance.

Bacon.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick; So true, that he was awkward at a trick; For little souls on little shifts rely.

Dryden.

4. Fraud; artifice; stratagem.

Know ye not Ulysses' shifts?

Their swords less danger carry than their gifts.

Denham.

5. Evasion; elusory practice.

As long as wit, by whetting itself, is able to find out any shift, be it never so slight, whereby to escape out of the hands of present contradiction, they are never at a stand.

Hooker.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautious and wily-headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts.

Spenser.

Here you see your commission; this is your duty, these are your discouragements: never seek for shifts and evasions from worldly afflictions: this is your reward, if you perform it; this your doom, if you decline it.

South.

6. A woman's under linen.

SHIFTER.† n. s. [from shift.]

1. One who changes, or alters, the position of a thing; as, a scene-shifter.

2. One who plays tricks; a man of artifice.

Cosensers, shifters, outlaws.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref.

'Twas such a shifter, that, if truth were known, Death was half glad when he had got him down.

Milton, Ep. on Hobson.

SHIFTING.* n. s. [from shift.]

1. Act of changing; act of putting by some expedient out of the way.

The wisdom of all these later times, in princes' affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs when they are near, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof.

Bacon.

The vicissitudes and shiftings of ministerial measures.

Burke, Sp. on Concl. with America.

2. Evasion; fraud.

Nought more than subtil shiftings did me please,

With bloodshed, craftie, undermining men.

Mir. for Mag. p. 144.

SHIFTINGLY.* adv. [from shifting.] Cunningly; deceitfully.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

SHIFTLSS.† adj. [from shift.] Wanting expedients; wanting means to act or live.

He [Au'rey] was a shiftless person, roving and maggotty-headed, and sometimes little better than crazed.

Life of A. Wood, p. 209.

For the poor shiftless irrational, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are already furnished with such clothing.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

To SHILL.* v. a.

1. To separate; to shell. See To SHELL. Shilling oats, taking off the hulls. Used in the north.

2. To put under cover: more properly sheal: as, shilling sheep. Used also in the north. Grose, as Dr. Jamieson also has observed, has mistakenly applied this use of shill to that of separate or sever; not, however, misled by Ray.

SHYLLING. n. s. [scylling, Sax. and Erse; shelling, Dutch.] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence.

Five of these pence made their shilling, which they called scilling, probably from scilingus, which the Romans used for the fourth part of an ounce; and forty-eight of these scillings made their pound, and four hundred of these pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appeareth by the last will of king Alfred.

Camden.

The very same shilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days.

Locke.

Who with much pains exerting all his sense,

Can range aright his shillings, pounds, and pence.

Young.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand shill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinating.

I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it; I don't stand shill-I-shall-I then; if I say't, I'll do't.

Congreve, Way of the World.

SHYLY. adv. [from shy.] Not familiarly; not frankly.

To SHYMMER.* v. n. [scymman, Saxon; schimmer, Germ. to shine.] To gleam. "A litel shemering of light." Chaucer. In the north it is skimmer.

SHIN. n. s. [cina, Sax. schien, German.] The forepart of the leg.

I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger. Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

The shin bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow.

Peacham.

His leg then broke, Had got a deputy of oak; For when a shin in fight is cropt,

The knee, with one of timber's propt.

As when to an house we come,

To know if any one's at home,

We knock; so one must kick your shin,

Ere he can find your soul's within.

Anonymous.

To SHINE.† v. n. preterite I shone, I have shone; sometimes I shined, I have shined. [Goth. skainan; Icel. skyna, splendore, skin, fulgur; Sax. scinan, a Celt. cann vel cain, albus, white. See Wachter, and Serenius.]

1. To have bright resplendence; to glitter; to glisten; to gleam.

To-day the French,

All clinkquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,

Shone down the English; and to-morrow

Made Britain India: every man that stood,

Shew'd like a mine.

True paradise enclos'd with shining rock.

Milton, P. L.

We can dismiss thee ere the morning shin.

Milton, P. L.

Fair daughter, blow away these mists and clouds,

And let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre.

Denham.

The sun shines when he sees it.

Locke.

2. To be without clouds.

The moon shines bright: in such a night as this, When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees, And they did make no noise.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

How bright and goodly shines the moon! The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now.

Shakespeare.

Clear pools greatly comfort the eyes when the sun is overcast, or when the moon shineth.

Bacon.

3. To be glossy.

They are waxen fat, they shine. Jer. v. 28. Fish with their fins and shining scales.

To SHINE.* v. a. To cause to shine.

So shine your light before men, that they see your good works.

SHINE.† n. s. [cine, Sax. bright. But see SHEEN.]

1. Fair weather.

Be it fair or foul, or rain or shine. Dryden.

He will accustom himself to heat and cold, and shine and rain; all which if a man's body will not endure, it will serve him to very little purpose.

Locke.

2. Brightness; splendour; lustre. It is a word, though not unanalogical, yet ungraceful, and little used. Dr. Johnson. — Few words have been oftener used by our best writers.

Cynthia obscures her silver shine.

Shakespeare, Venus and Adonis.

His lightnings gave shine unto the world.

Ps. xcvi. 4.

Her device, within a ring of clouds, a heart with shine about it.

B. Jonson, Cynth. Revels.

Safely cover'd from the scalding shine.

P. Fletcher, Poesies.

With tapers' holy shine.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

He that has inured his eyes to that divine splendour, which results from the beauty of holiness, is not dazzled with the glittering shine of gold, and considers it as a vein of the same earth he treads on.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Say, in what mortal soil thou design'st to grow? Fair opening to some court's propitious shine, Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine?

Pope.

SH'INESS. n. s. [from shy.] Unwillingness to be tractable or familiar.

An incurable shiness is the vice of Irish horses, and is hardly ever seen in Flanders, because the winter forces the breeders there to house and handle their colts.

Temple.

They were famous for their justice in commerce, but extreme shiness to strangers: they exposed their goods with the price marked upon them, and then retired.

Arbutnot.

SH'INGLE.† n. s. [schindel, Germ. from scindula, Lat.] A thin board to cover houses; a sort of tiling.

The best to cleave, is the most useful for pales, laths, shingles, and wainscot.

Mortimer, Husb.

The night

Is shiny, and they say we shall enbattle By the second hour o' the morn.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

While from afar we heard the cannons play, Like distant thunder on a shiny day, For absent friends we were ashamed to fear.

Dryd.

SHIP. [rcip, rcyp, Saxon; schap, Dutch.] A termination noting quality or adjunct, as lordship; or office, as stewardship.

SHIP.† n. s. [rcip, Sax. schip, Teut. skip, M. Goth. and Icel. schiff, German. Mr. Horne Tooke deduces the word from the Sax. rcyppan, to fashion, to form, to prepare; "a ship [is] formatum aliquid, in contradistinction from a ræft, for the purpose of conveying merchandise, &c. by water, protected from the water and the weather." Div. of Purl. ii. 244. In this kind of deduction he is, however, anticipated and excelled by Wachter, who observes, "quod primæ naves fuerint alvei trasulatis, ex ligno cavati, et sic dicti à 'schieben, schaffen, agere, trudere, pellere, quod remis impellerentur. Tales fuisset veterum Germanorum naves, testis Plin. lib. 16. cap. 40. 'Germaniæ prædones singulis arboribus cavatis navigant, quarum quædam et triginta homines ferunt.' Hic primus et antiquissimus Germanicæ vocis sensus. Inde Græcis καρά, Lat. schopha, Armoricis scaff, Gall. esquiff, Italis schifo, pro cymba vel naviculâ ex arbore cavatâ. Postea idem nomen navibus communicari cœpit, quod ut scaphæ remis, et triremes trabibus, sic naves ventis et velis impellerentur. Qui simplicissima rerum initia mecum considerant, de veritate etymi vix dubitare possunt." A ship may be defined a large hollow building, made to pass over the sea with sails.

Watts.

All my followers to the eager foe Turn back and fly like ships before the wind.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There made forth to us a small boat, with about eight persons in it, whereof one of them had in his hand a tipstaff, who made aboard our ship. Bacon. Two other ships loaded with victuals were burnt, and some of the men saved by their shipboats.

Knolles.

Nor is indeed that man less mad than these, Who freights a ship to venture on the seas, With one frail interposing plank to save From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave.

Dryden.

Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his country such a sum of money, and return the same to the treasurer of the navy: hence that tax had the denomination of ship-money, by which accrued the yearly sum of two hundred thousand pounds.

Clarendon.

A ship-carpenter of old Rôme could not have talked more judiciously.

Addison.

To SHIP.† v. a. [from the noun; Saxon rcipian.]

1. To put into a ship.

My father at the road

Expects my coming, there to see me ship'd.

Shakespeare.

The emperor, shipping his great ordnance, departed down the river. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks. All the timber was cut down in the mountains of Cilicia, and shipped in the bay of Attalia, from whence it was by sea transported to Pelusium.

Knolles.

A breeze from shore began to blow, The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row; Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails Let fall.

Dryden.

2. To transport in a ship.

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch, But we will ship him hence. Shakespeare, Hamlet. Andronicus, would thou wert ship't to hell, Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.

Titus Andronicus.

In Portugal men spent with age, so as they cannot hope for above a year, ship themselves away in a Brazil fleet.

Temple.

3. It is sometimes enforced by off.

A single leaf can waft an army o'er, Or ship off senates to some distant shore.

Pope.

The canal that runs from the sea into the Arno gives a convenient carriage to all goods that are to be shipped off.

Addison.

4. In naval language, to receive into the ship: as, to ship a heavy sea.

SHIPBOARD. n. s. [ship and board.] See BOARD.]

1. This word is seldom used but in adverbial phrases; a shipboard, on shipboard, in a ship.

Let him go on shipboard, and the mariners will not leave their starboard and larboard. Bramhall.

Friend,

What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end?

Dryden.

Ovid, writing from on shipboard to his friends, excused the faults of his poetry by his misfortunes.

Dryden.

2. The plank of a ship.

They have made all thy shipboards of fir-trees, and brought cedars from Lebanon to make masts.

Ezek. xxvii. 5.

SH'PROY. n. s. [ship and boy.] Boy that serves in a ship.

Few or none know me: if they did,

This shipboy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.

Shakespeare.

SH'PLESS* adj. [ship and less.] Without ships.

It is by no means a shipless sea, but every where peopled with white sails.

Gray, Lett. to Dr. Wharton, (1766.)

SH'PMAN. n. s. [ship and man.] Sailor; seaman.

I myself have the very points they blew,

All the quarters that they know

I'th shipman's card. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Hiram sent in the navy shipmen that had knowledge of the sea.

1 Kings, ix. 27.

SH'PMASTER. n. s. Master of the ship.

The shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper! arise, call upon thy God.

Jon. i. 6.

SH'PMONEY* n. s. [ship and money.]

An imposition formerly levied on port towns, and other places, for fitting out ships; revived in king Charles the first's time, and abolished in the same reign.

Mr. Noy brought his ship-money first for maritime towns; but that was like putting in a little auger, that afterwards you may put in a greater.

Selden, Table-Talk.

SH'PPEN* n. s. [rcypen, Sax. stæbulum.]

A stable. In Lancashire, a cow-house.

Shepenes and dairies.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

SH'PPING. n. s. [from ship.]

1. Vessels of navigation; fleet.

Before Cæsar's invasion of this land, the Britons had not any shipping at all, other than their boats of twigs covered with hides.

Raleigh.

The numbers and courage of our men, with the strength of our shipping, have for many ages past made us a match for the greatest of our neighbours at land, and an overmatch for the strongest at sea.

Temple.

Fishes first to shipping did impart,

Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow.

Dryden.

2. Passage in a ship.

They took shipping and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

St. John, vi. 24.

SH'PWRECK. n. s. [ship and wreck.]

1. The destruction of ships by rocks or shelves.

Bold were the men, which on the ocean first Spread their new sails, when shipwreck was the worst.

Waller.

We are not to quarrel with the water for inundations and shipwrecks.

L'Estrange.

This sea-war cost the Carthaginians five hundred quinquirems, and the Romans seven hundred, including their shipwrecks.

Arbutnot.

2. The parts of a shattered ship.

They might have it in their own country, and that by gathering up the shipwrecks of the Athenian and Roman theatres.

Dryden.

3. Destruction; miscarriage.

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or shallows.

When the sun 'gins his reflection,
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break.

Shakespeare.

2. To make to suffer the dangers of a wreck.

Thou that canst still the raging of the seas,
Chain up the winds, and bid the tempests cease,
Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gusts
Of cruel passion and deceitful lusts.

Prior.

A square piece of marble shews itself to have been a little pagan monument of two persons who were shipwrecked.

Addison.

3. To throw by loss of the vessel.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope! no kindred weep for me.

Shakespeare.

SH'PWRIGHT. n. s. [ship and wright.] A builder of ships.

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week? Shaks.

A miserable shame it were for our shipwrights,
if they did not exceed all others in the setting up of our royal ships.

Raleigh.

Vast numbers of ships in our harbours, and shipwrights in our sea-port towns.

Swift.

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights,
and conducted by pilots, both without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians.

Arbuthnot.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore,
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing, till it scoops it out.

Pope.

SHIRE. n. s. [scip, from scipan, to divide, Saxon.] A division of the kingdom; a county; so much of the kingdom as is under one sheriff.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;

Ast two broad beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames far off to every shire.

Spenser, F. Q.

The noble youths from distant shires resort.

Prior.

SH'REMOTE.* n. s. [scip-remot, Sax. See NOTE.] Anciently, a county court; a meeting of the persons of the county on an extraordinary occasion.

If the matter was of great importance, it was put in the full shremote; and if the general voice acquitted or condemned, this was final in the cause.

Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. B. ii. ch. 7.

To SHIRK.* v. n. To shirk; to practise mean or artful tricks. See To SHARK.

Sherking: an eager desire to cheat another. Exm. Dialect. Grose.

Sherking and raking in the tobacco-shops.

Horbotle Grimstone, Sp. against Abp. Laud, (1640.)

To SHIRK.* v. a.

1. To procure by mean tricks; to steal.

Tell me, you that never heard the call of any vocation, that are free of no other company than your idle companions, that shirke living from others, but time from yourselves; tell me, May it not be said of idleness, as of envy, that it is its own scourge?

Bp. Rainbow, Sermon. (1635,) p. 40.

2. To avoid; a modern and vulgar colloquial term.

SHIRL.* adj. Shrill. Hulot. See SHRILL.

The shirlock is the Derbyshire word for the thrortle or song-thrush. Pegge.

SHIRT.† n. s. [Mr. Horne Tooke asserts that shirt is the past participle of the Sax. scipan, to shear, to divide. Junius and Skinner derive it from the Saxon rypc, (which Dr. Johnson has inaccurately given rycpe), whence our sark. But shirt is, undoubtedly, the Icel. scyrtla, indusium.] The under linen garment of a man. Dr. Johnson.— And formerly, he might have added, of either sex.

She hir shirte did upon,
And cast on her a mantell close.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

She had her shertes and gyrdles of heere.

Bp. Fisher, Sermon. 5.

Shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily.

Shaks. Hen. IV.

When we lay next us what he hold most dear,
Like Hercules, environ'd shirts we wear,
And cleaving mischiefs.

Dryden.

Several persons in December had nothing over their shoulders but their shirts.

Addison on Italy.

To SHIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to clothe as in a shirt.

Ah! for so many souls, as but this morn
Were cloath'd with flesh, and warm'd with vital blood,

But naked now, or shirted but with air.

Dryden.

SHIRTLESS. adj. [from shirt.] Wanting a shirt.

Linsey-woolsey brothers,
Grave mummies! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.

Pope.

SH'ITTAH.† n. s. A sort of precious wood, SH'ITTIM. } of which Moses made the greatest part of the tables, altars, and planks belonging to the tabernacle. The wood is hard, tough, smooth, without knots, and extremely beautiful. It grows in Arabia.

Calmct.

I will plant in the wilderness the shittah-tree.

Isaiah, xli. 19.

Bring me an offering of badgers' skins and shittim-wood.

Exodus.

SHUTTLE.* adj. [probably from the Germ. schütteln, to shake.] Wavering; unsettled: as, a shuttle-headed or shuttle-brained person, which Sherwood gives in his dictionary, and which Cotgrave explains by light-headed and giddy-headed.

We passe not what the people say or think:
Their shuttle hate makes none but cowards shrink.

Mir. for Mag. p. 456.

SHUTTLENESS.* n. s. [from shuttle.] Unsettledness; inconstancy; lightness.

The vain shuttlelessness of an unconstant head.

Barret, Aliv. (1580.)

SHUTTLECOCK. n. s. [Commonly, and perhaps as properly, shuttlecock. Of shuttle or shuttle the etymology is doubtful: Skinner derives it from schütteln, Germ. to shake; or scapan, Saxon, to throw. He thinks it is called a cock from its feathers. Perhaps it is properly shuttlecock, a cork driven to and fro, like the instrument in weaving, and softened by frequent and rapid utterance from cork to cock.] A cork stuck with feathers, and driven by players from one to another with battledoors.

You need not discharge a cannon to break the chain of his thoughts: the pat of a shuttlecock, or the creaking of a jack, will do his business.

Collier.

SHIVE.† n. s. [schyff, Dutch, a round slice, schyven, plur. Our word was anciently sheeve; and it may be referred to the Sax. scapan, to shave, whence scapda, segmen assula.]

1. A slice of bread.

A sheeve of bread as brown as nut.

Warner, Albion's England.

Easy it is

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive. Titus Andronicus.

2. A thick splinter, or lamina cut off from the main substance.

Shavings made by the plane are in some things differing from those shives, or thin and flexible pieces of wood, that are obtained by borers. Boyle.

To SH'IVER. v. n. [from shive.] To fall at once into many parts or shives.

Hadst thou been aught but gossamer, feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating, Thou'dst shiver 'd like an egg. Shakespeare, K. John.

The natural world, should gravity once cease, or be withdrawn, would instantly shiver into millions of atoms.

Woodward.

To SH'IVER. v. a. To break by one act into many parts; to shatter.

The ground with shiver'd armour strown.

Milton, P. L.

Showers of granadoes rain, by sudden burst
Disploding murderous bowels; fragments of steel
A thousand ways at once, the shiver'd orbs
Fly diverse, working torment.

Philips.

To SHIVER.† v. n. [Icel. skiefur, concussions; Germ. schauern, tremere. Serenius. Dr. Johnson also assumes the German word as the origin. Perhaps the Teut. huyveren, to shiver for cold, is the original; s being prefixed; which is a common prefix, in words of several languages, and especially with the Gothick nations. See SHOCK, SHOE, SHORT, and To SHOW. Gower and Chaucer write chever, or chiver, for the present word. "The blanch fever with chele maketh me so to chever." Conf. Am. B. 6. "I chiver for default of hete." Compl. of Bl. Knight, ver. 231.] To quake; to tremble; to shudder, as with cold or fear.

Any very harsh noise will set the teeth on edge, and make all the body shiver.

Bacon.

What religious palsy's this,
Which makes the boughs divest their bliss?

And that they might her footsteps straw,
Drop their leaves with shivering awe.

Cleaveland.

Why stand we longer shivering under fear?

Milton, P. L.

The man that shiver'd on the brink of sin,
Thus steel'd and harden'd, ventures boldly in.

Dryden.

He described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shivered every joint.

Addison.

Give up Laius to the realms of day,
Whose ghost, yet shivering on Cocytus' sand,

Expects its passage to the farther strand.

Pope.

Prometheus is laid
On icy Caucasus to shiver,

Swift.

While vultures eat his growing liver.

SH'IVER.† n. s. [from the verb.] 1. One fragment of many into which any thing is broken.

He would pound these into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

As brittle as the glory is the face;
For there it is crack'd in an hundred shivers.

Shakespeare.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fritters.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

- Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd. Milton.
2. A thin slice; a little piece.
Of your white bread a shiver.

3. A shaking fit; a tremor.
4. A spindle. Hist. R. S. i. 56.
5. In naval language, a wheel fixed in a channel or block.

SHIVERING.* n. s. [from shiver.]

1. Act of trembling.
Panick fears and shiverings oftentimes attend bloodguilty men, as long as they live.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. ii.
2. Division; dismemberment.
Upon the breaking and shivering of a great state,
you may be sure to have wars. Bacon.
SHIVERY. adj. [from shiver.] Loose of coherence; incompact; easily falling into many fragments.
There were observed incredible numbers of these shells thus flatted, and extremely tender, in shivery stone. Woodward.

SHOADSTONE. n. s.

Shoadstone is a small stone, smooth without, of a dark liver colour, and of the same colour within, only with the addition of a faint purple. It is a fragment broke off an iron vein.

Woodward on Fossils.

Certain tin stones lie on the face of the ground, which they call shoads, as shed from the main load,
and made somewhat round by the water.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

The loads or veins of metal were by this action of the departing water made easy to be found out by the shoads, or trains of metallic fragments born off from them, and lying in trains from those veins towards the sea, in the same course that water falling thence would take. Woodward.

SHOAL.† n. s. [reole, Sax. a multitude.
See the fourth sense of SCULL.]

1. A crowd; a great multitude; a throng.
When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of sustentation: once in an age they discharge their people upon other nations. Bacon.
A league is made against such routs and shoals
of people as have utterly degenerated from nature.
Bacon.

The vices of a prince draw shoals of followers, when his virtue leaves him the more eminent, because single. Decay of Piety.

A shoal of silver fishes glides
And plays about the barges. Waller.
God had the command of famine, whereby he could have carried them off by shoals. Woodward.

Around the goddess roll
Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a sable shoal, Thick, and more thick the black blockade extends.
Pope.

2. A shallow; a sand-bank. [a contraction of shallow.]
The haven's mouth they durst not enter, for the dangerous shoals. Abbot, Descr. of the World.
He heaves them off the shoals. Dryden.
The depth of your pond should be six foot; and on the sides some shoals for the fish to lay their spawn. Mortimer.

To SHOAL.† v. n. [from the noun.]

To crowd; to throng.

The wave-sprung entrails, about which fauns and fish did shoal. Chapman.

The women flock to St. Mary's in such troops, and so early, that the masters of arts have no room to sit; so as the vice-chancellor and heads of houses were in deliberation to repress their shoaling thither.
Wotton to Sir E. Bacon, (1638.) Rem. p. 472.

2. To be shallow; to grow shallow.

What they met
Solid, or slimy, as in raging sea,
Tost up and down, together crouded drove,
From each side shoaling tow'rd's the mouth of hell.
Milton, P. L.

SHOAL.† adj. Shallow; obstructed or incumbered with banks. Applied by Spenser to one of his personified rivers.

Molanna, were she not so shoale,
Were no less faire and beautifull than she,
Spenser, F. Q.

SHOALINESS. n. s. [from shoaly.] Shallowness; frequency of shallow places.

SHOALY.† adj. [from shoal.] Full of shoals;
full of shallow places.

Reddish weeds in abundance grew in it, being but shoaly; and specially about the banks of it.
Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. p. 11.
Those who live

Where with his shoaly fords Vulturius roars,
Dryden.

The watchful hero felt the knocks, and found
The tossing vessel sail'd on shoaly ground.
Dryden.

SHOCK.† n. s. [choc, old Fr. as our word was also sometimes written. See CHOCK.
The Teut. word is shock, concussus.]

1. Conflict; mutual impression of violence; violent concourse.

Through the shock
Of fighting elements on all sides round

2. Concussion; external violence.

It is inconceivable how any such man that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration, without corruption or alteration, should after be corrupted or altered. Judge Hale.

These strong unshaken mounds resist the shocks
Of tides and seas tempestuous, while the rocks,
That secret in a long continu'd vein
Pass through the earth, the ponderous pile sustain,
Blackmore.

Such is the haughty man, his towering soul,
'Midst all the shocks and injuries of fortune,
Rises superior and looks down on Cæsar. Addison.

Long at the head of his few faithful friends,
He stood the shock of a whole host of foes. Addison.

The tender apples from their parents rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie,
The prey of worms. Philips.

3. The conflict of enemies.

The adverse legions, not less hideous join'd
The horrid shock. Milton, P. L.
Those that run away are in more danger than the others that stand the shock. L'Estrange.

The mighty force
Of Edward twice o'erturn'd their desperate king:
Twice he arose, and join'd the horrid shock.
Philips.

4. Offence; impression of disgust.

Fewer shocks a statesman gives his friend.
Young.

5. [Shocke, Teut. strues.] A pile of sheaves of corn.

Corn tithed, sir parson, together to get,
And cause it on shocks to be by and by set.
Tusser.

In a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in,
in his season. Job.
Thou, full of days, like weighty shocks of corn,
In season reap'd, shall to thy grave be born.
Sandys.

Behind the master walks, builds up the shocks,
Feels his heart heave with joy. Thomson.

6. [From shag.] A rough dog.

I would fain know why a shock and a hound are not distinct species. Locke.

To SHOCK.† v. a. [Sax. reacan; Germ.
schocken; Fr. chocquer.]

1. To shake by violence.
2. To meet force with force; to encounter.
These her princes are come home again:
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we will shock them. Shakespeare, K. John.

3. To offend; to disgust.
Supposing verses are never so beautiful, yet if they contain any thing that shocks religion or good manners, they are

Versus insipies rerum nugæque canora. Dryden.
My son,

I bade him love, and bid him now forbear:
If you have any kindness for him, still Advise him not to shock a father's will. Dryden.
Julian, who lov'd each sober mind to shock,
Who laugh'd at God, and offer'd to a cock. Harte.

Those who in reading Homer are shocked that
'tis always a lion, may as well be angry that 'tis always a man. Pope.

To SHOCK. v. n.

1. To meet with hostile violence.
And now with shouts the shocking armies clos'd,
To lances lances, shields to shields oppos'd;
Commatal death the fate of war confounds,
Each adverse battle gor'd with equal wounds.
Pope.

2. To be offensive.
The French humour, in regard of the liberties they take in female conversations, is very shocking to the Italians, who are naturally jealous.

Addison on Italy.
To SHOCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To build up piles of sheaves.

Reap well, scatter not, gather clean that is shorn,
Bind fast, shock space, have an eye to thy corn.
Tusser.

SHOCKINGLY.* adv. [from To shock.] So as to disgust; offensively.

It would be shockingly ill bred in that company;
and indeed not extremely well bred in any other.

Ld. Chesterfield.
In my opinion, the shortness of a triennial sitting would have the following ill effects: it would make the member more shamelessly and shockingly corrupt; it would increase his dependence on those who could best support him at his election; it would wrack and tear to pieces the fortunes of those who stood upon their own fortunes and their private interests; it would make the electors infinitely more venal; and it would make the whole body of the people who are, whether they have votes or not, concerned in elections, more lawless, more idle, more debauched: it would utterly destroy the sobriety, the industry, the integrity, the simplicity of all the people; and undermine, I am much afraid, the deepest and best laid foundations of the commonwealth.

Burke, Speech on the Duration of Parliaments.
SHOD for shoed, the preterite and participle passive of To shoe.
Strong axle-treed cart that is clouted and shod.
Tusser.

SHOE.† n. s. plural shoes, anciently shoon.
[ro, Sax. schu, Germ. shoehs, M. Goth.
"adjecto sibilu ab antiquissimo 'hua, hya, obtegere." Stiernh. and Serenius.

The word, therefore, to which Stiern-hielmus refers, is properly skya, to cover. But Wachter objects to this, as skya means to cover as with a shadow, from the Gr. σῶα, a shadow; whereas a shoe is the apparel of the foot, Gr. σῶμα, indumentum; and he thinks that at first the word was fat-sko, (as hand-schuh then used for a glove,) and afterwards by aphæresis sko. The plural shoon is still used in the north of England.] The cover of the foot : of horses as well as men.

Your horse should be ungartered, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakspeare.

Spare none but such as go in clouted shoon, For they are thrifty honest men. Shaks. Hen. VI.

This hollow cylinder is fitted with a sucker, upon which is nailed a good thick piece of tanned shoe-leather. Boyle.

The dull swain
Treads on it daily with his clouted shoon.

I was in pain, pulled off my shoe, and some ease that gave me. Milton, Comus. Temple.

To SHOE. v. a. preterite I shod; participle passive shod. [from the noun.]

1. To fit the foot with a shoe : used commonly of horses.

The smith's note for shoeing and plough-irons. Shakspeare.

He doth nothing but talk of his horse; and makes it a great appropriation to his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself. Shakspeare.

Tell your master that the horses want shoeing. Swift.

2. To cover the bottom.

The wheel compos'd of crickets' bones,
And daintily made for the nonce,
For fear of rattling on the stones,
With thisle down they shod it. Drayton.

SHOE BLACK.* n. s. [shoe and black.] One who cleans shoes. Dr. Johnson calls such an one a shoeblack. See JAPANER.

SHOE BOY. n. s. [shoe and boy.] A boy that cleans shoes.

If I employ a shoeboy, is it in view to his advantage, or my own convenience? Swift.

SHOEING-HORN. n. s. [shoe and horn.]
1. A horn used to facilitate the admission of the foot into a narrow shoe.

2. Any thing by which a transaction is facilitated; any thing used as a medium : in contempt.

Most of our fine young ladies retain in their service supernumary and insignificant fellows, which they use like whiffles, and commonly call shoeing-horns. Spectator.

I have been an errant shoeing-horn for above these twenty years. I served my mistress in that capacity above five of the number before she was shod. Though she had many who made their applications to her, I always thought myself the best shoe in her shop. Spectator.

SHOE MAKER. n. s. [shoe and maker.] One whose trade is to make shoes.

A cobbler or shoemaker may find some little fault with the latchet of a shoe that an Apelles had painted, when the whole figure is such as none but an Apelles could paint. Watts.

SHOE ER.* n. s. [roepen, Sax. a maker of shoes.] One who fits the foot with a shoe : used, in some places, of a farrier.

SHOE STRING.* n. s. [shoe and string.] A string or riband with which the shoe is tied.

Bending his supple hams, kissing his hands,
Honouring shoestrings.

Randolph, Muses' Looking-Glass, (1638.)
SHOE TYE.† n. s. [shoe and tye.] The riband with which women tie their shoes.

I wish her beauty,
That owes not all its duty
To gaudy tire, or glistening shoe-tye.

Crashaw, Delights of the Muses, Wishes.

VOL. III.

Madam, I do as is my duty,
Honour the shadow of your shoe-tye. Hudibras.

SHOG. n. s. [from shock.] Violent concussion.

Another's diving bow he did adore,
Which, with a shog, casts all the hair before. Dryden.

He will rather have the primitive man to be produced, in a kind of digesting balneum, where all the heavier lees may subside, and a due equilibrium be maintained, not disturbed by any such rude and violent shogs that would ruffle and break all the little stamina of the embryo. Bentley.

To SHOG.† v. a. To shake; to agitate by sudden interrupted impulses. Dr. Johnson. — This is a very ancient word. The boat in the myddil of the see was shogged with wavis, for the wynd was contrarie. Wicliffe, St. Matth. xiv.

After it is washed, they put the remnant into a wooden dish, the which they softly shog to and fro in the water, until the earthy substance be flitted away. Carew.

To SHOG.* v. n. To move off; to begone; to jog. A low word.

These fained words agog
So set the goddesses, that they in anger gan to shog. Hall, Tr. of Homer's 4th Iliad, (1581.)

Will you shog off? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

SHOGGING.* n. s. [from shog.] Concussion; agitation.

Through the violence of such shoggings [they] are leapt out of the coach. Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587), p. 885.

To SHO'GGLE.* v. a. To shake about; to joggle. North. Pegge.

SHONE. The preterite of shines.
All his Father in him shone. Milton, P. L.

To SHOO, or SHUE.* v. a. [scheuchen, Germ. to drive away.] To scare birds from the corn or garden. Wilbraham, Cheshire Gloss. and Brockett's N. C. Words.

SHOOK. The preterite and in poetry participle passive of shake.

Taxallan shook by Montezuma's pow'rs,
Has, to resist his forces, call'd in ours. Dryden.

SHOON.* See SHOE.

To SHOOT.† v. a. preterite, I shot; participle, shot or shotten. [ſcotican, Sax. skiota, Icel. jaculari, to dart; an ancient word, common to all the northern dialects. Serenius. Wachter considers it as formed from the sound made by the passing of the dart or arrow. Serenius also thinks that the Scythians took their name from this ancient term; which indeed Selden had long before noticed: "The Grecians call the northern (people) all Scythians, perhaps the original of that name being from shooting, for which they were especially through the world famous." See Selden's Notes on Drayton's Polyolbion, Song vii.]

1. To discharge any thing so as to make it fly with speed or violence.

Light
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton, P. L.

2. To discharge as from a bow or gun.

I owe you much, and, like a witless youth,
That which I owe is lost; but if you please
To shoot an arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt
To find both. Shakspeare.

This murderous shaft that's shot
Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way
Is to avoid the aim. Shakspeare.

A pomp of winning graces waited still,
And from about her shot darts of desire
Into all eyes to wish her still in sight. Milton, P. L.

3. To let off: used of the instrument.
The men shoot strong shoots with their bows. Abbot.

The two ends of a bow shot off, fly from one another. Boyle.

Men who know not hearts should make examples;
Which, like a warning-piece, must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crimes. Dryden.

4. To strike with any thing shot.

Not an hand shall touch the mount, but he shall be stoned or shot through. Ex. xix. 13.

5. To emit new parts, as a vegetable.
None of the trees exalt themselves, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs. Ezek. xxxi. 14.

A grain of mustard groweth up and shooteth out great branches. St. Mark, iv. 32.

Tell like a tall old oak, how learning shoots,
To heaven her branches, and to hell her roots. Denham.

6. To emit; to dart or thrust forth.

That gently warms
The universe, and to each inward part
With gentle penetration, though unseen,
Shoots invisible virtue ev'n to the deep. Milton, P. L.

Ye who pluck the flowers,
Beware the secret snake that shoots a sting. Dryd.

The last had a star upon its breast, which shot forth pointed beams of a peculiar lustre. Addison.
Fir'd by the torch of noon, to tenfold rage,
Th' infuriate hill forth shoots the pillar'd flame. Thomson.

7. To push suddenly. So we say, to shoot a bolt or lock.

I have laugh'd sometimes when I have reflected on those men who have shot themselves into the world; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and some hissed off, quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

The liquid air his moving pinions wound,
And, in the moment, shoot him on the ground. Dryden.

8. To push forward.

They that see me shoot out the lip, they shake the head. Psalms.

9. To fit to each other by planing; a workman's term.

Straight lines in joiners' language are called a joint; that is, two pieces of wood that are shot, that is planed, or else paired with a paring-chisel. Moxon.

10. To pass through with swiftness.

Thus having said, she sinks beneath the ground
With furious haste, and shoots the Stygian sound. Dryden.

To SHOOT.† v. n.

1. To perform the act of shooting, or emitting a missile weapon.

The archers have sorely grieved him and shot at him. Genesis.

When he has shot his best, he is sure that none ever did shoot better. Temple.

A shining harvest either host displays,
And shoots against the sun with equal rays. Dryd.

When you shoot, and shut one eye,
To lend the other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward and afraid. Prior.

2. To germinate; to increase in vegetable growth.

Such trees as love the sun do not willingly descend far into the earth; and therefore they are commonly trees that shoot up much. Bacon.

Onions, as they hang, will shoot forth. Bacon.

The tree at once both upward shoots,
And just as much grows downward to the roots.

Cleveland.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees.

Dryden.

Nor will the wither'd stock be green again,
But the wild olive shoots and shades the ungrateful plain.

Dryden.

New creatures rise,
A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;
Till *shoot*ing out with legs and imp'd with wings.

Dryden.

The corn laid up by ants would shoot under ground,
if they did not bite off all the buds; and therefore it will produce nothing.

Addison.

A wild, where weeds and flow'rs promiscuous shoot,

Or garden, tempting with forbidden fruit. Pope.

3. To form itself into any shape by emissions from a radical particle.

If the menstruum be overcharged, metals will shoot into crystals.

Bacon.

Although exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glaucious bodies.

Brown.

That rude mass will shoot itself into several forms, till it make an habitable world: the steady hand of Providence being the invisible guide of all its motions.

Burnet, Theory.

Expressed juices of plants, boiled into the consistence of a syrup, and set into a cool place, the essential salt will shoot up on the sides of the vessels.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To be emitted.

There shot a streaming lamp along the sky,
Which on the winged lightning seem'd to fly.

Dryden.

Tell them that the rays of light shoot from the sun to our earth, at the rate of one hundred and eighty thousand miles in the second of a minute, they stand agast at such talk.

Watts.

The grand ætherial bow
Shoots up immense.

Thomson.

5. To protuberate; to jet out.

The land did shoot out with a very great promontory, bending that way.

Abbott, Desc. of the World.

This valley of the Tirol lies enclosed on all sides by the Alps, though its dominions shoot out into several branches among the breaks of the mountains.

Addison on Italy.

6. To pass as an arrow.

Thy words shoot through my heart,
Melt my resolves, and turn me all to love.

Addison.

7. To become any thing by sudden growth.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spiritous fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, opening to the ambient light.

Milton, P. L.

Let me but live to shadow this young plant
From blights and storms: he'll soon shoot up a hero.

Dryden.

8. To move swiftly along.

A *shoot*ing star in autumn thwarts the night.

Milton, P. L.

Where Tigris at the foot of Paradise
Into a gulf shot under ground, till part
Rose up a fountain by the tree of life.

Milton, P. L.

At first she flutters, but at length she springs
To smoother flight, and shoots upon her wings.

Dryden.

The broken air loud whistling as she flies,
She stops and listens, and shoots forth again,
And guides her pinions by her young one's cries.

Dryden.

Heaven's imperious queen shot down from high,
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd.

Dryden.

She downward glides,
Lights in Fleet-ditch, and shoots beneath the tides.

Gay.

Where the mob gathers, swiftly shoot along,
Nor idly mingle in the noisy throng.

Gay.

Not half so swiftly shoots along in air
The gliding lightning.

Pope.

9. To feel a quick glancing pain.

They found these noses one day shoot and swell extremely.

Tutler, No. 260.

SHOOT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act or impression of any thing emitted from a distance.

The Turkish bow giveth a very forcible shoot, inasmuch as the arrow hath pierced a steel target two inches thick; but the arrow, if headed with wood, hath been known to pierce through a piece of wood of eight inches thick.

Bacon.

2. The act of striking, or endeavouring to strike with a missive weapon discharged by any instrument.

The noise of thy cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.

Shakspeare.

But come the bow; now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well is then accounted ill.
Thus will I save my credit in the shoot,
Not wounding, pity would not let me do 't.

Shakspeare.

As a country-fellow was making a shoot at a pigeon, he trod upon a snake that bit him.

L'Estrange.

3. [Scheuten, Dutch.] Branches issuing from the main stock.

They will not come just on the tops where they were cut, but out of those shoots which were water-boughs.

Bacon.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
Plucking ripe clusters from the tender shoots.

Milton, Comus.

Prune off superfluous branches and shoots of this second spring; but expose not the fruit without leaves sufficient.

Evelyn.

The hook she bare,
To lop the growth of the luxuriant year,
To decent form the lawless shoots to bring,
And teach th' obedient branches where to spring.

Pope.

Now, should my praises owe their truth
To beauty, dress, or paint, or youth,
'Twere grafting on an annual stock
That must our expectations mock;
And making one luxuriant shoot
Die the next year for want of root.

Swift.

Pride push'd forth buds at every branching shoot,

And virtue shrunk almost beneath the root.

Harte.

4. A young swine; a grice. Cotgrave.

SHOOTER.† n. s. [from shoot.] One that shoots; an archer; a gunner.

Some shooters take in hand stronger bows than they be able to maintain.

Ascham, Toxophilus.

The king with gifts a vessel stores;
And next, to reconcile the shooter-god,
Within her hollow sides the sacrifice he stow'd.

Dryden.

SHOOT'ING.* n. s. [JCOOTUNG, Sax. jaculation.]

1. Act of emitting as from a gun or bow.

Wrestling, *shoot*ing, and other such active sports,
will keep men in health.

Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 18.

2. Sensation of quick pain.

I fancy we shall have some rain, by the *shoot*ing of my corns.

Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield.

SHOOTY.* adj. [from To shoot.] Corresponding in size or growth; of an equal size: as, the wheat comes up shooty.
Worcestershire. Grose.

SHOP.† n. s. [JCOEPPA, Saxon, a magazine; eschoppe, Fr. shopa, or schoppa, low Lat. Ainsworth. Derived by Junius from to shape, to form.]

1. A place where any thing is sold.

Our windows are broke down,
And we for fear compell'd to shut our shops.

Shakspeare.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes.

Shakspeare.

Scarce any sold in shops could be relied on as faithfully prepared.

Boyle.

His shop is his element, and he cannot with any enjoyment of himself live out of it. South, Sermon.
What a strange thing is it, that a little health, or the poor business of a shop, should keep us so senseless of these great things, that are coming so fast upon us!

Law.

2. A room in which manufactures are carried on.

Your most grave belly thus answer'd;
True is it, my incorporate friends,
That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon; and fit it is,
Because I am the storehouse and the shop
Of the whole body.

Shakspeare.

We have divers mechanical arts and stuffs made by them; and shops for such as are not brought into vulgar use.

Bacon.

To SHOP.* v. n. To frequent shops: as, they are shopping. A cant phrase of modern times.

SHO'BOARD. n. s. [shop and board.] Bench on which any work is done.

That beastly rabble, that came down
From all the garrets in the town,
And stalls, and shopboards, in vast swarms,
With new-chalk'd bills, and rusty arms.

Hudibras.

It dwells not in shops or workhouses; nor till the late age was it ever known, that any one served seven years to a smith or a taylor, that he should commence doctor or divine from the shopboard or the anvil; or from whistling to a team come to preach to a congregation.

South, Sermon.

SHO'BOOK. n. s. [shop and book.] Book in which a tradesman keeps his accounts.

They that have wholly neglected the exercise of their understandings, will be as unfit for it as one unpractised in figures to cast up a shopbook.

Locke.

SHOPE.* old pret. of shape; shaped. See To SHAPE.

She—this further purpose to him shape.

Spenser, F. Q.

SHO'KEEPER. n. s. [shop and keep.] A trader who sells in a shop; not a merchant who only deals by wholesale.

Nothing is more common than to hear a shop-keeper desiring his neighbour to have the goodness to tell him what is a clock.

Addison.

SHO'FLIFTER.* n. s. [from shop, and lift, to rob. See To LIFT.] One who under pretence of buying takes occasion to steal goods out of a shop.

These women, they call shoplifters, when they are challenged for their thefts, appear to be mighty angry and affronted, for fear of being searched.

Swift, Exam. No. 28.

He looked like a discovered shoplifter, left to the mercy of the Exchange-women.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 6.

SHO'FLIFTING.* n. s. The crime of a shoplifter.

SHO'FLIKE.* adj. [shop and like.] Low; vulgar.

Be she never so shoplike or meretricious.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

SHO'PMAN.† n. s. [shop and man.]

1. A petty trader.

Garth, gen'rous as his muse, prescribes and gives,
The shopman sells, and by destruction lives.

Dryden.

2. One who serves in a shop.

For my part, I have enough to mind in weighing my goods out, and waiting on my customers; but my wife, though she could be of as much use as a shopman to me, if she would put her hand to it, is now only in my way.

Anonym. in Johnson's Idler, No. 15.

SHORE. The preretire of shear.

I'm glad thy father's dead:

Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
Shore his old thread in twain. Shakespeare.

SHORE.† n. s. [prope, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — From repan, to divide, to separate. Shore, as the sea-shore, or shore of a river (which latter expression Dr. Johnson, without any reason, calls a licentious use of the word) is the place where the continuity of the land is interrupted, or separated, by the sea or the river. Mr. Horne Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 172.]

1. The coast of the sea.

Sea cover'd sea;

Sea without shore.

Milton, P. L.

2. The bank of a river.

Beside the fruitful shore of muddy Nile,
Upon a sunny bank outstretched lay,
In monstrous length, a mighty crocodile. Spenser.

3. A drain; properly sewer.

4. [Schoore, Teut. a prop.] The support of a building; a buttress.

When I use the word shore, I may intend thereby a coast of land near the sea, or a drain to carry off water, or a prop to support a building.

Watts, Logic.

To SHORE. v. a. [schooren, Teut.]

1. To prop; to support.

They undermined the wall, and, as they wrought,
Shored it up with timber. Knolles.
He did not much strengthen his own subsistence in court, but stood there on his own feet; for the truth is, the most of his allies rather leaned upon him than shored him up.

Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

There was also made a shoring or under-proping act for the benevolence; to make the sums which any person had agreed to pay leviable by course of law. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To set on shore. Not in use.

I will bring these two moles, these blind ones aboard him; if he think it fit to shore them again, — let him call me rogue. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

SHO'RED.* adj. [from shore.] Having a bank or shore.

A ground lying low is soone overflowen,
And shored cannot long continue.

Mir. for Mag. p. 353.

SHO'RELESS.† adj. [from shore.] Having no coast; boundless.

He shall be scoffed at, and called puritan, if he will not revel it with them in a shoreless excess.

Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639) p. 283.

This ocean of felicity is so shoreless and bottomless, that all the saints and angels cannot exhaust it.

A shoreless ocean.

Thomson, Spring.

The short channels of expiring time,

Or shoreless ocean of eternity.

Young, Night Th. 9.

SHO'RLING. n. s. [from shear, shore.] The felt or skin of a sheep shorn.

SHORN. The participle passive of shear: with of.

So rose the Danite strong,

Shorn of his strength.

Milton, P. L.

Vile shrubs are shorn for browse: the tow'ring height

Of unctuous trees are torches for the night.

Dryden.

He plunging downward shot his radiant head;
Dispell'd the breathing air that broke his flight;
Shorn of his beams, a man to mortal sight.

Dryden.

SHORT.† adj. [recept, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — From repan, to shear, to cut; shored, shor'd, short, cut off, opposed to long, which means extended. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 172. — Not such is the deduction of Wachter and Serenius; they refer it to skorta, and schorton, to be deficient; noticing also the same adjective, without the prefix s, in other tongues; as kort, Su. Goth. and Belg. court, Fr. curtus, Lat. hre inclines to the last as the original.]

1. Not long; commonly not long enough.

Weak though I am of limb, and short of sight,
Far from a lynx, and not a giant quite,
I'll do what Mead and Chesheldom advise,
To keep these limbs, and to preserve these eyes.

Pope.

2. Not long in space or extent.

This less valuable earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there.

Milton, P. L.

Though short my stature, yet my name extends
To heaven itself, and earth's remotest ends. Pope.

3. Not long in time or duration.

They change the night into day: the light is short,
because of darkness. Job, xvii. 12.
Nor love thy life, nor hate, but what thou liv'st,
Live well, how long or short permit to Heaven.

Milton, P. L.

Short were her marriage joys: for in the prime
Of youth her lord expir'd before his time. Dryden.

4. Repeated by quick iterations.

1. This is a kind of auxiliary verb used in the conjunctive mood, of which the signification is not easily fixed.

2. I SHOULD go. It is my business or duty to go.

3. If I SHOULD go. If it happens that I go.

4. Thou SHOULD'ST go. Thou oughtest to go.

5. If thou SHOULD'ST go. If it happens that thou goest.

6. The same significations are found in all the other persons singular and plural.

Let not a desperate action more engage you Than safety should. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Some praises come of good wishes and respects, when by telling men what they are, they represent to them what they should be. Bacon.

To do thee honour I will shed their blood,
Which the just laws, if I were faultless, should.

Waller.

So subjects love just kings, or so they should.

Dryden.

7. Used for would, formerly; and in later times for could, may, might, must. It has been well observed, that this sign respects time variously; the present, the past, and the future. When it respects the present, it generally implies duty or obligation, fitness, propriety, decency, or reasonableness; is often used in the way of supposition, and of comparison upon supposition; often also marks conduct or event as involuntary or accidental; often carries doubt in it; and seems frequently to mark the power, energy, influence, or force of things upon the speaker, or otherwise; and it follows interjections of grief. In denoting time past, it either implies doubt, or marks the event as involuntary or accidental. But of all the other periods of time, the future seems to be that, in which should most frequently marks its appearance. It marks the hypothetical, and denotes the common future; in both cases it is still conditional, never absolute. It refers to the hypothetical future; and, in doing so, marks the event either as doubtful and precarious, or as conditional and preparatory to somewhat else, or as highly probable but fit to be prevented, or as predetermined. Whilst it respects the common future, it either puts the event in the way of supposition, or marks it as precarious, or as certain in the highest degree, or as conditionally certain, or as certain but improper, or as certain but involuntary, or threatens, or follows verbs of desire or wishing, or denotes the event to be fit or proper. See White's Essay on the English Verb, p. 225. et seq.

8. Should is sometimes omitted, as when it marks the event as precarious.

I pray you, sir, receive the money now,
For fear you ne'er see chain nor money more.

Shakespeare.

9. SHOULD be. A proverbial phrase of slight contempt or irony.

I conclude, that things are not as they should be.

Swift.

The girls look upon their father as a clown, and the boys think their mother no better than she should be. Addison.

10. SHOULD have. This sign barely points at the supposed existence of an event, or circumstance of conduct, in former time; or places that supposed behaviour as the result of something that preceded or might have preceded it; and, in doing this, either puts the event in the way of supposition, or marks it as accidental, or as involuntary, or as certain, or as morally or naturally fit and becoming; and is also found in the hypothetical future, or marking an imaginary event or behaviour as proceeding from or succeeding in course of time to some other action, or incident, imaginary or otherwise; and thus marks the event, or action, either as precarious, or as accidental, or in a comparative view, or as certain; and carries in it frequently an intimation of natural or civil right and title to a thing, and gives the highest assurance.

White.

11. There is another signification now little in use, in which should has scarcely any distinct or explicable meaning. It should be differs in this sense very little from it is.

There is a fabulous narration, that in the northern countries there should be an herb that groweth in the likeness of a lamb, and feedeth upon the grass.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SHOULDER.† n. s. [sculpe, Saxon; scholder, Teut. Dr. Johnson.—Shoulder formerly was, and should still be, written shoulde; the past participle of scyllan, to divide, to separate. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Pur. ii. 241.—Accordingly, Mr. Tooke produces a solitary instance of shoulde, viz. "the necke and shoulde," from the Byrth of Mankynde, published in 1540. But this was not the old way of writing the word. Let us look for authority more valuable, and more ancient by nearly two centuries, than what he has offered. We therefore find Wicliffe using the accustomed form: "Whanne he hath foundun it, [his sheep,] he joyeth, and leith it on his schuldris." St. Luke, xv. "Thei bynden grevous chargis, and that moun not be born, and putten on schouldris of men." St. Matt. xxiii. While the Saxon, Teutonic, and old English words thus discountenance the shoulde of Mr. Tooke, so likewise do the ancient words of the Germans and Swedes, viz. schulter, and skuldra. Wachter and Serenius give to shoulder the same etymon as to shield: and the former defines the word, "propiè os illud latum, quod posticas costarum partes tegit; et ideò sic dictum vel immediatè a skyta, tegere, vel metaphorice à skioldur, clypeus, quia clypeo simile."]

1. The joint which connects the arm to the body.

I have seen better faces in my time,
Than stand on any shoulder that I see Before me. Shakespeare.

It is a fine thing to be carried on men's shoulders; but give God thanks that thou art not forced to carry a rich fool upon thy shoulders, as those poor men do. Bp. Taylor.

The head of the shoulder-bone being round, is inserted into so shallow a cavity in the scapula, that, were there no other guards for it, it would be thrust out upon every occasion. Wiseman.

2. The upper joint of the foreleg of edible animals.

We must have a shoulder of mutton for a party.

Shakespeare.

He took occasion, from a shoulder of mutton,

to cry up the plenty of England.

Addison, Freeholder.

3. The upper part of the back.

Emily dress'd herself in rich array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair.

Dryden.

4. The shoulders are used as emblems of strength, or the act of supporting.

*Ev'n as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be;
For on thy shoulders do I build my seat.*

*Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
The king has cur'd me; and from these shoulders,*

These ruin'd pillars, out of pity taken

A load would sink a navy. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

5. A rising part; a prominence. A term among artificers.

When you rivet a pin into a hole, your pin must have a shoulder to it thicker than the hole is wide, that the shoulder slip not through the hole as well as the shank. Mason.

TO SHO'ULDER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with insolence and violence.

*The rolling billows beat the ragged shore,
As they the earth would shoulder from her seat.*

Spenser, F. Q.

Dudman, a well-known foreland to most sailors, here shoulders out the ocean, to shape the same a large bosom between itself.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

You debase yourself,

*To think of mixing with th' ignoble herd:
What, shall the people know their god-like prince
Headed a rabble, and profan'd his person,
Shoulder'd with filth?* Dryden.

*So vast the navy now at anchor rides,
That underneath it the press'd waters fail,
And with its weight, it shoulders off the tides.*

Dryden.

Around her numberless the rabble flow'd, Shoulder'd ring each other, crowding for a view.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

*When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend
The wretch, who living saw'd a candle's end;
Shoulder'd ring God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, nay extends his hands.* Pope.

2. To put upon the shoulder.

derknots!* Swift, Tale of a Tub.

SHO'ULDERSHOTTEN. † adj. [shoulder and shot.] Strained in the shoulder. See SHOTTEN.

SHO'ULDERSLIP. n. s. [shoulder and slip.] Dislocation of the shoulder.

The horse will take so much care of himself as to come off with only a strain or a shoulderslip.

Swift.

SHOUT. † n. s. [A word of which no etymology is known. Dr. Johnson. — A shout is no other than the Saxon participle reat, (of reitan, to cast forth), differently spelled, and applied to sound thrown forth from the mouth. Mr. Horne Tooke, Div. Purl. ii. 134. — This is much the same as Skinner's observation; which Dr. Johnson might have given, and Mr. Tooke have noticed; viz. that shout, or shouting aloud, comes from shooting, jaculatio, q. d. vocis contentæ ejaculatio.] A loud and vehement cry of triumph or exhortation.

Thanks, gentle citizens:

*This general applause and cheerful shout,
Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard.*

Shakespeare.

The Rhodians, seeing the enemy turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision.

Knoles, Hist. of the Turks.

*Then he might have dy'd of all admir'd,
And his triumphant soul with shouts expir'd.*

Dryden.

TO SHOUT. † v. n. [from the noun.] To cry in triumph or exhortation.

They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for?

Shakespeare.

Shout unto God with the voice of triumph.

Ps. xlvii. 1.

It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery.

Ec. xxxii.

*He storms and shouts; but flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow:*

*They miss, or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay.* Waller.

*What wonders you to take the man you love?
The people will be glad, the soldiers shout;
And Bertran, though repining, will be aw'd.*

Dryden.

TO SHOUT.* v. a. To treat with noise and shouts: with at.

*As common, so old, fashions are in disgrace:
that man would be shouted at that should come forth in his great-grandfire's suit, though not rent, not discoloured!* Bp. Hall, Fash. of the World.

SHO'UTER. n. s. [from shout.] He who shouts.

*A peal of loud applause rang out,
And thinn'd the air, till even the birds fell down
Upon the shouters' heads.* Dryden, Cleomenes.

SHO'UTING.* n. s. [from shout.] Act of shouting; loud cry.

He shall bring forth the head-stone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it.

Zech. iv. 7.

There are noises, huntings, shoutings.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Nothing but howlings and shoutings of poor naked men. More.

Shrieks and shoutings rend the suffering air.

Dryden.

TO SHOW.† v. a. pret. showed and shown; part. pass. shown. [ſceapan, Saxon; schowen, Dutch. This word is frequently written shew; but since it is always pronounced and often written show, which is favoured likewise by the Dutch schowen, I have adjusted the orthography to the pronunciation. Dr. Johnson. — Wachter deduces the German schawen (the same term) from the ancient word aug, the eye; s or sc being prefixed, and the g changed into w. What the Gothic augen, to shew, is, that is the Sax. eapan or ýpan, the same, produced by the change mentioned; and what the Sax. eapan is, that, he adds, is the English shew, “præposito schin vel sibilo.”]

1. To exhibit to view, as an agent.

If I do feign,

*O let me in my present wildness die,
And never live to show the incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed.*

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Ps. lxxxviii. 10.

Men should not take a charge upon them that they are not fit for, as if singing, dancing, and showing of tricks, were qualifications for a governor. L'Estrange.

*I through the ample air, in triumph high,
Shall lead hell captive, maugre hell, and show
The powers of darkness bound.* Milton, P. L.

2. To afford to the eye or notice; as a thing containing or exhibiting.

Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence; and what can Heav'n show more? Milton, P. L.

*A mirror in one hand collects shews,
Varied and multiplied, the group of woes.* Savage.

3. To make to see.

*Not higher that hill, nor wider, looking round,
Whereon for different cause the tempter set
Our second Adam in the wilderness,
To show him all earth's kingdoms and their glory.*

Milton, P. L.

*Yet him God the most high vouchsafes
To call by vision from his father's house,
His kindred and false gods, into a land
Which he will show him.* Milton, P. L.

4. To make to perceive.

Which now the sky with various face begins
To show us in this mountain, while the winds Blow moist and keen.* Milton, P. L.

5. To make to know.

*Him the most High
Rapt in a balmy cloud with winged steeds
Did, as thou saw'st, receive, to walk with God
High in salvation and the climes of bliss,
Exempt from death; to show thee what reward Awaits the good.* Milton.

A shooting star

*In Autumn thwarts the night, when vapours fir'd Impress the air, and shows the mariner
From what point of his compass to beware
Impetuous winds.* Milton, P. L.

Know, I am sent

*To show thee what shall come in future days
To thee and to thy offspring; good with bad
Expect to hear.* Milton, P. L.

6. To give proof of; to prove.

Hooker.

To SHREW.* v. a. [To shrew is rendered, in the Prompt. Parvulorum, by the Lat. pravo ; and shrewd, in Barret's Alv. 1580, bears the similar epithet of pravus, and is in our language defined curst, lewd, evil. From this forgotten verb, no doubt, the substantive shrew is derived ; which anciently was applied to either sex ; and in Robert of Gloucester denotes a tyrant, according to Hearne's Glossary. In Chaucer, it is used for an evil, a detestable, or a curst person ; (as Barret defines shrewd ;) and also for a tyrant or cruel. See To BESHREW, where the origin of the word is referred, among other derivations, to the shrew-mouse, an animal so poisonous, that its bite was called a curse. See also SHREW-MOUSE. Mr. Archdeacon Nares prefers this derivation, and considers the verb as formed from the substantive shrew, instead of the substantive (as I have ventured to state it) from the verb. See Nares's Gloss. in V. SHREW.] To beshrew ; to curse. Obsolete.

O nice proud churl, I shrew his face.

Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

SHREW.† n. s. [schreien, German, to clamour. Dr. Johnson. — From the Sax. ſcraean, (not to vex, to molest, for it has that meaning, but) to beguile, to lay snares for ; whence our verb, and thence this substantive. See To SHREW, SHREWED, and To BESHREW.] A peevish, malignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman : formerly applied also to a worthless or wicked man.

There dede of hem vor hunger a thousand and mo,

And ay nolde the scrowen to none pes go.

Robert of Gloucester.

Punish the shrewes and misdoers, and—defende the goodde men.

Chaucer.

Be merry, be merry, my wife has all ;

For women are shrews both short and tall.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.

Shakespeare.

A man had got a shrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her.

L'Estrange.

Her sallow cheeks her envious mind did shew, And every feature spoke aloud the shrew.

Dryden.

Every one of them, who is a shrew in domestic life, is now become a scold in politics.

Addison, Freeholder.

SHREW.† adj. [the participle of the verb shrew ; originally meaning evil, perverse, hurtful, dangerous. "Where is envie and stryf, there is unsteadfastnesse and al schrewid werk." Wicliffe, James, iii. "Worldly pleasures be shrewed and noysome to the soul." Bp. Fisher, Ps.]

1. Having the qualities of a shrew ; malicious ; troublesome ; mischievous.

Her eldest sister is so curst and shrewed, That till the father rides his hands of her,

Shakespeare.

2. Maliciously sly ; cunning ; more artful than good.

It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam : if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first, as being a desperate heretic ; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam.

Tillotson.

A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception ; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist.

Addison.

Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue.

Addison.

3. Bad ; ill betokening. Scarcely any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself ; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication, and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation.

South.

4. Painful ; pinching ; dangerous ; mischievous.

Every of this number, That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us, Shall share the good of our returned fortune.

Shakespeare.

When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary.

South.

No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body a shrewd turn.

L'Estrange.

SHREWDLY. adv. [from shrewd.]

1. Mischievously ; destructively.

This practice hath most shrewdly past upon thee.

Shakespeare.

At Oxford, his youth and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices of popular liberty were set open.

Wotton.

2. Vexatiously. It is used commonly of slight mischief, or in ironical expression.

The obstinate and schismatical are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from that body which they choose not to be of.

South.

This last allusion rubb'd upon the sore ;

Yet seem'd she not to winch, tho' shrewdly pain'd.

Dryden.

3. With good guess.

Four per cent. increases not the number of lenders ; as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it.

Locke.

SHREWDSNESS.† n. s. [from shrewd.]

1. Mischievousness ; petulance.

In their houses is iniquitate and shrewdsness.

Chaucer, Pers. Tale.

2. Sly cunning ; archness.

Her garboles, which not wanted shrewdsness of policy too, did you too much disquiet.

Shaks.

The neighbours round admire his shrewdsness,

For songs of loyalty and lewdness.

Swift.

SHREWISH. adj. [from shrew.] Having the qualities of a shrew ; froward ; petulantly clamorous.

Angelo, you must excuse us ;

My wife is shrewish when I keep not hours.

Shakespeare.

SHREWISHLY. adv. [from shrewish.] Petulantly ; peevishly ; clamorously ; frowardly.

He speaks very shrewishly ; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him.

Shakespeare.

SHREWISNESS. n. s. [from shrewish.] The qualities of a shrew ; frowardness ; petulance ; clamorousness.

I have no gift in shrewisness ;

I am a right maid for my cowardice ;

Let her not strike me.

Shakespeare.

SHREWMOUSE.† n. s. [ſcraepas, Sax.] A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that she is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terror, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew. Dr. Johnson. — Shrew has a very different origin. See SHREW.

To SHRIEK.† v. n. [skraeka, Icel. skrika, Su. Goth. from skrya, to cry out ; schreien, Germ. the same. See also To SCREAM. — Bishop Taylor usually writes our word shrike. And it is so in our old lexicography.] To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horror ; to scream.

On top whereof aye dwelt the ghastly owl,

Shrieking his baleful note.

Spenser, F. Q.

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal belman

Which gives the sternest good-night.

Shaks.

Were I the ghost that walk'd,

I'd shriek, that even your ears should rift to hear me.

Shakespeare.

Their conscience shrikes out or murmurs in a sad melancholy.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon, (1651), p. 169.

In a dreadful dream
I saw my lord so near destruction,
Then shriek'd myself awake. Denham.
Hark! Peace!

At this she shriek'd aloud; the mournful train Echo'd her grief. Dryden, Kn. Tale.
Why did you shriek out? Dryden, Span. Friar.

SHRIEK.† n. s. [from the verb.] An inarticulate cry of anguish or horror.

Una hearing evermore
His rueful shrieks and groanings, often tore
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Spenser, F. Q.

Time has been, my senses would have cool'd,
To hear a night shriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in 't. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The air became full of shrieks of the desolate mothers of Bethlehem for their dying babes.

Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651), p. 109.
The corps of Almon, and the rest are shown,
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, fill the frighted town. Dryden.

SHRIE'VAL.* adj. Belonging to the shreive or sherriff.

Chaste were his cellars; and his shreiveal board
The grossness of a city-feast abhor'd. Absalom and Achitophel.

SHRIEVE.* n. s. A corruption of sherriff.

SHRIE'VALTY.* n. s. Sherifalty. See SHRIVALTY.

SHRIFT. n. s. [sc̃ift, Sax.] Confession made to a priest. A word out of use.

Off with
Bernardine's head; I will give a present shrift,
And will advise him for a better place. Shakspeare.
My lord shall never rest;

I'll watch him time, and talk him out:
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift. Shakspeare.

The duke's commands were absolute,
Therefore, my lord, address you to your shrift,
And be yourself; for you must die this instant. Rouvé.

SHRIGHT, for shrieked.†

Dame Pertelote shright
Ful louder than did Hasdruballes wife. Chaucer, Non. Pr. Tale.

She hid her face, and lowly shright. Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 32.

SHRINT.* n. s. A shriek.

That ladies loud and piteous shrint. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 2.

SHRILL.† adj. [A word supposed to be made per onomatopœiam, in imitation of the thing expressed, which indeed it images very happily. Dr. Johnson.—The old form of this word is shirl, or shirle; as in Huloet's Dict. "Shizle, canorus." And in Bale on the Rev. (1550), P. iii. sign. Bb. 8. "The shirle showte of trompettes." See also SHIRL-cock. So skoerl and skrall, Su. Goth. and Icel. an outcry; skraela, skralla, to make a noise or clamour.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory sound.

Thy bounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth. Shakspeare.

The cock that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
Awake the god of day. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Look up a height, the shrill-gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Upstarts the lark, shrill-voic'd and loud. Thomson.

To SHRILL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To piece the ear with sharp and quick vibrations of sound.

The sun of all the world is dim and dark;
O heavy herse,

Break we our pipes that shrill'd as loud as lark;
O careful verse. Spenser.

A shrilling trumpet sounded from on high,
And unto battle bade themselves address. Shakspeare.

Here, no clarion's shrilling note,
The muse's green retreat can pierce;
The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse. Fenton, Ode to Ld. Gower.

The females round,
Maids, wives, and matrons, mix a shrilling sound. Pope.

To SHRILL.* v. a. To express in a shrill manner; to ear to make a shrill sound.

Hark, how the minstrels gin to shrill aloud
Their merry music. Spenser, Epithal.

How Hecuba cries out!
How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth!
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

SHRILLY.† adv. [from shrill.] With a shrill noise.

Mount up aloft, my muse; and now more shrilly sing.
More, Immort. of the Soul, ii. li. 40.

SHRIL'NESS.† n. s. [from shrill.] The quality of being shrill.

These parts first dispose the voice to hoarseness or shrillness. Smith on Old Age, p. 137.

SHRIMP.† n. s. [schrumpe, a wrinkle, German; scrympe, Danish.]

1. A small crustaceous vermiculated fish.

Of shell-fish there are wrinkles, shrimps, crabs. Carew.

Hawks and gulls can at a great height see mice on the earth, and shrimps in the waters. Derham.

2. A little wrinkled man; a dwarf. In contempt. Dr. Johnson.—So scrimp is the Scottish adjective for deficient, scanty, narrow; and to scrimp is to straiten, to limit, (as our unnoticed verb shrimp is,) which has been derived from the Teut. krimpen, to contract, to diminish, whence the German schrumpen, to be wrinkled. See Dr. Jamieson in To SCRIMP.

It cannot be, this weak and writhled shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shakspeare.

He hath found,
Within the ground,

At last, no shrimp,
Whereon to imp

His jolly club. B. Jonson.

To SHRIMP.* v. a. To contract. See the second sense of SHRIMP.

Such things as these go for wit, so long as they continue in Latin; but what dismally shrimp'd things would they appear, if turned into English!

Echard, Grounds of the Cont. of the Cl. (ed. 1696), p. 44.

SHRINE. n. s. [sc̃in, Sax. scrinium, Lat.] A case in which something sacred is reposit.

Of living powers, enclos'd in stately shrine
Of growing trees; you rural gods that yield

Your scepters here, if to your ears divine
A voice may come, which troubled soul doth yield. Sidney.

All the world come
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint. Shakspeare.

Come offer at my shrine, and I will help thee. Shakspeare.

They often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,
Abominations! and with cursed things

His holy rites profan'd. Milton.

Falling on his knees before her shrine,
He thus implor'd her power. Dryden.

Lovers are in rapture at the name of their fair idol; they lavish out all their incense upon that shrine, and cannot bear the thought of admitting a blemish therein. Watts.

To SHRINK. v. n. pret. I shrunk, or shrank; part. shrunk. [sc̃rincan, Sax.]

1. To contract itself into less room; to shrivel; to be drawn together by some internal power.

But to be still hot summer's tantlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment, and against this fire

Do I shrink up. Shakspeare, K. John.

Ill-weav'd ambition how much art thou shrunk!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound:

But now two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough. Shakspeare.

I have not found that water, by mixture of ashes, will shrink or draw into less room. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To withdraw as from danger.

The noise increases:
She comes, and feeble nature now I find Shrinks back in danger, and forsakes my mind. Dryden.

Nature stands agast;
And the fair light which glids this new-made orb,
Shorn of his beams, shrinks in. Dryden.

Love is a plant of the most tender kind,
That shrinks and shakes with every ruffling wind. Cronville.

All fibres have a contractive power, whereby they shorten; as appears if a fibre be cut transversely, the ends shrink, and make the wound gape. Arbutnot.

Philosophy that touch'd the heav'n's before,
Shrinks to her hidden cause, and is no more. Pope.

3. To express fear, horror, or pain, by shrugging, or contracting the body.

There is no particular object so good, but it may have the shew of some difficulty or unpleasant quality annexed to it, in respect whereof the will may shrink and decline it. Hooker.

The morning cock crew loud,
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight. Shakspeare.

I'll embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy. Shakspeare.

When he walks, he moves like an engine,
And the ground shrinks before his treading. Shakspeare.

4. To fall back as from danger.

Many shrink, which at the first would dare,
And be the foremost men to execute. Daniel, Civ. War.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And venturesous, if that fail them, shrink and fear
To endure exile, ignominy, bonds. Milton, P. L.

The sky shrunk upward with unusual dread,
And trembling Tyber div'd beneath his bed. Dryden.

The gold-fraught vessel which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat;
And, when from far the tenth wave does appear,
Shrinks up in silent joy that he's not there. Dryden.

The fires but faintly lick'd their prey,
Then loath'd their impious food, and would have shrunk away. Dryden.

Fall on: behold the noble beast at bay,
And the vile huntsmen shrink. Dryden.

Inuring children to suffer some pain, without shrinking, is a way to gain firmness and courage. Locke.

What happier natures shrink at with affright,
The hard inhabitant contends is right. Pope.

To SHRINK.† v. a. part. pass. shrunk, shrank, or shrunk. To make to shrink.

O mighty Cæsar! dost thou lie so low?

Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure? Shakespeare.

The sixth age shifts

Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon.

His youthful hose, well-sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shanks. Shakespeare.

'Tis the saucy servant that causes the lord to shrink his descending favours. Of the two, pride is more tolerable in a master. The other is a preposterousness, which Solomon saw the earth did groan for. Feltham, Res. i. 7.

Return, Alpheus: the dread voice is past.

That shrunk thy streams. Milton, Lycidas.

If he lessens the revenue, he will also shrink the necessity. Bp. Taylor.

Keep it from coming too long, lest it should shrink the corn in measure. Mortimer.

SHRINK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Corrugation; contraction into less compass.

There is in this a crack, which seems a shrink,
or contraction in the body since it was first formed.

Woodward.

2. Contraction of the body from fear or horror.

This publick death, receiv'd with such a chear,
As not a sigh, a look, a shrink bewrays
The least felt touch of a degenerate fear.

Daniel, Civ. War.

SHRINKER.† n. s. [from shrink.] One who shrinks.

We are no cowardly shrinkers,

But true Englishmen bred;

We'll play our parts, like valiant hearts,

And never fly for dread:

We'll ply our business nimbly,

Where'er we come or go,

With our mates to the Strights,

When the stormy winds do blow.

Old Sea-Song, Neptune's Raging Fury.

SHRINKING.* n. s. [from shrink.] Act of falling back as from danger, or of drawing back through fear.

If a man accustoms himself to slight or pass over these first motions to good, or shrinkings of his conscience from evil,—conscience will by degrees grow dull and unconcerned.

South, Serm. ii. 412.

SHRIVALTY. n. s. Corrupted from SHE-RIFALTY; which see.

To SHRIVE.† v. a. [scrīpan, Sax. skrifita, Su. Goth. from the Lat. scribo, to write;
the priests anciently giving to those whom they confessed, a written direction or form of penance. See Ihre, Su. Goth.
Lex. and Dr. Jamieson in To SCHRYFF.]
To hear at confession. Not in use.

What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?
Your honour hath no shriving work in hand.

Shakespeare.

He shrives this woman,
Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Shakespeare.

If he had the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wive me. Shakespeare.

Shrive but their title, and their monies poize,
A laird and twenty-pence pronounce'd with noise,
When constru'd but for a plain yeoman go,
And a good sober two-pence, and well so.

Cleveland.

To SHRIVE.* v. n. To administer confession.

Where holy fathers went to shrive,

Spenser, Shep. Cal. August.

SHRIVING.* n. s. [from shrive.] Shrift.

Better a short tale, than a bad long shriving.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

To SHRIVEL.† v. n. [schrompelen, Dutch.
Dr. Johnson.—It is perhaps only another form of rivet. See To RIVEL.] To contract itself into wrinkles.

Leaves, if they shrive and fold up, give them drink. Evelyn.

If she smelted to the freshest nosegay, it would shrive and wither as it had been blighted.

Arbutnot.

To SHRIVEL.† v. a. To contract into wrinkles.

Diseases now consume my reins,

And drink the blood out of my shrivell'd veins.

Sandys, Paraph. of Job.

Unchristian sorrows contract and shrivel up the soul. Hammond, Works, iv. 577.

He burns the leaves, the scorching blast invades
The tender corn, and shrivels up the blades.

Dryden.

When the fiery suns too fiercely play,
And shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay,
The wary ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
Undams his watery stores. Dryden.

SHRIVER. n. s. [from shrive.] A confessor. Not in use.

The ghostly father now hath done his shrift,
When he was made a shriv'er 'twas for shrift.

Shakespeare.

SHROUD.† n. s. [repuþ, Sax. Dr. Johnson.—The Saxon repuþ means apparel, garments; from reþþan, to clothe, as
Dr. Jamieson also has observed, who adds that Verelius gives the Icel. skraut, pomp, elegance, as the origin; skrud, which is also Icelandic, denoting elegant dress, or that used on occasions of ceremony. See also Serenius.]

1. A shelter; a cover.
It would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud, the universal landlord. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

A cedar in Lebanon with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud. Ezek. xxxi. 3.

By me invested with a veil of clouds,

And swaddled, as new-born, in sable shrouds,

For these a receptacle I design'd. Sandys.

The winds

Blow moist and keen, scattering the graceful locks
Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek
Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish
Our limbs benumb'd. Milton, P. L.

2. The dress of the dead; a winding-sheet.

Now the wasted brands do glow;

Whilst the screech-owl screeching loud,

Puts the wretch that lies in woe

In remembrance of a shroud. Shakespeare.

They drop away; by nature some decay,

And some the blasts of fortune sweep away;

Till naked quite of happiness, aloud

We call for death, and shelter in a shroud. Young.

3. The sail-ropes. It seems to be taken sometimes for the sails.

I turned back to the mast of the ship; there I found my sword among some of the shrouds.

Sidney.

The tackle of my heart is crackt and burnt;

And all the shrouds wherewith my life should sail,
Are turned to one little hair. Shakespeare.

A weather-beaten vessel holds

Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle torn.

Milton, P. L.

The flaming shrouds so dreadful did appear,
All judg'd a wreck could no proportion bear.

Dryden.

He summons straight his denizens of air;

The lucid squadrons round the sails repair:

Soft o'er the shrouds aerial whispers breathe,
That seem'd but zephyrs to the croud beneath.

Pope.

4. The branch of a tree. See SHRAG.

We are led to suspect, that our author in some of these instances has an equivocal reference to shrouds in the sense of the branches of a tree, now often used. Warton, on Milton's Sm. Poems.

To SHROUD.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shelter; to cover from danger as an agent.

Under your beams I will me safely shroud.

Spenser, F. Q.

He got himself to Mege, in hope to shroud himself, until such time as the rage of the people was appeased. Knolles.

The governors of Corfu caused the suburbs to be plucked down, for fear that the Turks shrouding themselves in them, should with more ease besiege
the town. Knolles.

Besides the faults men commit, with this immediate avowed aspect upon their religion, there are others which slyly shroud themselves under the skirt of its mantle. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

2. To shelter as the thing covering.

One of these trees, with all his young ones, may shroud four hundred horsemen. Ralegh.

3. To dress for the grave.

If I die before thee, shroud me

In one of these same sheets. Shaks. Othello.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folds of linen, besmeared with gums, like serceloth. Bacon.

Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm
That subtle wreath of hair about mine arm.

Donne.

4. To clothe; to dress.

5. To cover or conceal.

That same evening, when all shrouded were

In careless sleep, all, without care or fear,
They fell upon the flock. Spenser.

Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves,

For through this land anon the deer will come,
And in this covert will we make our stand,

Culling the principal. Shaks. Hen. VI.

Moon, slip behind some cloud: some tempest rise,

And blow out all the stars that light the skies,
To shroud my shame. Dryden.

Thither the loud tumultuous winds resort,
And on the mountain keep their boist'rous court,

That in thick show'rs her rocky summit shrouds,
And darkens all the broken view with clouds.

Addison.

6. To defend; to protect.

So Venus from prevailing Greeks did shroud
The hope of Rome, and sav'd him in a cloud.

Waller.

7. [Scpeaban, Sax. See To SHRAG.] To cut or lop off the top branches of trees.

Chambers.

To SHROUD. v. n. To harbour; to take shelter.

If your stray attendance be yet lodg'd,
Or shroud within these limits, I shall know
Ere morrow wake. Milton, Comus.

SHROUDY.* adj. [from shroud.] Affording shelter. The following example is the manuscript reading of the passage in the great poet just cited under the neuter verb shroud.

If your stray attendance be yet lodg'd
Within these shroudie limits.

Milton, MS. of Comus, Trin. Coll. Camb.

To SHROVE.* v. n. To join in the processions, sports, and feasting, anciently observed at shrove-tide.

'Twill be rarely strange

To see him stated thus, as though he went
A shroving through the city, or intended
To set up some new wake.

Beaumont and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.

3 U 2

SHRO'VETIDE.† } n. s. [from shrove, the SHRO'VETUESDAY. } preterite of shrive.]
 The time of confession; the day before Ash-Wednesday or Lent, on which anciently they went to confession.
At shrovetide to shroving. Tusser.
 'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all,
 And welcome merry shrovetide.

Shakspeare. Hen. IV. P. II.
A shrove-tuesday's riot. B. Jonson, Episcane.
SHRO'VING.* n. s. [from To shrove.] The festivity of shrovetide.

Eating, drinking, merry-making, — what else, I beseech you, was the whole life of this miserable man here, but in a manner a perpetual shroving!
Hales, Sermon on St. Luke, xvi. 25. (ed. 1683.) p. 4.
SHRUB.† n. s. [reprob, Saxon; and scrub or scrob is our old word for shrub, yet retained in the name "Wormwood-Scrubs," a place near London. See also SCROG, and SCRUBBED. The Gael. scrab- ban likewise means a stunted bush.]

1. A bush; a small tree.

Trees generally shoot up in one great stem or body; and then at a good distance from the earth spread into branches; thus gooseberries and currants are shrubs; oaks and cherries are trees. Locke.

He came into a gloomy glade,
 Cover'd with boughs and shrubs from heaven's light. Spenser, F. Q.
 The humble shrub and bush with hazel frill.

All might have been as well brushwood and shrubs. Milton, P. L.

Comedy is a representation of common life, in low subjects, and is a kind of juniper, a shrub belonging to the species of cedar. Dryden.

I've liv'd
 Amidst these woods, gleaning from thorns and shrubs
 A wretched sustenance. Addison.

2. Spirit, acid, and sugar mixed. [not perhaps a cant word, as Dr. Johnson pretends; but probably, as Lye has observed, from the Arabic sharab, syrup.]

To SHRUB.* v. a. [from the noun.] To rid from bushes or trees.

Barret, in V. Grub.
 Though they be well shrubbed and shred, yet they begin even now before the spring to bud, and hope again in time to flourish as the green bay-tree.

Anderson, Expos. of Benedictus, (1573.) fol. 64.
SHRU'BERRY.* n. s. [from shrub.] A plantation of shrubs.

He placed a cast of the Medicean Venus in his shrubbery; and one of the piping Faun in a small circle of firs, hazels, and other elegant shrubs.

Graves, Recoll. of Shenstone, p. 69.
SHRU'BRY. adj. [from shrub.]

1. Resembling a shrub.
 Plants appearing weathered, shrubby, and curled,
 are the effects of immoderate wet.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Full of shrubs; bushy.
 Gentle villager,
 What readiest way would bring me to that place?—
 Due west it rises from this shrubby point.

Milton, Comus.

3. Consisting of shrubs.
 On that cloud-piercing hill
 Plinlimmon, the goats their shrubby browze Gnaw pendent. Philips.

SHRU'FF. n. s. Dross; the refuse of metal trued by the fire. Dict.

To SHRUG.† v. n. [schricken, Dutch, to tremble. Dr. Johnson. — Sueth. skruka, to lift up the shoulders; from schrick, Dutch, skræck, Su. a trembling. Sere-nius. Mr. Nares observes, that Dr. Johnson writes this verb with gg, and the substantive with g only; which perhaps may be found, he says, a convenient distinction, though he is not aware that it has been yet adopted. Elem. of Orthoep. p. 311. I should imagine the double g to be quite unintentional on the part of Dr. Johnson. The verb active is without it, in his own editions. Nor is this distinction to be found in other verbs and substantives, where the meaning is analogous; we might as well require, in shut, the verb with a double t, and the substantive with only one; or in skin, the verb with a double n, and the substantive with only one; and the like.]

 To express horror or dissatisfaction by motion of the shoulders or whole body.

Like a fearful deer that looks most when he comes to the best feed, with a shrugging kind of tremor through all her principal parts, she gave these words. Sidney.

The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shrugging come over her body like the twinkling of the fairest among the fixed stars. Sidney.

Be quick, thou wert best
 To answer other business; shrugg'st thou, malice?
Shakspeare.

He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch
 endures,
 As 'prentices or school-boys which do know
 Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.

They grin, they snarl, they scratch, they hug. Swift.
To SHRUG.† v. a. To contract or draw up.

Let me shroud and shrug myself into my shell,
 as a tortoise.

Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, (1613.) p. 554.
 He shrugs his shoulders when you talk of securities. Addison.

He shrugg'd his sturdy back,
 As if he felt his shoulders ake. Hudibras.

SHRUG. n. s. [from the verb.] A motion of the shoulders, usually expressing dislike or aversion.

And yet they ramble not to learn the mode,
 How to be drest, or how to lisp abroad,
 To return knowing in the Spanish shrug. Clevelandland.

As Spaniards talk in dialogues,
 Of heads and shoulders, and shrugs. Hudibras.

Put on the critick's brow, and sit
 At Will's, the puny judge of wit,
 A nod, a shrug, a scornful smile,
 With caution us'd may serve awhile. Swift.

A third, with mystick shrug and winking eye,
 Suspects him for a dervise and a spy. Harte.

SHRUNK. The preterite and part. passive of shrink.

Leaving the two friends alone, I shrunk aside to the banqueting-house, where the pictures were.

The wicked shrunk for fear of him, and all the workers of iniquity were troubled. 1 Maccabees.

SHRUNKEN. The part. passive of shrink.
 She weighing the decaying plight,
 And shrunk sniws of her chosen knight,
 Would not awhile her forward course pursue.

Spenser, F. Q.
 If there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunk things, full of melancholy.

Bacon.

To SHUDDER.† v. n. [schuttern, Germ.
 freq. of schutten, to tremble; schudden,
 Teut. the same.] To quake with fear,
 or with aversion.

All the other passions fleet to air,
 As doubtful thoughts, and rash embraç'd despair,
 And shuddering fear. Shakspeare.

The fright was general; but the female band
 With horror shuddering on a heap they run. Dryd.
 I love, — alas! I shudder at the name,
 My blood runs backward, and my faltering tongue
 Sticks at the sound. Smith.

Cæsar will shrink to hear the words thou utter'st,
 And shudder in the midst of all his conquests.

Addison.

SHU'DDER.* n. s. [from the verb.] A tremor; the state of trembling.

Into strong shudders, and to heavenly agues.

Shakspeare, Tim.

To SHUFFLE.† v. a. [scjyfelun, Sax. a bustle, a tumult. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from scupan, to shove, to push with violence, to drive forward; schuyfflen, schuyffelen, Teut. the same.]

1. To throw into disorder; to agitate tumultuously, so as that one thing takes the place of another: to confuse; to thrown together tumultuously.

A precious cunning in the late protector,
 To shuffle a new prince into the state.

Beaumont, and Fl. Coronation.

When the heavens shuffle all in one,
 The torrid with the frozen zone,

Then, sibly, thou and I will greet. Clevelandland.
 In most things good and evil lie shuffled, and thrust up together in a confused heap; and it is study which must draw them forth and range them.

South.

When lots are shuffled together in a lap or pitcher, what reason can a man have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black? South.

A glimpse of moonshine sheath'd with red,
 A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light,
 That dances through the clouds and shuts again.

Dryden.

We shall in vain, shuffling the little money we have from one another's hands, endeavour to prevent our wants; decay of trade will quickly waste
 all the remainder. Locke.

These vapours soon, miraculous event,
 Shuffled by chance, and mixt by accident.

Blackmore.

Shuffled and entangled in their race,
 They clasp each other. Blackmore.

He has shuffled the two ends of the sentence together, and by taking out the middle, makes it speak just as he would have it. Atterbury.

'Tis not strange that such a one should believe, that things were blindly shuffled and hurled about in the world; that the elements were at constant strife with each other. Woodward.

2. To change the position of cards with respect to each other.

The motions of shuffling of cards, or casting of dice, are very light. Bacon.

We sure in vain the cards condemn,
 Ourselves both cut and shuffled them. Prior.

3. To remove, or introduce with some artificial or fraudulent tumult.

Her mother,

Now firm for Doctor Caius, hath appointed
 That he shall likewise shuffle her away. Shakspeare.

It was contrived by your enemies, and shuffled into the papers that were seized. Dryden.

4. To SHUFFLE off. To get rid of.

In that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
 When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
 Must give us pause. Shakspeare.

I can no other answer make, but thanks;
 And oft good turns

Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay. Shakspeare.

If any thing hits, we take it to ourselves; if it miscarries, we shuffle it off to our neighbours.

L'Estrange.

If, when a child is questioned for any thing, he persists to shuffle it off with a falsehood, he must be chastised.

Locke.

5. To SHUFFLE up. To form tumultuously, or fraudulently.

They sent forth their precepts to convent them before a court of commission, and there used to shuffle up a summary proceeding by examination, without trial of jury.

Bacon.

He shuffled up a peace with the cedar, in which the Bunelians were excluded.

Howell.

To SHUFFLE. v. n.

1. To throw the cards into a new order.

A sharper both shuffles and cuts.

L'Estrange.

Cards we play

A round or two; when 's'd, we throw away, Take a fresh pack; nor is it worth our grieving Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving.

Granville.

2. To play mean tricks; to practise fraud; to evade fair questions.

I myself, leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle.

Shakespeare.

I have nought to do with that shuffling sect, that doubt eternally, and question all things.

Glenville, Defence.

The crab advised his companion to give over shuffling and doubling, and practise good faith.

L'Estrange.

To these arguments concerning the novelty of the earth, there are some shuffling excuses made.

Burnet, Theory.

If a steward be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a sottish forbearance will teach him to shuffle, and strongly tempt him to be a cheat.

South.

Though he durst not directly break his appointment, he made many a shuffling excuse.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

3. To struggle; to shift.

Your life, good master, Must shuffle for itself.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

4. To move with an irregular gait.

Mincing poetry,

'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag.

Shaks.

SHUFFLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of disordering things, or making them take confusedly the place of each other.

Is it not a firmer foundation for contentment, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually disposed for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling, nothing effected for any purpose, but all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together, by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter?

Bentley, Serm.

2. A trick; an artifice.

The gifts of nature are beyond all shams and shuffles.

L'Estrange.

SHUFFLEBOARD. n. s. The old name of shuffleboard; which see.

SHUFFLECAP. n. s. [shuffle and cap.] A play at which money is shaken in a hat.

He lost his money at chuckfarthing, shufflecap, and all-fours.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

SHUFFLER. n. s. [from shuffle.] One who plays tricks or shuffles.

SHUFFLING. n. s. [from shuffle.]

1. Act of throwing into disorder; confusion.

Children should not lose the consideration of human nature in the shufflings of outward conditions: the more they have, the better humoured they should be taught to be.

Locke.

2. Trick; artifice.

His own book is a perpetual detail of his own shufflings or mistakes.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 35.

3. An irregular gait.

SHUFFLINGLY. adv. [from shuffle.] With an irregular gait.

I may go shufflingly, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge and moil at constancy, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace.

Dryden.

To SHUN. v. a. [reunian, Saxon.] To avoid; to decline; to endeavour to escape; to eschew.

Consider death in itself, and nature teacheth Christ to shun it.

Hooker.

Birds and beasts can fly their foe:

So chancier, who never saw a fox,

Yet shunn'd him as a sailor shuns the rocks.

Dryden.

Cato will train thee up to great

And virtuous deeds: do but observe him well,

Thou'lt shun misfortunes, or thou'lt learn to bear them.

Addison.

To SHUN. v. n. To decline; to avoid to do a thing.

I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.

Acts, ix. 27.

The lark still shuns on lofty boughs to build,

Her humble nest lies silent in the field.

Waller.

SHUNLESS. adj. [from shun.] Inevitable; unavoidable.

Alone he enter'd

The mortal gate of the city, which he painted

With shunless destiny.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

To SHUT. v. a. preterite, I shut; past pass. shut. [scittan, Saxon; schutten, Dutch.]

1. To close so as to prohibit ingress or regress; to make not open.

Kings shall shut their mouths at him.

Isaiah, lii. 15.

To a strong tower fled all the men and women, and shut it to them, and gat them up to the top.

Judges, ix. 51.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite more, and become stronger.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

She open'd, but to shut

Excell'd her power; the gates wide open stood.

Milton, P. L.

2. To inclose; to confine.

Before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith, which should afterwards be revealed.

Gal. iii.

They went in male and female of all flesh; and the Lord shut him in.

Gen. vii. 16.

3. To prohibit; to bar.

Shall that be shut to man, which to the beast

Is open?

Milton.

4. To exclude.

On various seas, not only lost, But shut from every shore, and barr'd from every coast.

Dryden.

5. To contract; not to keep expanded.

Harden not thy heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother.

Deut. xv. 7.

6. To SHUT out. To exclude; to deny admission to.

In such a night

To shut me out! Pour on, I will endure.

Shaks.

Wisdom at one entrance quite shut out.

Milton, P. L.

He in his walls confin'd,

Shut out the woes which he too well divin'd.

Dryden, Æn.

Sometimes the mind fixes itself with so much earnestness on the contemplation of some objects, that it shuts out all other thoughts.

Locke.

7. To SHUT up. To close; to make impervious; to make impassable, or impossible to be entered or quitted. Up is sometimes little more than emphatical.

Woe unto you, scribes! for you shut up the kingdom of heaven against men.

St. Matth. xxiii. 13.

Dangerous rocks shut up the passage. What barbarous customs!

Shut up a desert shore to drowning men, And drive us to the cruel seas again.

Dryden, Æn.

His mother shut up half the rooms in the house, in which her husband or son had died.

Addison.

8. To SHUT up. To confine; to inclose; to imprison.

Thou hast known my soul in adversities; and not shut me up into the hand of the enemy.

Ps. xxxi. 8.

A loss at sea, a fit of sickness, are trifles, when we consider whole families put to the sword, wretches shut up in dungeons.

Addison, Spect.

Lucullus, with a great fleet, shut up Mithridates in Pitany.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

9. To SHUT up. To conclude.

The king's a-bed,

He is shut up in measureless content.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Although he was patiently heard as he delivered his embassy, yet, in the shutting up of all, he received no more but an insolent answer.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

To leave you blest, I would be more accurst Than death can make me; for death ends our woes,

And the kind grave shuts up the mournful scene.

Dryden.

When the scene of life is shut up, the slave will be above his master, if he has acted better.

Collier of Envy.

To SHUT. v. n. To be closed; to close itself: as, flowers open in the day, and shut at night.

- SHUT. Participial adjective. Rid; clear; free.

We must not pray in one breath to find a thief, and in the next to get shut of him.

L'Estrange.

SHUT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Close; act of shutting.

I sought him round his palace, made enquiry Of all the slaves: but had for answer,

That since the shut of evening none had seen him.

Dryden.

2. Small door or cover.

The wind-gun is charged by the forcible compression of air, the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shutters within to stop the vents by which it was admitted.

Wilkins.

In a very dark chamber, at a round hole, about one third part of an inch broad, made in the shut of a window, I placed a glass prism.

Newton, Opt.

There were no shuts or stopples made for the animal's ears, that any loud noise might awaken it.

Ray on the Creation.

SHUTTER. n. s. [from shut.]

1. One that shuts.

2. A cover; a door.

The wealthy, —

Sleep at ease; the shutters make it night.

Dryden, Juv.

SHUTTLE. n. s. [schietspoel, Teut. skutul, Icelandic; from skuta, Suth. to shoot, to push, to drive through. Serenius.]

The instrument with which the weaver shoots the cross threads.

I know life is a shuttle.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Like shuttles through the loom, so swiftly glide My feather'd hours.

Sandys.

What curious loom does chance by evening spread!

With what fine shuttle weave the virgin's thread,
Which like the spider's net hangs o'er the mead!

Blackmore.

SHUTTLECOCK. n. s. [See SHUTTLECOCK.] A cork stick with feathers, and beaten backward and forward.

With dice, with cards, with billiards far unfit,
With shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

SHY.† adj. [schouw, Teut. as, "schouw or schouwigh peerd," a shy or timid horse; sky, skyg, Su. Goth. applied also to a horse. See Kilian, and Junius. Serenius cites the Su. Goth. sky, to avoid, to shun; which agrees with the Teut. schowen, or schuwen.]

1. Reserved; not familiar; not free of behaviour.

I know you shy to be oblig'd,
And still more loth to be oblig'd by me. Southern.

What makes you so shy, my good friend?
There's no body loves you better than I.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

2. Cautious; wary; chary.
I am very shy of employing corrosive liquors in the preparation of medicines. Boyle.

We are not shy of assent to celestial informations, because they were hid from ages.

Glanville, Scep sis.

We grant, although he had much wit,
H' was very shy of using it,
As being loth to wear it out,
And therefore bore it not about. Hudibras.

3. Keeping at a distance; unwilling to approach.

A shy fellow was the duke; and I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

She is represented in such a shy retiring posture, and covers her bosom with one of her hands.

Addison, Guardian.

But when we come to seize th' inviting prey,
Like a shy ghost, it vanishes away. Norris.

4. Suspicious; jealous; unwilling to suffer near acquaintance.

The bruise impostumated, and turned to a stinking ulcer, which made every body shy to come near her. Arbuthnot.

The horses of the army having been daily led before me, were no longer shy, but would come up to my very feet, without starting. Swift.

Princes are, by wisdom of state, somewhat shy of their successors; and there may be supposed in queens regnant a little proportion of tenderness that way more than in kings. Wotton.

To SHY. v. n. To shun by turning aside; applied to a horse. In colloquial language we often hear of a horse shying, or apt to shy. Serenius gives the Su. Goth. sky under the adjective SHY, which applies to the present expression.

SHYLY.† adv. [from shy.] Not familiarly. See SHILY. Dr. Johnson writes shily and shiness, but dryly and dryness. It is desirable that uniformity should be established in this particular. The true rule is this. Words ending with y, preceded by a consonant, if they assume an additional syllable, change y into i. The exceptions to it are, 1. when the additional syllable begins with i; 2. when the original word is a monosyllable; (though before ed even monosyllables change y into i, as dried;) for when a single letter forms a fourth or fifth part of a whole word, the eye is not easily reconciled to the loss, nor consequently to the change of it. We should therefore write shyly and shyness. Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 310.

SHYNES.† n. s. [from shy.] Unwillingness to be familiar; unsociableness; reservedness.

The first person, that passed by me, was a lady that had a particular shyness in the cast of her eye, and a more than ordinary reservedness in all the parts of her behaviour. Tatler, No. 237.

Mr. Loveday used to style shyness the English madness. If indulged, it may be the cause of madness, by driving men to shun company, and live in solitude; which few heads are strong enough to bear; none, if it be joined with idleness. Or it may be the effect of madness, which is misanthropic and malignant: Some say, pride is always at the bottom.

Bp. Horne, in Jones's Life, &c. p. 597.

SIB.† adj. [rib, Sax.] Related by blood. Under syb Dr. Johnson acknowledges sib to be the right form of the word.

[He] was sibbe to Arthour of Breteigne.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 1199.

He is no faery born, ne sib at all
To elves. Spenser, F. Q.

SIB.* n. s. A relation.

Our puritans, very sib unto those fathers of the society, [the jesuits.]

Mountagu, App. to Cas. p. 139.

SIBILANT. adj. [sibilans, Latin.] Hissing.

It were easy to add a nasal letter to each of the other pair of hisping and sibilant letters.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

SIBILA'TION. n. s. [from sibilo, Latin.] A hissing sound.

Metals, quenched in water, give a sibilation or hissing sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A pipe, a little moistened on the inside, maketh a more solemn sound than if the pipe were dry; but yet with a sweet degree of sibilation or purling.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SIBYL.* n. s. [sibylla, Lat.] A prophetess among the pagans.

It was my dismal hap to hear
A sibyl old, bow-bent with crooked age,
That far events full wisely could presage.

Milton, Vac. Exercise.

SIBYLLINE.* adj. [sibyllinus, Latin.] Of or belonging to a sibyl.

The genuine sibylline oracles—in the first ages of the church were easily distinguished from the spurious. Addison on the Chr. Rel. § 6.

SICAMORE.† n. s. [sicomorus, Lat. picomor, Sax. See also SYCAMORE.] A tree.

Of trees you have the palm, olive, and sicamore. Peacham.

To SICCATE.† v. a. [sicco, Latin.] To dry. Cockeram.

SICCATION. n. s. [from siccate.] The act of drying.

SICCITICK. adj. [siccus and fio, Latin.] Causing dryness.

SICCITY.† n. s. [siccité, Fr. siccitas, from siccus, Lat.] Dryness; aridity; want of moisture.

They speak much of the elementary quality of siccity or dryness. Bacon, Hist. of Life and Death.

That which is coagulated by a fiery siccity will suffer coagulation from aqueous humidity, as salt and sugar. Brown.

The reason some attempt to make out from the siccity and driness of its flesh.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

In application of medicaments, consider what degree of heat and siccity is proper.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SICE.† n. s. [siz, French.] The number six at dice.

My study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice;
To shun ames-ace, that swept my stakes away. Dryden.

What reason can he have to presume, that he shall throw an ace rather than a sice? South, Sermon, i. 281.

SICH. adj. Such. See SUCH.

I thought the soul would have made me rich;
But now I wote it is nothing sich;
For either the shepherds been idle and still,
And led of their sheep what they will. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

SICK.† adj. [Goth. siuks; Sax. peoc; old Engl. seke. "[He] them hath holpen, when that they were seke." Chaucer, C. T. Prol.]

1. Afflicted with disease: with of before the disease.

'Tis meet we all go forth,
To view the sick and feeble parts of France. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well. Shakspeare.

Cassius, I am sick of many griefs. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

Where's the stoick can his wrath appease,
To see his country sick of Fym's disease? Cleaveland.

Despair

Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch. Milton, P. L.

A spark of the man-killing-trade fell sick. Dryden.

Visit the sick and the poor, comforting them by some seasonable assistance. Nelson.

Nothing makes a more ridiculous figure in a man's life, than the disparity we often find in him sick and well. Pope.

2. Disordered in the organs of digestion; ill in the stomach.

3. Corrupted.

What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, or weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd: what worst, as oft Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

4. Disgusted.

I do not, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men;
But rather shew a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds sick of happiness,
And purge the obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Shakspeare.

He was not so sick of his master as of his work. L'Estrange.

Why will you break the sabbath of my days,
Now sick alike of envy and of praise? Pope.

To SICK. v. n. [from the noun.] Toicken; to take a disease. Not in use.

A little time before
Our great grandsire Edward sick'd and died. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To SICKEN. v. a. [from sick.]

1. To make sick; to diseased.

Why should one earth, one clime, one stream,
one breath,
Raise this to strength, and sicken that to death? Prior.

2. To weaken; to impair.

Kinsmen of mine have
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

To SICKEN. v. n.

1. To grow sick; to fall into disease.

I know the more one sickens, the worse he is.

The judges that sat upon the jail, and those that attended, sickened upon it, and died. Bacon.

Merely to drive away the time, he sicken'd, Fainted, and died; nor would with ale be quicken'd. Milton, Ep. on Hobson.

2. To be satiated; to be filled to disgust.

Though the treasure
Of nature's germins tumble all together,
Ev'n till destruction sicken, answer me
To what I ask you. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. To be disgusted, or disordered with abhorrence.

The ghosts repine at violated night,
And curse th' invading sun, and sicken at the sight. Dryden.

4. To grow weak; to decay; to languish.

Ply'd thick and close, as when the fight begun,
Their huge unwieldy navy wastes away:
So sicken waning moons too near the sun,
And blunt their crescents on the edge of day. Dryden.

Abstract what others feel, what others think;
All pleasures sicken, and all glories sink. Pope.

SICKER.† adj. [written also siker; Su.
Goth. siker, seker; Germ. sicher; Welsh, siccr; Irish, sokair; Lat. securus.] Sure; certain; firm. Retained in our northern word sicklerly.

Being some honest curate, or some vicar,
Content with little in condition sicker. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

SICKER. adv. Surely; certainly.

Sicker thou'st but a lazy lord,
And rekes much of thy swink,
That with fond terms and witless words
To bleer mine eyes doth think. Spenser.

SICKERLY.* adv. [from sicker.] Surely;
a northern word. Grose.

That men may more sicklerly be evil.

SICKERNESS.* n. s. [from sicker.] Security.
Lightly she leaped, as a wight forlore,
From her dull horse, in desperate distresse,
And to her feet betooke her doubtful sickerness. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 25.

SICKISH.* adj. [from sick.] Somewhat sick; inclined to be sick.

Not the body only, but the mind too, which commonly follows the temper of the body, is sickish and indisposed. Hakewill on Prov. p. 296.
Sometimes sickish, and then swooning. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

SICKISHNESS.* n. s. [from sickish.] Tendency to be sick.

The burning heat afterwards is not so intense, nor the headache and sickness so great, nor with such frequent vomitings, but rather a continued sickishness. Cheyne's Eng. Malady, (1793), p. 228.

SICKLE. n. s. [iccol, Saxon; sickel, Dutch, from secale, or sicula, Latin.] The hook with which corn is cut; a reaping-hook.

God's harvest is even ready for the sickle, and all the fields yellow long ago. Spenser on Ireland.

Time should never,
In life or death, their fortunes sever;
But with his rusty sickle mow

Both down together at a blow. Hudibras.

When corn has once felt the sickle, it has no more benefit from the sunshine. South, Serm.
O'er whom Time gently shakes his wings of down,

Till with his silent sickle they are mown. Dryden.

SICKLED.* adj. [from sickle.] Supplied with a sickle; carrying a sickle.

When autumn's yellow lustre gilds the world,
And tempts the sickled swain into the field.

Thomson, Autumn.

SICKLEWORT.* n. s. [iccol-pyrt, Sax.] A plant.

SICKLEMAN.* n. s. [from sickle.] A reaper.
SICKLER.

You sunburnt sicklemen, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow, and be merry. Shakespeare.

Their sicklers reap the corn another sows. Sandys.

SICKLINESS. n. s. [from sickly.] Disposition to sickness; habitual disease.

Impute
His words to wayward sickliness and age. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Next compare the sickliness, healthfulness, and fruitfulness of the several years. Grant.

SICKLY. adv. [from sick.] Not in health.

We wear our health but sickly in his life,
Which in his death were perfect. Shaks. Macbeth.

SICKLY. adj. [from sick.]

1. Not healthy; not sound; not well; somewhat disordered.

I'm fall'n out with more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Bring me word, boy, if thy lord looks well;

For he went sickly forth. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

A pleasing cordial, Buckingham,
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop. Dryden.

Would we know what health and ease are worth, let us ask one that is sickly, or in pain, and we have the price. Grew.

There affection, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen;
Practis'd to lisp, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride. Pope.

When on my sickly couch I lay,
Impatient both of night and day,
Then Stella ran to my relief. Swift.

Your bodies are not only poor and perishing like your clothes, but, like infected clothes, fill you with all diseases and distempers, which oppress the soul with sickly appetites, and vain cravings. Law.

2. Faint; weak; languid.

The moon grows sickly at the sight of day,
And early cocks have summon'd me away. Dryden.

To animate the doubtful fight,
Namur in vain expects that ray;

In vain France hopes the sickly light
Should shine near William's fuller day. Prior.

To SICKLY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make diseased; to taint with the hue of disease. Not in use.

The native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought. Shaks.

SICKNESS. n. s. [from sick.]

1. State of being diseased.

As I lament the sickness of the king,
So loth to lose him. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. Disease; malady.

My people are with sickness much enfeebled,
My numbers lessen'd. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses. St. Matthew.

When I say every sickness has a tendency to death, I mean every individual sickness as well as every kind. Watts.

Trust not too much your now resistless charms;
Those age or sickness soon or late disarms. Pope.

3. Disorder in the organs of digestion.

SIDE. n. s. [sibe, Saxon; sijde, Dutch.]

1. The parts of animals fortified by the ribs.

When two boars with rankling malice meet,
Their gory sides fresh bleeding fiercely fret. Spenser, F. Q.

Ere the soft fearful people to the flood Commit their woolly sides. Thomson.

2. Any part of any body opposed to any other part.

The tables were written on both their sides, on the one side and on the other. Ex. xxxii. 15.

The force of these outward streams might well enough serve for the turning of the screw, if it were so that both its sides would equiperorate. Wilkins.

3. The right or left.

The lovely Thais by his side
Sat like a blooming eastern bride

In flow'r of youth, and beauty's pride. Dryden.

4. Margin; edge; verge.

Or where Hydaspes' wealthy side
Pays tribute to the Persian pride. Roscommon.

Poor wretch! on stormy seas to lose thy life;
For now the flowing tide

Had brought the body nearer to the side. Dryden.

The temple of Diana chaste,
A sylvan scene with various greens was drawn,
Shades on the sides, and in the midst a lawn. Dryden.

I could see persons dressed in glorious habits, with garlands upon their heads, lying down by the sides of fountains. Addison.

5. Any kind of local respect.

They looking back, all the eastern side beheld
Of Paradise. Milton, P. L.

If our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are at will
On this side nothing. Milton, P. L.

6. Party; interest; faction; sect.

Their weapons only
Seem'd on our side; but for their spirits and souls,

This word rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Favour, custom, and at last number, will be on the side of grace. Sprat.

Men he always took to be
His friends, and dogs his enemy;

Who never so much hurt had done him,
As his own side did falling on him. Hudibras.

In the serious part of poetry the advantage is wholly on Chaucer's side. Dryden.

That person, who fills their chair, has justly gained the esteem of all sides by the impartiality of his behaviour. Addison.

Let not our James, though foil'd in arms, despair,
Whilst on his side he reckons half the fair. Tickell.

Some valuing those of their own side, or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:

Fondly we think we honour merit then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

He from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,
And sets the passions on the side of truth;

Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
And pours each human virtue in the heart. Pope.

7. Any part placed in contradistinction or opposition to another. It is used of persons, or propositions respecting each other.

There began a sharp and cruel fight, many being slain and wounded on both sides.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The plague is not easily received by such as continually are about them that have it: on the other side, the plague taketh soonest hold of those that come out of a fresh air. Bacon.

I am too well satisfied of my own weakness to be pleased with any thing I have written; but, on the other side, my reason tells me, that what I have long considered may be as just as what an ordinary judge will condemn. Dryden.

My secret wishes would my choice decide;
But open justice bends to neither side. Dryden.

It is granted on both sides, that the fear of a Deity doth universally possess the minds of men.

Tillotson.

Two nations still pursu'd
Peculiar ends, on each side resolute
To fly conjunction. Philips.

8. It is used to note consanguinity; as, he's cousin by his mother's or father's side.

Yet here and there we grant a gentle breeze,
Whose temper betters by the father's side,
Unlike the rest that double human care,
Fond to relieve, or resolute to share. Parnell.

SIDE.† adj. [from the noun.]

1. Lateral.

Take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts, and on the upper door post of the houses.

Ex. xii. 7.

2. Oblique; indirect.

They presume that the law doth speak with all indifference, that the law hath no side respect to their persons. Hooker.

People are sooner reclaimed by the side wind of a surprise, than by downright admonition.

L'Estrange.

One mighty squadron with a side wind sped.

Dryden.

The parts of water, being easily separable from each other, will, by a side motion, be easily removed, and give way to the approach of two pieces of marble. Locke.

What natural agent could turn them aside, could impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are a falling? Dryden.

He not only gives us the full prospects, but several unexpected peculiarities, and side views, unobserved by any painter but Homer. Bentley, Serm.

My secret enemies could not forbear some expressions, which by a side wind reflected on me.

Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

3. [Side, rib, Sax. side, Dan.] Long; broad;
large; extensive. Still a northern word.
Dr. Johnson has overpassed this meaning. Swift.

Cloth of gold — set with pearls, down sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts round. Shaks. Much Ado.

His branch'd cossock, a side sweeping gown.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

TO SIDE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To lean on one side.

All rising to great place is by a winding stair;
and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst rising, and balance himself when placed.

Bacon.

2. To take a party; to engage in a faction.

Vex'd are the nobles who have sided
In his behalf. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Terms rightly conceived, and notions duly fitted to them, require a brain free from all inclination to siding, or affection to opinions for the authors' sakes, before they be well understood. Digby on Bodies.

Not yet so dully desperate
To side against ourselves with fate;
As criminals, condemn'd to suffer,
Are blinded first, and then turn'd over. Hudibras.

The princes differ and divide;
Some follow law, and some with beauty side.

Granville.

It is pleasant to see a verse of an old poet revolting from its original sense, and siding with a modern subject. Addison.

All side in parties, and begin the attack. Pope.

Those who pretended to be in with the principles upon which her majesty proceeded, either absented themselves where the whole cause depended, or sided with the enemy. Swift.

The equitable part of those who now side against the court, will probably be more temperate. Swift.

TO SIDE. * v. a.

1. To be at the side of; to stand at the side of.

But his blind eye, that sided Paridell,
All his demesure from his sight did hide.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 27.

The pair, which do each other side,
Though yet some space doth them divide,
This happy night must both make one.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

If Clara side him, and will call him friend,
I would the difference of our bloods were such
As might with any shift be wip'd away.

Beaumont, and Fl. Love's Cure.

2. To suit; to pair.

He [Mr. John Hales] had sure read more, and carried more about him in his excellent memory, than any man I ever knew, my lord Falkland only excepted, who I think sided him.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 53.

SIDEBOARD. n. s. [side and board.] The side table on which conveniences are placed for those that eat at the other table.

At a stately sideboard by the wine
That fragrant smell diffus'd. Milton, P. R.
No sideboards then with gilded plate were dress'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes press'd.

Dryden.

The snow white damask ensigns are display'd,
And glittering salvers on the sideboard laid. King.

The shining sideboard, and the burnish'd plate,
Let other ministers, great Anne, require. Prior.

Africanus brought from Carthage to Rome, in silver vessels, to the value of £1,966l. 15s. 9d. a quantity exceeded afterwards by the sideboards of many private tables. Arbutnot.

SIDEROX. n. s. [side and box.] Enclosed seat on the side of the theatre.

Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beams?

Why looks the sidebox from its inmost rows? Pope.

SIDFLY. n. s. An insect.

From a rough whitish maggot, in the intestinum rectum of horses, the sidefly proceeds.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

SIDELONG. adj. [side and long.] Lateral;
oblique; not in front; not direct.

She darted from her eyes a sidelong glance,
Just as she spoke, and, like her words, it flew;
Seem'd not to beg what she then bid me do.

Dryden.

The deadly wound is in thy soul:
When thou a tempting harlot dost behold,
And when she casts on thee a sidelong glance,
Then try thy heart, and tell me if it danceth?

Dryden.

The reason of the planets' motions in curve lines is the attraction of the sun, and an oblique or side-long impulse. Locke.

The kiss snatch'd hasty from the sidelong maid.

Thomson.

SIDELONG. adv.

1. Laterally; obliquely; not in pursuit;
not in opposition.

As if on earth

Winds under ground, or waters, forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton, P. L.

As a lion, bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey,
Sidelong to seize. Dryden, Ov.

2. On the side.

If it prove too wet, lay your pots sidelong; but shade those which blow from the afternoon sun.

Evelyn, Kalendar.

SIDER. * n. s. [from side.] One who joins a party, or engages in a faction.

Such converts — are sure to be beset with diverse sorts of adversaries; as the papists, and their siders.
Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616), Pref.

A sider with all times.

A. Wood, Ath. Oz. vol. ii. col. 27.

SIDER. n. s. See CIDER.

SIDERAL. adj. [from sidus, Latin.]

Starry; astral.

These changes in the heavens, though slow, produc'd

Like change on sea, and land; sidereal blast,
Vapour and mist, and exhalation hot,
Corrupt and pestilent! Milton, P. L.

The musk gives

Sure hopes of racy wine, and in its youth,
Its tender noage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring, that defies
The vernal nippings and cold sidereal blasts.

Philips.

SIDERATED. adj. [from sideratus, Latin.]

Blasted; planet-struck.

Parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black; the radial moisture, or vital sulphur, suffering an extinction.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SIDERATION. n. s. [sideration, French;

sideratio, Lat.] A sudden mortification, or, as the common people call it, a blast; or a sudden deprivation of sense,
as in an apoplexy.

The contagious vapour of the very eggs produce a mortification or sideration in the parts of plants on which they are laid. Ray on the Creation.

SIDERAL.* adj. [sidereus, Lat.] Astral;
starry; relating to the stars.

This was a permanent symbol of the sidered splendours. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.
The Egyptians called their heroes by the names of their sideral and elementary deities.

Shuckford on the Creation, Pref. p. xxi.

SIDERITE.* n. s. [sideritis, Latin.] A loadstone, upon which he hangs in a cord a siderite of Herculean stone. Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

woman's seat on horseback.

Another with a cradel,
And with a syde-sadel. Skelton, Poems, p. 134.
The use of riding in coaches, and of side-saddles,
[is] since the time of Richard the II. here with us.

Hakewill on Prov. p. 279.

SIDESMAN. n. s. [side and man.] An assistant to the churchwarden.

A gift of such goods, made by them with the consent of the sidesmen or vestry, is void.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

SIDETAKING.* n. s. [side and take.] Engagement in a faction or party.

What furious sidetakings, what plots, what blood-sheds! Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 72.

SIDEWAYS.† adv. [from side and way, or SIDEWISE. } wise.] Laterally; on one side.

The fair blossom hangs the head
Sideways, as on a dying bed;
And those pearls of dew she wears,
Prove to be presaging tears.

Milton, El. M. Winch.

If the image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions, the same oblong image would, by a second refraction made sideways, be drawn out as much in breadth by the like dilatation of the rays, or other casual inequality of the refraction sideways.

Newton, Opt.

SIDING.* * n. s. [from side.] Engagement
in a faction.

As soon as discontents drove men into sidings, as ill humours fall to the disaffected party, which causes inflammations, so did all, who affected it, adhere to that side. King Charles.

To S'IDE.† v. n. [from side.]

1. To go with the body the narrowest way.

The chaffering with dissenters is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time, and that not without stooping and siding, and squeezing his body.

Swift.
I passed very gently and siding through the two principal streets.

2. To lie on the side.

A fellow nailed up maps in a gentleman's closet, some siding, and others upside down, the better to adjust them to the panels.

3. To saunter. North.

Grose.
SIEGE. n. s. [siege, Fr.]

1. The act of besetting a fortified place; a leaguer.

Our castle's strength

Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine eat them up.

Shaks. Macb.
It seemed, by the manner of their proceeding,
That the Turks purposed rather by long siege than by assault to take the town.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
The more I see pleasures about me, so much more I feel

Torment within me, as from the hateful siege

Of contraries.

2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.

Beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Give me so much of your time, in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of Ford's wife.

Shakespeare.
Love stood the siege, and would not yield his breast.

3. [Siege, Fr.] Seat; throne. Obsolete.

Drawing to him the eyes of all around,
From lofty siege began these words aloud to sound.

Spenser, P. Q.

4. Place; class; rank. Obsolete.

I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege.

Shaks. Othello.
Your sum of parts

Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard

Of the unworthiest siege.

5. [Siege, Fr.] Stool.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts, as the mouths of the meseraicks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion unto the siege.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To SIEGE. v. a. [sieger, French, from the noun.] To besiege. A word not now in use.

Him he had long oppress with tort,
And fast imprisoned in sieged fort.

Spenser, F. Q.

SEIVE.† n. s. [sipe, ryre, Sax.]

1. Hair or lawn strained upon a hoop, by which flour is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; a boulder; a searce.

Thy counsel

Falls now into my ears as profitless

As water in a seive.

Shakespeare.
In a seive I'll thither sail,

And like a rat without a tail,

I'll do — I'll do — I'll do.

Shakespeare.
An innocent found a seive, and presently fell to stopping the holes.

L'Estrange.
If life sunk through you, like a leaky seive,

Accuse yourself, you liv'd not while you might.

2. A basket.

Apple-wives

That wrangle for a seive.

Davenant, The Wits.
It is well known that seives and half-seives are baskets to be met with in every quarter of Covent-Garden market. — Dr. Farmer adds, that, in several counties of England, the baskets used for carrying out dirt, &c. are called seives.

Steevens, Notes on Shakespeare.

To SIFT. v. a. [sifan, Saxon; siften,
Dutch.]

1. To separate by a sieve.

In the sifting of such favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure meal, but must have a mixture of padar and bran.

2. To separate; to part.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show.

3. To examine; to try.

We have sifted your objections against those pre-eminences royal.

Hooker.
All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentence and syllable, is no more than that certain speeches seem to intimate, that all Christian churches ought to have their elderships.

Hooker.
I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Shakespeare.
As near as I could sift him on that argument.

Shakespeare.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, sift thee, and confess have found thee
Proof against all temptation as a rock

Of adamant.

Milton, P. R.
One would think, that every member who embraces with vehemence the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was secretly convinced of their preference to those he rejects.

Addison.
SIFTER. n. s. [from sift.] One who sifts.

Sig was used by the Saxons for victory:

Sigbert, famous for victory; Sigward, victorious preserver; Sigard, conquering temper: and almost in the same sense are Nicocles, Nicomyachus, Ni-cander, Victor, Victorinus, Vincentius, &c.

Gibson.

To SIGH.† v. n. [sican, sicetan, Saxon;
suchten, Dutch.] And thus the old

Eng. pret. was sight; as in Chaucer,
"privily he sighte," Man of Lawes Tale;

and in Spenser, "Full many a one for me deep groan'd and sight," F. Q. vi. viii.

20. Some affectedly or ignorantly pronounce the present word sigh as sithe.
To emit the breath audibly, as in grief.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath.

Shakespeare, Coriol.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-ey'd fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors.

Shaks. Merch. of Ven.
He sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign?

St. Mark, viii. 12.

Happier he,
Who seeks not pleasure through necessity,
Than such as once on slippery thrones were plac'd,
And, chancing, sigh to think themselves are chas'd.

Dryden.

The nymph too longs to be alone;
Leaves all the swains, and sighs for one.

Prior.

To SIGH. v. a. To lament; to mourn.

Not in use.

Ages to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sigh her fate.

Prior.

SIGH. n. s. [from the verb.] A violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.

Full often has my heart swollen with keeping my sighs imprisoned; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes turned back to drown my heart.

Sidney.
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes.

Shakespeare.

What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charg'd.

Shakespeare.

Laughing, if loud, ends in a deep sigh; and all pleasures have a sting in the tail, though they carry beauty on the face.

By. Taylor.
In Venus' temple, on the sides were seen
Issuing sighs, that smok'd along the wall.

Dryden.

SIGH.* n. s. [from sigh.] One who sighs.

I could wish myself a sigh to be so chid,
Or at least a sigher to be comforted.

Bacon, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

The passion of love is the most general concern among men; and I am glad to hear by my last advices from Oxford, that there are a set of sighers in that university, who have erected themselves into a society in honour of that tender passion!

Spectator, No. 30.

SIGHING.* n. s. [from sigh.] The act of emitting the breath audibly, as in grief.

For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing
of the needy will I arise.

Ps. xii. 5.

The poor bird was beaten back with the loud
sighings of an eastern wind.

By. Taylor, Sermon.

SIGHT. n. s. [geirde, Sax. sicht, gesicht,
Dutch.]

1. Perception by the eye; the sense of seeing.

If bees go forth right to a place, they must needs have sight.

Bacon.
O loss of sight, of thee I most complain!
Blind among enemies, O worse than chains,
Dungeon, or beggary, or decrepitate age!

Milton, S. A.
'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick sight escape.

Denham.
My eyes are somewhat dimmish grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight.

Swift.

2. Open view; a situation in which nothing obstructs the eye.

Undaunted Hotspur
Brings on his army, eager unto fight,
And plac'd the same before the king in sight.

Daniel.
Æneas cast his wondering eyes around,
And all the Tyrrhene army had in sight,
Stretch'd on the spacious plain from left to right.

Dryden.

I met Brutidius in a mortal fight;
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sight.

Dryden.

3. Act of seeing or beholding; view.

Nine things to sight required are;
The power to see, the light, the visible thing,
Being not too small, too thin, too nigh, too far,
Clear space and time the form distinct to bring.

Davies.
Mine eye pursu'd him still, but under shade
Lost sight of him.

Milton, P. L.
What form of death could him affright,
Who, unconcern'd, with steadfast sight,
Could view the surges mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep!

Dryden, Hor.
Having little knowledge of the circumstances of those St. Paul writ to, it is not strange that many things lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned in the letter, understood at first sight.

Locke.

4. Notice; knowledge.

It was writ as a private letter to a person of piety, upon an assurance that it should never come to any one's sight but her own.

Wake.

5. Eye; instrument of seeing.

From the depth of hell they lift their sight,
And at a distance see superiour light. Dryden.

6. Aperture pervious to the eye, or other point fixed to guide the eye: as, the sights of a quadrant.

Their armed staves in charge, their beavers
down,

Their eyes of fire, sparkling through sights of steel.
Shakspeare.

7. Spectacle; show; thing to be seen.

Thus are my eyes still captive to one sight;
Thus all my thoughts are slaves to one thought still.

Then seem'd they never saw a sight so fair
Of fowls so lovely, that they sure did deem Them heavenly born. Spenser.

Not an eye,
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more.

Moses said, I will turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt. Ex. iii. 3.

I took a felucca at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same sights a second time. Addison.

Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
Though gods assembled grace his towering height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here,
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear.

Before you pass the imaginary sights,
Of lords, and earls, and dukes, and garter'd
knights,

While the spread fan o'er shades your closing eyes,
Then give one flit, and all the vision flies. Pope.

SIGHTED, adj. [from sight.] Seeing in a particular manner. It is used only in composition, as quicksighted, short- sighted.

As they might, to avoid the weather, pull the joints of the coach up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open sighted as on horsback. Sidney.

The king was very quick sighted in discerning difficulties, and raising objections, and very slow in mastering them. Clarendon.

SIGHTFULNESS, n. s. [from sight and full.] Perspicuity; clearness of sight. Not in use.

But still, although we fail of perfect rightfui-
ness,

Seek we to tame these childish superfluities;
Let us not wink, though void of purest sightfulness.
Sidney.

SIGHTLESS, adj. [from sight.]

1. Wanting sight; blind.
Poor grooms are sightless night.

The latent tracts, the giddy heights explore,
Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar. Pope.

2. Not sightly; offensive to the eye; unpleasing to look at.

Full of unpleasant blot, and sightless stains,— Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks.
Shakspeare, K. John.

3. Invisible.

You murdering ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief! Shaks. Macbeth.

The sightless couriers of the air. Shaks. Macbeth.

Winds that sightless in the sounding air do fly.
Warner, Albion's England.

SIGHTLINESS, n. s. [from sightly.] Appearance pleasing or agreeable to the eye.

Glass-eyes may be used, though not for seeing,
for sightliness. Fuller, Holy State, (1648,) p. 290.

SIGHTLY, adj. [from sight.] Pleasing to the eye; striking to the view.

It lies as sightly on the back of him,
As great Alcides shews upon an ass.

Their having two eyes and two ears, so placed,
is more sightly and useful.

A great many brave sightly horses were brought out, and only one plain nag that made sport.

We have thirty members, the most sightly of all her majesty's subjects: we elected a president by his height. Addison.

SIGIL, n. s. [sigillum, Lat.] Seal; signature.

Sorceries to raise the infernal pow'rs,
And sigils fram'd in planetary hours.

SIGILLATIVE, n. s. [sigillativus, Fr. from sigillum, Lat.] Fit to seal; belonging to a seal; composed of wax. Cotgrave.

SIGMOIDAL, adj. [sigmoidal, Fr. from the Greek letter called sigma, and ειδος, figure, form.] Curved, like the Greek letter already named: a medical term.

It must necessarily thrust the blood through the open passage of the vena arteriosa, where the sig- moidal portals hindering its return, it must pass through the strainer of the lungs.

Smith on Old Age, (1666,) p. 233.

SIGN, n. s. [regn, Saxon; signe, Fr. sig- num, Lat.]

1. A token of any thing; that by which any thing is shown.

Signs must resemble the things they signify.
Hooker.

Signs for communication may be contrived from any variety of objects of one kind appertaining to either sense. Holder.

To express the passions which are seated in the heart by outward signs, is one great precept of the painters, and very difficult to perform.

When any one uses any term, he may have in his mind a determined idea which he makes it the sign of, and to which he should keep it steadily annexed. Locke.

2. A wonder; a miracle; a prodigy.

If they will not hearken to the voice of the first sign, they will not believe the latter sign. Ex. iv. 8.

Compell'd by signs and judgements dire.

3. A picture or token hung at a door, to give notice what is sold within.

I found my miss, struck hands, and pray'd him tell,

To hold acquaintance still, where he did dwell;
He barely nam'd the street, promis'd the wine;
But his kind wife gave me the very sign. Donne.

Underneath an alehouse' paltry sign.

True sorrow's like to wine,
That which is good does never need a sign.

Wit and fancy are not employed in any one article so much as that of contriving signs to hang over houses. Swift.

4. A monument; a memorial.

An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace. Common Prayer.

The fire devoured two hundred and fifty men,
and they became a sign. Num. xxvi. 10.

5. A constellation in the zodiac.

There stay until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning.

Now did the signa reign, and the constellation was come, under which Perkin should appear.

After every foe subdu'd, the sun
Thrice through the signs his annual race shall run.

6. Note or token given without words.
They made signs to his father. Luke.

7. Mark of distinction; cognizance.
The ensign of Messiah blas'd,
Aloft by angels borne, his sign in heaven. Milton.

8. Typical representation; symbol.
The holy symbols or signs are not barely signifi-cative; but what they represent is as certainly delivered to us as the symbols themselves. Brewerood.

9. A subscription of one's name: as, a sign manual. See the second sense of To Sign.

To SIGN, v. a. [signum, Saxon; signer,
Fr. signo, Latin.]

1. To mark.
We receive this child into the congregation of Christ's flock, and do sign him with the sign of the cross, in token that hereafter he shall not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, and manfully to fight under his banner against sin, the world, and the devil, and to continue Christ's faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end. Office of Baptism, Common Prayer.

2. To denote; to show.
You sign your place and calling in full seeming
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogance. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

3. To ratify by hand or seal. [To sign, as to sign a writing, is an expression drawn from the practice of our ancestors the Anglo-Saxons, who, in attesting their charters, prefixed the sign of the cross to their names.—Hence it comes to pass, that when a person that cannot write is to make his mark, he usually makes a cross. And I apprehend that such Saxons as could not write made their crosses, and the scribe wrote their names. Pegge, Anonym. iii. 42.]

Be pleas'd to sign these papers: they are all
Of great concern! Dryden, Cleomenes.

4. To betoken; to signify; to represent typically.

The sacraments and symbols are just such as they seem; but because they are made to be signs of a secret mystery, they receive the names of what themselves do sign. Bp. Taylor.

To SIGN, v. n. To be a sign or omen.

Musick! the air?—Under the earth.—
—It signs well, does't not?—No. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

SIGNAL, n. s. [signal, French; sennale, Spanish.] Notice given by a sign; a sign that gives notice.

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow.

Scarce the dawning day began to spring,
As, at a signal giv'n, the streets with clamours ring.

SIGNAL, adj. [signal, French.] Eminent;
memorable; remarkable.

He was esteemed more by the parliament, for the signal acts of cruelty committed upon the Irish.

The Thames frozen twice in one year, so as men to walk on it, is a very signal accident. Swift.

SIGNALITY, n. s. [from signal.] Quality of something remarkable or memorable.

Of the ways whereby they enquired and determined its *signal*ity, the first was natural, arising from physical causes.

It seems a *signal*ity in providence, in erecting your society in such a juncture of dangerous humours. Clanville.

To SIGNALIZE, v. a. [signaler, Fr.] To make eminent; to make remarkable.

Many, who have endeavoured to signatize themselves by works of this nature, plainly discover that they are not acquainted with arts and sciences.

Addison.

Some one eminent spirit, having signatized his valour and fortune in defence of his country, or by popular arts at home, becomes to have great influence on the people.

Swift.

SIGNALLY. adv. [from signal.] Eminently; remarkably; memorably.

Persons signally and eminently obliged, yet missing of the utmost of their greedy designs in swallowing both gifts and giver too, instead of thanks for received kindnesses, have betook themselves to barbarous threatenings.

South.

SIGNATION. n. s. [from signo, Lat.] Sign given; act of betokening.

A horseshoe Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signation, he raised unto a lunar representation.

Brown.

SIGNATURE. n. s. [signature, Fr. signatura, from signo, Lat.]

1. A sign or mark impressed upon any thing; a stamp; a mark.

The brain being well furnished with various traces, signatures, and images, will have a rich treasure always ready to be offered to the soul.

Watts.

That natural and indelible signature of God, which human souls, in their first origin, are supposed to be stamp with, we have no need of in disputes against atheism.

Bentley.

Vulgar parents cannot stamp their race With signatures of such majestic grace.

Pope, Odys.

2. A mark upon any matter, particularly upon plants, by which their nature or medicinal use is pointed out.

All bodies work by the communication of their nature, or by the impression and signatures of their motions; the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former, and the species audible of the latter.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some plants bear a very evident signature of their nature and use.

More against Atheism.

Seek out for plants, and signatures, To quack of universal cures.

Hudibras.

Herbs are described by marks and signatures, so far as to distinguish them from one another.

Baker on Learning.

3. Proof drawn from marks.

The most despicable pieces of decayed nature are curiously wrought with eminent signatures of divine wisdom.

Glanville.

Some rely on certain marks and signatures of their election, and others on their belonging to some particular church or sect.

Rogers.

4. [Among printers.] Some letter or figure to distinguish different sheets.

SIGNATURIST. n. s. [from signature.] One who holds the doctrine of signatures.

A word little used.

Signaturists seldom omit what the ancients delivered, drawing unto inference received distinctions.

Brown.

SIGNER. n. s. [from sign.] One that signs.

SIGNET. † n. s. [signet, Su. Goth. signette, Fr.] A seal commonly used for the seal-manual of a king.

I've been bold To them to use your signet and your name.

SIGNIFICANCE. } n. s. [from signify.]
SIGNIFICANCY. }

1. Power of signifying; meaning.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind by discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significancies.

Holder.

If he declares he intends it for the honour of another, he takes away by his words the significance of his action.

Stillin' fleet.

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind.

The clearness of conception and expression, the boldness maintained to majesty, the significancy and sound of words, not strained into bombast, must escape our transient view upon the theatre.

Dryden.

As far as this duty will admit of privacy, our Saviour hath enjoined it in terms of particular significancy and force.

Alterbury.

I have been admiring the wonderful significancy of that word persecution, and what various interpretations it hath acquired.

Swift.

3. Importance; moment; consequence.

How fatal would such a distinction have proved in former reigns, when many a circumstance of less significancy has been construed into an overt act of high treason?

Addison.

SIGNIFICANT. adj. [signifiant, Fr. significans, Lat.]

1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.

2. Betokening; standing as a sign of something.

It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant, but not efficient.

Ralegh.

3. Expressive or representative in an eminent degree; forcible to impress the intended meaning.

Whereas it may be objected, that to add to religious duties such rites and ceremonies as are significant, is to institute new sacraments.

Hooker.

Common life is full of this kind of significant expressions, by knocking, beckoning, frowning, and pointing; and dumb persons are sagacious in the use of them.

Holder on Speech.

The Romans joined both devices, to make the emblem the more significant; as, indeed, they could not too much extol the learning and military virtues of this emperor.

Addison.

4. Important; momentous. A low word.

SIGNIFICANT.* n. s.

1. That which expresses something beyond the external mark.

Since you are tongue-tied, and so loth to speak, In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

2. A token; that which stands as a sign of something.

An erect and forward stature, a large breast, heat and pliant joints, and the like, may be good significants of health, of strength, or agility; but are very foreign arguments of wit.

Walton on Education.

SIGNIFICANTLY. adv. [from significant.]

With force of expression.

Christianity is known in Scripture by no name so significantly as by the simplicity of the Gospel.

South.

SIGNIFICA'TION. n. s. [signification, Fr. significatio, Lat. from signify.]

1. The act of making known by signs.

A lie is properly a species of injustice, and a violation of the right of that person to whom the false speech is directed; for all speaking, or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another.

South.

2. Meaning expressed by a sign or word.

An adjective requireth another word to be joined with him, to shew his signification.

Accidence.

Brute animals make divers motions to have several significations, to call, warn, cherish, and threaten.

Holder.

SIGNIFICATIVE. adj. [significatif, French; from signify.]

1. Betokening by an external sign.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative, but what by divine institution they represent and testify unto our souls, is truly and certainly delivered unto us.

Brerewood.

2. Forcible; strongly expressive.

Neither in the degrees of kindred they were destitute of significative words; for whom we call grandfather, they called ealdfather; whom we call great-grandfather, they called thirdfather.

Camden, Rem.

SIGNIFICATIVELY.* adv. [from significative.] So as to betoken by an external sign.

This sentence must either be taken tropically, that bread may be the body of Christ significatively, or else it is plainly absurd and impossible.

Bp. Taylor.

TO SIGNIFY. v. a. [signifier, Fr. significo, Lat.]

1. To declare by some token or sign; sometimes simply to declare.

Stephano, signify

Within the house your mistress is at hand. Shaks.

The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes, Nor knew what signify'd the boding sign,

But found the pow'r's displeas'd d.

Dryden.

Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark and obscure names; as the night, tartarus, and oceanus.

Burnet, Theory.

2. To mean; to express.

Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player, That struts and frets his hour upon the stage, And then is heard no more! It is a tale Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing!

Shaks. Macbeth.

By Scripture, antiquity, and all ecclesiastical writers, it is constantly appropriated to Saturday, the day of the Jews' Sabbath, and but of late years used to signify the Lord's day.

Nelson.

3. To import; to weigh. This is seldom used but interrogatively, what signifies? or with much, little, or nothing.

Though he that sins frequently, and repents frequently, gives reason to believe his repentances before God signify nothing; yet that is nothing to us.

Bp. Taylor.

What signifies the splendour of courts, considering the slavish attendances that go along with it?

L'Estrange.

He hath one way more, which, although it signify little to men of sober reason, yet unhappily hits the suspicious humour of men, that governors have a design to impose.

Tillotson.

If the first of these fail, the power of Adam, were it never so great, will signify nothing to the present societies in the world.

Locke.

What signifies the people's consent in making and repealing laws, if the person who administers hath no tie?

Swift.

4. To make known; to declare.

I'll to the king, and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

Shaks. Rich. III.

He sent and signified it by his angel unto John.

The government should signify to the protestants of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied.

Swift.

To S'IGNIFY. v. n. To express meaning with force.

If the words be but comely and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin.
B. Jonson.

S'IGNIOR.* n. s. [signore, Ital.] A title of respect, among the Italians: with the Turks the grand signior is the emperor.

Who is he comes here? — This is signior Antonio.
Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,
My very noble and approv'd good masters.

Shakspeare, Othello.

To S'IGNIORIZE.* v. a. [from signior.] To exercise dominion over; to subject.

[If] love held me not so enthralled and subject to his laws as he doth, and to the eyes of the ungrateful fair whose name I secretly mutter, then should the eyes of this beautiful damsel presently signiorize my liberty.

Shelton, Tr. of Don Quixote, P. 3. ch. 2.

To S'IGNIORIZE.* v. n. To have dominion.

At the time that He was to come, Judah must lose the scepter; not then to rule or signiorize in Judah.

Hewitt, Sermon. (1658), p. 171.

S'IGNIORY. n. s. [signoria, Ital.]

1. Lordship; dominion.

My brave progenitors, by valour, zeal,

Gain'd those high honours, princely signories,

And proud prerogatives. West.

2. It is used by Shakspeare for seniority.

If ancient sorrow be most reverent,

Give mine the benefit of signiory,

And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

S'IGNPOST. n. s. [sign and post.] That upon which a sign hangs.

He should share with them in the preserving

A shed or signpost. B. Jonson, Catiline.

This noble invention of our author's hath been copied by so many signpost dawblers, that now 'tis grown fulsome, rather by their want of skill than by the commonness. Dryden.

S'IK.* adj. Such. Retained in the north

S'IKE. } of England: as, sik a thing;

siklike. See S'UCH.

Sike mister bene all misgone,

They heafen hills of wrath;

They keepen all the path.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

S'IKE.* n. s. [ic, rich, Sax. a water-furrow;

sike, Icel. a streamlet.] A small stream or rill; one which is usually dry in summer.

Used in the north of England.

S'IKER.† adj. and adv. See SICKER.

The old word for sure, or surely. Dr. Johnson refers to Spenser. Mr. Mason affects to doubt that, though Spenser frequently uses the word as an adverb,

he ever uses it as an adjective; and imagines that Dr. Johnson was misled by the explanatory word sure in some glossaries to Spenser, where it was certainly intended for the adverb. The impropriety of this assertion will be obvious by referring to sicker, the same word; which is Spenser's adjective, which in older writers is siker, and is common enough, though Mr. Mason knew not an instance of it as an adjective.

[They] holden the siker way.

Chaucer, Merch. Tale.

A lord is syker that hath a true advocate.

Lib. Fest. fol. 40.

S'IKERNESS.† n. s. [from siker.] Sureness; safety. See SICKERNESS.

They finden, when they wenen sikernesne.

Chaucer, Merch. Tale.

To S'ILE.* v. a. [sila, Su. Goth.] To strain, as fresh milk from the cow: used in the north of England: whence a sile-dish, a strainer. See Ray and Grose. Siled milk is also sometimes another term for skimmed milk. To sile is likewise used for subside, or sink down, from the primary meaning.

S'ILENCE. n. s. [silence, Fr. silentium, Latin.]

1. The state of holding peace; forbearance of speech.

Unto me men gave ear, and waited and kept silence at my counsel. Job, xxix. 21.

I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

1 Tim. ii. 12.

First to himself he inward silence broke.

Milton, P. L.

Speech submissively withdraws

From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause,

Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Pope.

Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,

And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace.

Pope.

2. Habitual taciturnity; not loquacity.

I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence,

And discourse grow commendable in none but parrots. Shakspeare.

3. Secrecy.

4. Stillness; not noise.

Hail happy groves, calm and secure retreat

Of sacred silence, rest's eternal seat. Roscommon.

5. Not mention; oblivion; obscurity.

Nameless in dark oblivion let them dwell;

For strength from truth divided, and from just,

Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise

And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,

Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame;

Therefore eternal silence be their doom.

Milton, P. L.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd,

And what most merits fame in silence hid.

Milton, P. L.

S'ILENCE. interj. An authoritative restraint of speech.

Sir, have pity; I'll be his surety. —

— Silence: one word more

Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. Shaks.

To S'ILENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oblige to hold peace; to forbid to speak.

We must suggest the people, that to 's pow'r

He would have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders, and Disproportioned their freedoms. Shakspeare.

The ambassador is silenc'd. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Silence that dreadful bell; it frights the isle
From her propriety. Shakspeare, Othello.

This passed as an oracle, and silenced those that moved the question. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced, who, being exposed unto wolves, gave loud expressions of their faith, and were heard as high as heaven. Brown.

This would silence all further opposition.

Clarendon.

Since in dark sorrow I my days did spend,

I could not silence my complaints. Denham.

Had they duly considered the extent of infinite knowledge and power, these would have silenced their scruples, and they had adored the amazing mystery. Rogers.

If it please him altogether to silence me, so that I shall not only speak with difficulty, but wholly be disabled to open my mouth, to any articulate utterance; yet I hope he will give me grace, even in my thoughts, to praise him. Wake.

2. To still.

These dying lovers, and their floating sons,

Suspend the fight and silence all our guns. Waller.

The thunder spoke, nor durst the queen reply;

A reverend horror silenc'd all the sky. Pope, Iliad.

S'ILENT.† adj. [silens, Lat.]

1. Not speaking; mute.

O my God, I cry in the day-time, and in the night season I am not silent. Ps. xxii. 2.

Silent, and in face

Confounded, long they sat as stricken mute.

Milton, P. L.

2. Not talkative; not loquacious.

Ulysses, adds he, was the most eloquent and most silent of men; he knew that a word spoken never wrought so much good as a word concealed.

Broome.

3. Still; having no noise.

Like starry light,

Which, sparkling on the silent waves, does seem more bright. Spenser, F. Q.

Now is the pleasant time,

The cool, the silent, save where silence yields

To the night-warbling bird. Milton, P. L.

4. Wanting efficacy. I think an Hebraism.

Second and instrumental causes, together with nature itself, without that operative faculty which

God gave them, would become silent, virtuous, and dead. Raleigh, Hist.

The sun to me is dark,

And silent as the moon,

When she deserts the night,

Hide in her vacant interlunar cave. Milton, S. A.

5. Not mentioning.

This new created world, whereof in hell

Fame is not silent. Milton, P. L.

6. Not making noise or rumour.

The pious youth, more studious how to save

His aged sire, now sinking to the grave,

Prefer'd the power of plants, and silent praise

Of healing arts, before Phoebean bays.

Dryden, Æn. 12.

S'ILENTIARY.* n. s. [silentiarius, low Lat.]

1. One who is appointed to take care that silence and proper order be kept in court.

2. One who is sworn not to divulge secrets of state.

When with one three nations join to fight,

They silently confess that one more brave. Dryden.

For me they beg, each silently

Demands thy grace, and seems to watch thy eye.

Dryden.

2. Without noise.

You to a certain victory are led;

Your men all arm'd stand silently within. Dryden.

3. Without mention.

The difficulties remain still, till he can show who is meant by right heir, in all those cases where the present possessor hath no son: this he silently passes over. Locke.

SILENTNESS.* n. s. [from silent.] State or quality of being silent. Ash.

SILEX.* n. s. [Latin.] Flint: the mineralogical term usually given to this kind of earth.

SILICIOUS.† adj. [from cilicium. It should be therefore written cilicious.]

1. Made of hair.

The silicious and hairy vests of the strictest orders of friars, derive their institution from St. John and Elias, Brown.

2. [Siliceus or silicius, Lat. from siler, a flint. Of this sense Dr. Johnson takes no notice.] Flinty; full of stones.

Silicious earth is often found in a stony form, such as flint or quartz; and still more frequently in that of a very fine sand, such as that whereof glass is made. Kirwan on Manures, p. 6.

SILKENNESS. }

1. Softness; effeminacy; pusillanimity.

Sir, your silkenness Clearly mistakes Mecænas and his house, To think there breathes a spirit beneath his roof Subject unto these poor affections Of undermining envy and detraction, Moods only proper to base groveling minds. B. Jonson, Poetast

2. Smoothness.

The claret had no silkenness. Ld. Chesterfield.

SILKMAN.* n. s. [silk and man.] A dealer in silk.

Master Smooth's, the silkman. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

SILKMER'RCER.† n. s. [silk and merc.] A dealer in silk.

Being born without prospect of hereditary riches he was sent to London in his youth, and placed apprentice to a silk-merc. Johnson, Life of Gay.

SILKWEA'VER. n. s. [silk and weaver.] One whose trade is to weave silken manufactures.

True English hate your monsieurs paltry arts; For you are all silk-weavers in your hearts. Dryden.

The Chinese are ingenious silk-weavers. Watts.

SILKWORM.* n. s. [silk and worm.] The worm that spins silk.

Grasshoppers eat up the green of whole countries, and silk-worms devour leaves swiftly. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Broad were the banners, and of snowy hue, A purer web the silk-worm never drew. Dryden.

SILKY.† adj. [from silk.]

1. Made of silk.

In silky folds each nervous limb disguise. Shenstone, El. 18.

2. Soft; tender. Dr. Johnson has noticed silky as tender, only in the sense of pliant, by a citation from Shakspeare's Lear, where the true word is "silky ducking observants," not silky.

The several graces and elegances of musick, the soft and silky touches, the nimble transitions and delicate courses. Smith on Old Age, (1666,) p. 144.

Silky soft Favonius breathe still softer. Young, Night Th. 2.

SILL.† n. s. [pile, Sax. syll, Icel. limen, sula, columna, à M. Goth. syulan, fundare. Serenius. See also GROUNDSEL.]

1. The timber or stone at the foot of the door.

He can scarce lift his leg over a sill. Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 450.

The farmer's goose, Grown fat with corn and sitting still, Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill: And hardly waddles forth. Swift.

2. The bottom piece in a window frame.

3. Shafts of a waggon; thills. North. Grose.

SILLABUB.† n. s. [This word has exercised the etymologists. Minshew thinks it corrupted from swillingbubbles. Junius omits it. Henshaw, whom Skinner follows, deduces it from the Dutch sulle, a pipe, and buyck, a paunch; because sillabubs are commonly drunk through a spout, out of a jug with a large belly. It seems more probably derived from esil, in old English, vinegar, esil a bouc, vinegar for the mouth, vinegar made pleasant.] Curds made by milking upon vinegar. This is Dr. Johnson's definition, in conformity to his derivation of the word; which, after all, is very obscure. A sillabub usually means a liquor made of milk and wine or cider, and sugar.

Joan takes her neat rubb'd pail, and now She trips to milk the sand-red cow; Where, for some sturdy foot-ball swain, Joan strokes a sillabub or twain. Wotton.

A feast, By some rich farmer's wife and sister dress'd, Might be resembled to a sick man's dream, Where all ideas huddling run so fast, That sillabubs come first, and soups the last. King.

SILLILY. adv. [from silly.] In a silly manner; simply; foolishly.

I wonder much, what thou and I Did till we lov'd? were we not wean'd till then, But suck'd on childish pleasures sillily? Or slumber'd we in the seven sleepers' den? Donne.

We are caught as sillily as the bird in the net. L'Estrange.

Do, do, look sillily, good colonel; 'tis a decent melancholy after an absolute defeat. Dryden.

SILLINESS.† n. s. [from silly.] Simplicity; weakness; harmless folly.

The silliness of the person does not derogate from the dignity of his character. L'Estrange.

'Tis very easy to sift and toss this fine thought, which would afford good diversion; for, besides its own silliness, it contradicts all the rest, and spoils the whole grimace of the book. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 32.

SILLY.† adj. [Dr. Johnson merely cites the German selig from Skinner. Our word seely or sely, (Sax. seelig), at first meaning fortunate also, was used for silly, simple, inoffensive. See SEELY. So salugur, innoxious, Su. Goth. Verelius.]

1. Harmless; innocent; inoffensive; plain; artless.

A silly man, in simple weeds forworne. Spenser, F. Q.

There was a fourth man in a silly habit. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Weak; helpless.

After long storms, In dread of death and dangerous dismay, With which my silly bark was tossed sore, I do at length descry the happy shore. Spenser.

3. Foolish; witless.

Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep,
Was that which did their silly thoughts so busy keep.

The meanest subjects censure the actions of the greatest prince; the silliest servants, of the wisest master.

I have no discontent at living here; besides what arises from a silly spirit of liberty, which I resolve to throw off.

Such parts of writings as are stupid or silly, false or mistaken, should become subjects of occasional criticism.

He is the companion of the silliest people in their most silly pleasure, he is ready for every impatient entertainment and diversion.

4. Weak; disordered; not in health. "You look main silly to day, i. e. you look ill in health." Used in Yorkshire. Pegge. And in Scotland.

SÍLLYHOW.† n. s. [Perhaps from reliz, happy, and heort, the head. Dr. Johnson. — Rightly from reliz, happy; not so from heort, the head; for how means a coif or hood; huyve, Teut. See Dr. Jamieson in V. How. And Brand, Pop. Antiq. in "Child's Caul, otherwise the Silly How, i. e. the holy or fortunate cap or hood."] The membrane that covers the head of the fœtus.

Great conceits are raised of the membranous covering called the sillyhow, sometimes found about the heads of children upon their birth.

SILT.† n. s. [Icel. sull, commixtum quæ ex variis fecibus; sulla, miscere colluvium; Suth. sylla, colluvies. Serenius.] Mud; slime.

Several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor, near Thorny, in all probability covered by inundation, and the silt and moorish earth exaggerated upon them.

In long process of time, the silt and sands shall so choak and shallow the sea in and about it.

SÍLVAN. adj. [from silva, Lat.] Woody; full of woods.

Betwixt two rows of rocks, a silvan scene
Appears above, and groves for ever green.

SÍLVER.† n. s. [silubr, Goth. jeolpep, Sax. silber, Germ. silver, Dutch. Junius and others derive the word from the Greek σῖλβος, (silbo), to shine, omitting the letter t: Serenius, (noticing the great antiquity of this word, and disregarding the proposed Grecian origin), thinks it allied to the Icel. syell, ice, sylla, to be white like ice: nor is the derivation of Wachter, (who allows the obscurity of the etymon, yet prefers seeking it in the Greek language), dissimilar, viz. ἀλφός, (alphos) white; prefixing the letter s.]

1. Silver is a white and hard metal, next in weight to platina and gold.

2. Any thing of soft splendour.
Pallas, piteous of her plaintive cries,
In slumber clos'd her silver streaming eyes. Pope.

3. Money made of silver.

SÍLVER.† adj.

1. Made of silver.

Put my silver cup into the sack's mouth.
Gen. xlv. 2.
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen for ever chaste.

Milton, Comus.

The silver-shafted goddess of the place.

Pope, Odys.

2. White like silver.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Than Clarion.

Spenser.

Old Salisbury, shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son. Shaks.
The great in honour are not always wise,
Nor judgement under silver tresses lies. Sandys.
Others on silver lakes and rivers bath'd
Their downy breasts. Milton, P. L.

3. Having a pale lustre.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light.

Shakspeare.

4. Soft of voice; soft in sound. This phrase is Italian, voce argentina.

From all their groves, which with the heavenly noises
Of their sweet instruments were wont to sound,
And the hollow hills, from which their silver voices
Were wont redoubled echoes to rebound,
Did now rebound with nought but rueful cries,
And yelling shrieks thrown up into the skies.

Spenser.

It is my love that calls upon my name.
How silver sweet sound lovers' tongues by night!
Like softest musick to attending ears. Shakspeare.
The shilling reared itself upon its edge, and turning the face towards me, opened its mouth; and in a soft silver sound gave me the following account of his life and adventures. Tatler, No. 249.

5. Soft; gentle; quiet.

The whyles his lord in silver slomber lay,
Like as the evening star adorn'd with dewy ray.

Spenser, F. Q.

Me no such cares nor combrous thoughts offend,
Ne once my mind's unmoved quiet grieve;
But all the night in silver sleepe I spend.

Spenser, F. Q.

To SÍLVER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover superficially with silver.

There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Shakspeare.
The splendour of silver is more pleasing to some eyes, than that of gold; as in cloth of silver, and silver'd rapiers. Bacon.
Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding. Bacon.

A gilder shewed me a ring silver'd over with mercurial fumes, which he was then to restore to its native yellow. Boyle.

2. To adorn with mild lustre.

Here retir'd the sinking billows sleep,
And smiling calmness silver'd o'er the deep. Pope.
SÍLVER FIR.* A species of the fir-tree.

The fir Theophrastus distinguisheth into male and female: the latter is softer timber than the male; it is also a taller and fairer tree; and this is probably the silver fir. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 27.

SÍLVERBEATER. n. s. [silver and beat.] One that foliates silver.

Silverbeaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyle.

SÍLVERLING. n. s. A silver coin.

A thousand vines, at a thousand silverlings, shall be for briars and thorns. Isaiah, vii. 23.

SÍLVERLY. adv. [from silver.] With the appearance of silver.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. Shaks.

SÍLVERSMITH. n. s. [silver and smith.] One that works in silver.

Demetrius, a silversmith, made shrines for Diana.

Acts, xix.

SÍLVERTHISTLE. n. s. [acanthium vulgare, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

SÍLVERWEED. n. s. [argentina, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

SÍLVERTREE. n. s. [conocarpodendron, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

SÍLVERY. adj. [from silver.] Besprinkled with silver.

A gritty stone, with small spangles of a white silvery talc in it. Woodward on Fossils.
Of all the enamell'd race whose silvery wing
Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring,
Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air.

Pope, Dunciad.

SÍMAGRE.* n. s. [simagrée, Fr. "a wry mouth, or filthy face, the countenance of a jester or clown in a play, made to provoke laughter; also, an hypocritical look." Cotgrave.] Grimace: used by Dryden, but not adopted.

The Cyclops—felt the force of love,—
Assum'd the softness of a lover's air;
Now with a crooked sithe his beard he sleeks,
And mows the stubborn stubble of his cheeks;
Now in the crystal stream he looks, to try
His simagres, and rolls his glaring eye.

Dryden, Ovid.

SÍMA'R.† n. s. [samare, Dutch; zamarra, Span. chamarre, and samarre, old Fr. See CHIMERE.] A robe.

The ladies dress'd in rich simars were seen,
Of Florence satin, flower'd with white and green.

Dryden.

Vests, perukes, tunicks, cinarrs.

Bp. Parker, Repr. of Rehens. Transp. p. 499.

The habits, wherewith these miserable persons were vested, were no less capable of striking horror and pity into the beholders; as well the living persons, as statues, bore a samarra of grey stuff, all painted over with devils, flames, &c.

Wharton, Tr. of Hist. of the Inq. of Goa, ch. xxvi.

SÍMILAR. } adj. [similaire, Fr. from sí- SÍMILARY.* } milis, Lat.]

1. Homogeneous; having one part like another; uniform.

Minerals appear to the eye to be perfectly similar, as metals; or at least to consist but of two or three distinct ingredients, as cinnamon. Boyle.

2. Resembling; having resemblance.

The laws of England, relative to those matters, were the original and exemplar from whence those similar or parallel laws of Scotland were derived.

Hale, Com. Law of England.

SÍMILARITY. n. s. [from similar.] Likeness; uniformity.

The blood and chyle are mixed, and by attrition attenuated; by which the mixture acquires a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts.

Arbuthnot.

SÍMILARLY.* adv. [from similar.] With resemblance; without difference; in the same manner.

The two pictures of the same object are formed upon points of the retina which are not similarly situate.

Reid, Inquiry.

This horny substance is gradually lost at one end in a very thin cuticle; and, at the other end, is also similarly lost in the membranous bag or true stomach.

Hunter.

SÍMILE. n. s. [simile, Lat.] A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggrandized.

Their rhimes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Crest.

Lucentio slipp'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master. —
— A good swift simile, but something curish.

Shakspeare.

In argument,

Similes are like songs in love;
They much describe, they nothing prove. Prior.
Poets, to give a loose to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently. Garth.

SIMILITUDE. n. s. [similitudo, Fr. similitudo, Lat.]

1. Likeness; resemblance.

Similitudo of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly freed from the motion of gravity; for then lead would draw lead.

Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself beautified with the tide of his own image and similitudo. Raleigh.

Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitudo, and let them rule
Over the fish and fowl. Milton, P. L.

Similitudo to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped. Stillingfleet.

If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of threescore, hardly the least trace or similitudo of one face can be found in the other.

South.

Fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitudo of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

2. Comparison; simile.

Plutarch, in the first of his tractates, by sundry similitudes, shews us the force of education.

Wotton.

Tasso, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryden.

SIMILITUDINARY.* adj. [from similitudo.]

Denoting resemblance or comparison.

Ut is similitudinary. Coke upon Littleton.

Our Saviour chose this similitudinary way to express our union with himself.

Dr. Potter, Christophalg. (1680.) p. 44.

SIMITAR. n. s. [See CIMETER.] A crooked or falcated sword with a convex edge.

To SIMMER. v. n. [A word made probably from the sound, but written, by Skinner, simber.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.

Place a vessel in warm sand, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simmer or boil a little.

Boyle.

Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simber in one sluggish tenour, but sometimes boil up higher, and seeth over; the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion. More against Atheism.

SIMNEL. † n. s. [simenel, ancient French;
simnellus, low Lat.] A kind of sweet bread or cake; in our old lexicography, a cracknell.

Sodden bread, which is called simnels or crack-nells, be verie unwholsome.

Bullein, Gov. of Health, (1595.)

SIMONYACAL. † adj. [from simoniack.]
Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.

St. Ambrose found fault with simoniackal compositions in his days.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634.) p. 215.

Add to your criminals the simoniackal ladies, who reduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Spectator.

SIMONIACK. † n. s. [simoniaque, Fr. simonia-cius, Lat.] One who buys or sells preferment in the church.

So many simoniacks and intruders have ruled, as about fifty of your popes together.

Bp. Bedell, Lett. p. 482.

If the bishop alleges that the person presented is a simoniack, or unlearned, they are to proceed to trial. Ayliffe.

SIMONIACALLY.* adv. [from simoniackal.]
With the guilt of simony.

Benefices — disposed of, if not simoniackally, yet at least unworthily. Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times.

SIMONY. n. s. [simonie, Fr. simonia, Lat.]
The crime of buying or selling church
preferment.

One that by suggestion

Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I wish the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable.

Walton, Life of Bp. Sanderson.

No simony nor sinecure is known;
There works the bee, no honey for the drone.

Garth.

To SIMPER. † v. n. [from ŷimbelan, Saxon, to keep holiday, Skinner. He derives simmer from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gently boiling. Dr.
Johnson. — This is indeed a strange derivation. Serenius rationally deduces it from the old Suth. semner, mod.
semper, "modestiam oris torsione affectans." See also Widegren, Su. Lex.
"Simper, demure, affectedly modest."
To smile; generally to smile foolishly.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness.

Sidney.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Stars above simper and shine,
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine.

Herbert.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
Or drest in smiles of sweet Cecilia shine,
With simpering angels, palms, and harps divine.

Pope.

SIMPER. n. s. [from the verb.] Smile;

generally a foolish smile.

The wit at his elbow stared him in the face, with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh.

Addison.

Great Tibbald nods: the proud Parnassian sneer,
The conscious simper, and the jealous leer,

Mix on his look. Pope, Dunciad.

SIMPERER.* n. s. [from simper.] One who simpers.

A simperer, that a court affords.

Neville, Imit. of Juv. p. 11.

SIMPERINGLY.* adv. [from simper.] With a foolish smile.

Why looks next Curus all so simperingly?
Marston, Scourge of Vill. iii. 9.

SIMPLE. adj. [simplex, Latin; simple,
Fr.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undesigning; sincere; harmless.

Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simple sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them.

Hooker.

They meet upon the way
A simple husbandman in garments gray.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

O Ethelinda,

My heart was made to fit and pair with thine, Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tend-ness.

Rowe.

In simple manners all the secret lies;
Be kind and virtuous, you'll be blest and wise.

Young.

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single;

only one; plain; not complicated.
To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting.

Bacon.

Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish.

Watts.

Among substances some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their natures: so every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral; though the chymist perhaps may find all his several elements in each of them.

Watts, Logick.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy.

Thomson, Summer.

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.

The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going.

Prov. xv.

Dick, simple odes too many show ye
My servile complaisance to Chloe.

Prior.

SIMPLE. n. s. [simple, Fr.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.

Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill;
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill.

Drayton, Cynthia.

Our foster nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He would ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.

Milton, Comus.

What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies.

Temple.

Around its entiaes nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing, sheds it on the silent plains.

Dryden.

Med'cine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their pow'r's I know.

Dryden.

To SIMPLE. v. n. To gather simples.

As once the foaming boar he chas'd,
Lascivious Circe well the youth survey'd,
As simples on the flowery hills he stray'd.

SIMPLE-MINDED.* adj. Having a simple, unskilled, and artless mind.

[They.] bending off their sanctimonious eyes,
Take homage of the simple-minded throng.

Alexander, Pleas. of Imag. B. 3.

The weak and simple-minded part of mankind (which is by far the most numerous) could never be secure of their possessions.

Blackstone.

SIMPLENESS. n. s. [from simple.] The quality of being simple.

I will hear that play :

For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it. Shakespeare.

Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones ; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simpleness of the elements. Digby.

SIMPLER.† n. s. [from simple.] A sim-plist ; an herbarist.

An English botanist will not have such satisfaction in shewing it to a simpler. Barrington, Ess.

SIMPLESS. n. s. [simplesse, Fr.] Simplicity ; silliness : folly. Obsolete.

Their weeds been not so lightly wear,
Such simplesse mought them shend,
They been yclad in purple and pall,
They reign and rulen over all. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

SIMPLETON. n. s. [from simple.] A silly mortal ; a trifler ; a foolish fellow. A low word.

A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox ; the simpleton went hunting up and down.

L'Estrange.

Those letters may prove a discredit, as lasting as mercenary scribblers, or curious simpletons, can make it. Pope.

SIMPLICIAN.* n. s. [Lat. simplicis, simplicis.]

An undesigning, unskilled person : opposed to politician, one of deep contrivance.

Sometimes the veriest simplicians are most lucky,
the wisest politicians least, especially where orders are unobserved.

Archæacon Arway, Tab. of Mod. (1661), p. 44.

SIMPLICITY. n. s. [simplicitas, Latin ; sim-plicité, Fr.]

1. Plainness ; artlessness ; not subtilty ; not cunning ; not deceit.

The sweet-minded Philoclea was in their degree of well-doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unsupported simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, than willingly take unto themselves the following of it. Sidney.

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancient times. Hooker.

In low simplicity,

He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance. Shakespeare.

Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity, neither misliked nor much regarded, was created duke. Hayward.

Suspicion sleeps

At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Resigns her charge. Milton, P. L.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild ;
In wit a man, simplicity a child. Pope.

The native elegance and simplicity of her manners were accompanied with real benevolence of heart. Female Quixote.

2. Plainness ; not subtilty ; not abstruse-
ness.

Those enter into farther speculations herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

3. Plainness ; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place where he came, and yet retaining part of its simplicity. Dryden.

4. Singleness ; not composition ; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a papaverous unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture. Brown, Vulg. Err.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials. Burnet.

5. Weakness ; silliness.

Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and, to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot. Hooker.

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and fools hate knowledge? Prov. i. 22.

SIMPLIFICATION.* n. s. [from simplify.]

Act of reducing to simplicity, or uncompounded state.

This simplification of the principles of languages renders them less agreeable to the ear.

A. Smith on the Format. of Languages.

To SIMPLIFY. v. a. [simplifier, Fr. simplex and facio, Lat.] To render plain ;
to bring back to simplicity.

Philosophers have generally advised men to shun needless occupations, as the certain impediments of a good and happy life : they bid us endeavour to simplify ourselves, or to get into a condition requiring of us the least that can be to do.

Barrow, vol. ii. S. 34.

It is necessary that the musick be such as will not perplex or bewilder the general congregation ;
but so simplified, that the supplications and thanksgivings, then expressed vocally and in musical strains, may both be distinctly heard, and clearly understood. Mason on Church Mus. p. 22.

SIMPLIST. n. s. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.

A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken
by some good simplists for anemum.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

SIMPLY. adv. [from simple.]

1. Without art ; without subtilty ; plainly ; artlessly.

Accomplishing great things by things deem'd weak ;

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise,
By simply weak. Milton, P. L.

2. Of itself ; without addition.

This question about the changing of laws, con-cerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other. Hooker.

3. Merely ; solely.

Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss ; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth.

Hooker.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall ; simply the thing I am

Shall make me live. Shakespeare.

To say, or to do aught with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind.

Milton.

4. Foolishly ; sillily.

SIMULACHRE.* n. s. [simulachrum, Lat.]

An image. Not in use. Bullockar.

Phidias made of ivory the simulachre or image of Jupiter. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 22. b.

SIMULAR. n. s. [from simulo, Latin.] One that counterfeits.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,

Thou perjur'd, and thou simular of virtue,

That art incestuous. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

SIMULATE.* part. adj. [simulatus, Lat.]

Feigned ; pretended.

They had vowed a simulate chastity.

Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. II. (1550), L. 2. b.

To SIMULATE. v. a. [simulo, Lat.] To feign ; to counterfeit.

The first smooth Caesar's arts caress'd

Merit and virtue, simulating me.

Thomson, Liberty, P. iii.

I have known many young fellows, who, at the first setting out into the world, have simulated
a passion which they did not feel. Ld. Chesterfield.

SIMULATION. n. s. [simulation, French ; simulatio, from simulo, Lat.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fearfulness ; or of a mind that hath some main faults ; which because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon.

For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate. Walton.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lie ; and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy. South.

SIMULTANEOUS.† adj. [simultaneus, Latin.] Acting together ; existing at the same time.

All that we have need of, in the performing of these, is only God's concurrence, whether previous or simultaneous. Hammond, Works, iv. 570.

Let not the distinct touches be so simultaneous, but that it may appear where the word begins, and where it ends.

Dalgarno, Denf and Dumb Man's Tutor, p. 80.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crouded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange? Glanville.

SIMULTANEOUSLY.* adv. [from simultaneously.] At the same time ; together ; in conjunction.

He introduces the deities of both acting simultaneously. Shenstone.

SIMULTY.* n. s. [simultas, Lat. secret hatred.] Private quarrel : a word used by Ben Jonson, but not adopted, and hardly worthy of notice, if Mr. Mason in his Supplement to Dr. Johnson's Dictionary had not given it with a definition nearly the reverse of what it means,
viz. connection.

In things unknown to a man, not to give his opinion ; — nor seek to get his patron's favour, by imbarking himself in the factions of the family ; to enquire after domestic simulties, their sports, or affections. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

SIN. n. s. [ryn, Sax.]

1. An act against the laws of God ; a violation of the laws of religion.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin,

But greater sin to keep a sinful oath. Shakespeare.

How hast thou the heart,

Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,

A sin absolver, and my friend profest,

To mangle me with that word banishment?

Shakespeare.

But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,

Pinch them. Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man. Tyb. iii. 14.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,

And all their ministers attend on him. Shaksp.

Dishonest shame

Of nature's works : honour dishonourable !

Sin-bred ! how have ye troubled all mankind !

Milton, P. L.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,

With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould.

Milton, Comus.

Is there no means but that a sin-sick land

Should be let blood with such a boisterous hand?

Daniel.

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world: sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless robe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe. Brooke.

3. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

TO SIN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To neglect the laws of religion; to violate the laws of religion.

Stand in awe, and sin not. Psalms, iv. 4.
Many also have perish'd, err'd, and sinned for women. Esd.

He shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. 1 John, v. 16.

2. To offend against right.

I am a man,
More sinn'd against than sinning. Shakespeare.
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' eternal cause.

Pope, Ess. on Man.
SIN. adv.* [sen, sedan, Swedish.] Since. Used in the north of England, as a preposition also, and likewise in the form of sen.

But whenas Calidore was comen in
And gan aloud for Pastorell to call,
Knowing his voice, although not heard long sin,
She sudden was revived therewithall.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 44.
SINCE.† conj. [formed by contraction from sithence, or sith thence, from siðe, Saxon.]

1. Because that.

Since the clearest discoveries we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence. Locke.

Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love, nor sense of pain,
Nor force of reason can persuade,
Then let example be obey'd. Granville.

2. From the time that.

Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day?

He is the most improved mind since you saw him that ever was. Pope.

SINCE.† adv. Ago; before this.

About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house. Sidney.
Spies held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel

Three or four miles about, else had I, sir,
Half an hour since, brought my report.

A law was made no longer since than the twenty-eighth of Henry the eighth.

How many ages since has Virgil writ.

SINCE. preposition. After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.

He since the morning hour set out from heaven.

If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant since the ancients. Dryden.

SINCERE. adj. [sincerus, Latin; sincere, French.]

1. Unhurt; uninjured.

He try'd a tough well-chosen spear;
The inviolable body stood sincere. Dryden.

2. Pure; unmingled.

VOL. III.

Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow;
A joy which never was sincere till now;
That which my conquest gave, I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect till I saw your eyes. Dryden.

The pleasures of sense beasts taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice. Arbutnot on Aliments.

In English I would have all Gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language. Felton on the Classics.

3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.

This top-proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions by intelligence,
I do know to be corrupt. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,
Which your sincerest care could not prevent;
Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.

The more sincere you are, the better it will fare with you at the great day of account. In the mean while, give us leave to be sincere too, in condemning heartily what we heartily disapprove. Waterland.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life as, by the ordinary means of grace, we should have power to avoid. Law.

SINCERE.† adv. [from sincere.]

1. Perfectly; without alloy.

Joy shall overtake us as a flood,
When every thing that is sincerely good
And perfectly divine,
With Truth, and Peace, and Love shall ever shine.

2. Honestly; without hypocrisy; with purity of heart.

The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who steadfastly and sincerely embrace it. Hooker.

That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

In your whole reasoning, keep your mind sincerely intent in the pursuit of truth. Watts, Logick.

SINCERENESS.† n. s. [sincerité, French; SINCERITY, from sincere.]

1. Honesty of intention; purity of mind.

I rest as far from wrong of sincereness,
As he flies from the practice.

Beaumont and Fl. Bloody Brother.
This sincereness and confidence of the king had not the return they deserved.

Temple, Intr. Hist. of Eng. p. 280.
Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of reconciliation, which will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost. Rogers.

2. Freedom from hypocrisy.

In thy consort cease to fear a foe;
For thee she feels sincerity of woe. Pope, Odys.

SINDON.† n. s. [Latin. Dr. Johnson.—Most take sindinim, (Heb.) from whence the word sindon seems to come, for such linen cloths, as the whole body may be wrapped in. Patrick on Judges, xiv. 13.] A fold; a wrapper.

There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindons of linen. Bacon.

SINE. n. s. [sinus, Latin.] A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the chord of twice the arch. Harris.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

SINECURE. n. s. [sine, without, and cura, care, Latin.] An office which has revenue without any employment.

A sinecure is a benefice without cure of souls.

No simony nor sinecure is known;
There works the bee, no honey for the drone.

SIN'EW. n. s. [rinep, rinepa, Sax. sinewen, Dutch.]

1. A tendon; the ligament by which the joints are moved.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
The rooted fibres rose, and from the wound
Black bloody drops distill'd upon the ground:
Mute and amaz'd, my hair with terror stood;
Fear shrunk my sinews, and congeal'd my blood.

A sinew cracked seldom recovers its former strength.

2. Applied to whatever gives strength or compactness: as, money is the sinews of war.

Some other sinews there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise.

Such discouraging of men in the ways of an active conformity to the church's rules, cracks the sinews of government; for it weakens and damps the spirits of the obedient. South.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the sinews of his art, for in them consists the principal beauties of his work.

Dryden, Dufrenoy.

3. Muscle or nerve.

The feeling power, which is life's root,
Through every living part itself doth shed
By sinews, which extend from head to foot;
And, like a net, o'er all the body spread. Davies.

TO SIN'EW. v. a. [from the noun.] To knit as by sinews. Not in use.

Ask the lady Bona for thy queen;
So shalt thou sinew both these ladies together.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

SIN'EWED. adj. [from sinew.]

1. Furnished with sinews.

Strong sinewed was the youth, and big of bone.

Dryden.

2. Strong; firm; vigorous.

He will the rather do it when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

Shakespeare, K. John.
SIN'EWLESS. adj.* [sinew and less.] Having no sinews; without power or strength.

Hulot.

All that ever was said against these helps to beauty, seems to many wise women weak and sinewless.

Bay. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 194.
The arm of the church is now short and sinewless.

SIN'EWSHRUNK. adj. [sinew and shrunk.] A horse is said to be sinewshrunk when he has been overriden, and so fatigued that he becomes gauntbellied by a stiffness and contraction of the two sinews which are under his belly.

Farrier's Dict.
SIN'EWY. adj. [from sinew.]

1. Consisting of a sinew; nervous. The nerves and sinews are in poetry often confounded, from nervus, Latin, which signifies a sinew.

The sinewy thread my brain lets fall
Through every part,
Can tie those parts, and make me one of all.

2. Strong; nervous; vigorous; forcible.

And for thy vigour, bull-bearing Milo his addition yields

To sinewy Ajax. Shaks. Tr. and Cress.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove

Most sinewy swordsmen. Shakspeare.

The northern people are large, fair-complexioned, strong, sinewy, and courageous.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

He dropt his sinewy arms: his knees no more

Perform'd their office. Pope, Odyssey.

SINFUL.† adj. [inpull, Saxon.]

1. Alien from God; not holy; unsanctified.

Drive out the sinful pair,

From hallow'd ground the unholy. Milton, P. L.

2. Wicked; not observant of religion; contrary to religion. It is used both of persons and things.

Thrice happy man, said then the father grave,

Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead,

And shews the way his sinful soul to save,

Who better can the way to heaven adore?

Spenser, F. Q.

Nature herself, though pure of sinful thought,

Wrought in her so, that, seeing me, she turn'd.

Milton, P. L.

The stoicks looked upon all passions as sinful

defects and irregularities, as so many deviations from right reason, making passion to be only another word for perturbation. South.

SINFULLY. adv. [from sinful.] Wickedly;

not piously; not according to the ordinance of God.

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath

Sinfully plucked, and not a man of you

Had so much grace to put it in my mind.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly, and perhaps unsuccessfully too. South.

SINFULNESS. n. s. [from sinful.] Alienation from God; neglect or violation of the duties of religion; contrariety to religious goodness.

I am sent

To shew thee what shall come in future days

To thee and to thy offspring: good with bad

Expect to hear; supernal grace contending

With sinfulness of men. Milton, P. L.

Peevishness, the general fault of sick persons, is equally to be avoided for the folly and sinfulness.

Wake.

To SING. v. n. preterite I sang, or sung;

participle pass. sung. [janzan, Saxon;

singia, Icelandic; singen, Dutch.]

1. To form the voice to melody; to articulate musically.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,

And the mountain tops that freeze,

Bow themselves when he did sing:

To his musick plants and flowers

Ever sprang, as sun and showers

There had made a lasting spring.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,

And some for sorrow sung. Shaks. K. Lear.

They rather had beheld

Dissentious numbers pesterer streets, than see

Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going

About their functions friendly. Shaks. Coriol.

The morning stars sang together. Job.

Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord. 1 Chron. xvi. 33.

Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,

Some in heroeic verse divinely sing. Dryden.

2. To utter sweet sounds inarticulately.

You will sooner bind a bird from singing than from flying. Bacon.

Join voices, all ye birds,

That singing up to heaven-gate ascend.

Milton, P. L.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,

And singing birds, in silver cages hung.

Dryden, Ovid.

Oh! were I made, by some transforming power,

The captive bird that sings within thy bower,

Then might my voice thy list'ning ears employ,

And I those kisses he receives enjoy. Pope.

3. To make any small or shrill noise.

A man may hear this shower sing in the wind.

Shakspeare.

You leaden messengers,

Fly with false aim; pierce the still moving air,

That sings with piercing; do not touch my lord.

Shakspeare.

We hear this fearful tempest sing. Shakspeare.

O'er his head the flying spear

Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

4. To tell in poetry.

Bid her exalt her melancholy wing,

And rais'd from earth, and sav'd from passion,

sing

Of human hope by cross event destroy'd,

Of useless wealth and greatness unenjoy'd. Prior.

To SING. v. a.

1. To relate or mention in poetry.

All the prophets in their age the times

Of great Messiah sing. Milton, P. L.

I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore

In that right hand which held the crook before.

Cowley.

Arms and the man I sing. Dryden, Æn.

Well might he sing the day he could not fear,

And paint the glories he was sure to wear. Smith.

2. To celebrate; to give praises to in verse.

The last, the happiest British king,

Whom thou shalt paint or I shall sing. Addison.

3. To utter harmoniously.

Incles, caddisses, cambricks, lawns, why

He sings them over as they were gods and godesses. Shakspeare.

They that wasted us required of my mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion.

P. cxxxvii. 3.

How could we to his godhead sing

To SINGE. v. a. [janzan, Saxon; sengen,

Teut.] To scorch; to burn slightly or superficially.

Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire. Shakspeare.

Drake, in the vaulting stile of a soldier, would call this enterprize the singeing of the king of Spain's beard. Bacon.

That neither was singed in the combustion of Phaeton, nor overwhelmed by the inundation of Deucalion. Brown.

They leave a singed bottom all involv'd

With stench and smoke. Milton, P. L.

I sing'd the toes of an ape through a burning-glass, and he never would endure it after.

L'Estrange.

He seem'd to pass

A rolling fire along, and singe the grass. Dryden.

SINGE. n. s.* [from the verb.] A slight burn.

SINGER. n. s. [from sing.] One that sings;

one whose profession or business is to sing.

His filching was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men. Ecc. ii. 8.

To the chief singer on my stringed instruments.

Hab. iii.

Cockbirds amongst singing birds are ever the better singers, because they are more lively.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thy heart no ruder than the rugged stone,

I might, like Orpheus, with my num'rous moan

Melt to compassion: now my trait'rous song

With thee conspires to do the singer wrong.

Waller.

The birds know how to chuse their fare;

To peck this fruit they all forbear:

Those cheerful singers know not why

They should make any haste to die.

Waller.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers. Dryden.

SINGING. n. s.* [from sing.] Act of modulating the voice to melody; musical articulation; utterance of sweet sounds.

The time of the singing of birds is come.

Cantic. ii. 12.

book of tunes.

When shall we hear a new set of singing-books, or the viols? Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

SINGINGLY. adv.* [from singing.] With a kind of tune.

Counterfainte courtiers which simper it in out-warde shewe, making pretie mouthes, and marching with a stalking pace like cranes, spetting over their own shoulder, speaking lispingly, and answering singingly, with perfumed gloves under their girdles!

North, Tr. of Philosopher at Court, (1575.) p. 16.

SINGINGMAN. n. s.* [sing and man.] One who is employed to sing: a term still used in our cathedrals.

his father to a singing-man of Windsor.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

SINGINGMASTER. n. s. [sing and master.]

One who teaches to sing.

He employed an itinerant singingmaster to instruct them rightly in the tunes of the Psalms.

Addison, Spect.

SINGLE.† adj. [singulus, Latin.]

1. One; not double; not more than one.

The words are clear and easy, and their originals are of single signification without any ambiguity. South.

Some were single acts, though each complete;

But every act stood ready to repeat. Dryden.

Then Theseus join'd with bold Pirithous came,

A single concord in a double name. Dryden.

A lonely desert, and an empty land,

Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,

A single house to their benighted guest.

Addison on Italy.

Where the poesy or oratory abineth, a single reading is not sufficient to satisfy a mind that has a true taste; nor can we make the fullest improvement of them without proper reviews.

Watts on the Mind.

2. Particular; individual.

As no single man is born with a right of con-trouling the opinions of all the rest, so the world has no title to demand the whole time of any particular person. Pope.

If one single word were to express but one simple idea, and nothing else, there would be scarce

any mistake. Watts.

3. Not compounded.

As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and single ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished: the English tongue has some advantage above the learned languages, which have no usual word to distinguish single from simple.

Watts.

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.

Servant of God, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintain'd
Against revolted multitudes the cause
Of truth. Milton, P. L.

His wisdom such,
Three kingdoms wonder, and three kingdoms fear,
Whilst single he stood forth. Denham.

In sweet possession of the fairy place,
Single and conscious to myself alone,
Of pleasures to th' excluded world unknown. Dryden.

5. Unmarried.

Is the single man therefore blessed? no: as a walled town is more worthy than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor. Shakspeare.

Pygmalion
Abhor'd all womankind, but most a wife;
So single chose to live, and shunn'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a consort of his bed. Dryden.

6. Not complicated; not duplicated.

To make flowers double is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary, double flowers, by neglecting and not removing, prove single. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

7. Pure; uncorrupt; not double minded; simple. A scriptural sense.

The light of the body is the eye: if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. St. Matt. vi. 22.

8. That in which one is opposed to one.

He, when his country, threaten'd with alarms,
Shall more than once the Punick bands affright,
Shall kill the Gaulish king in single fight. Dryden, Æn.

9. Singular; particular.

He that so considers the praise of men, that he must at no hand part with it, whenever the greatest sins come to be in fashion, and credit, (as, God knows, many are now-a-days,) he will be sure to commit them, rather than run the disgrace of being too single and precise. Wh. Duty of M. S. vi. § 13.

10. Small.

They will scarce
Serve to beg single beer. Beaumont and Fl. Capt.

11. Weak; silly.

Is not your voice broken? your wind short?
your chin double? your wit single? Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.
He utters such single matter, in so infantly a voice. Beaumont and Fl. Qu. of Corinth.

TO SINGLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To choose out from among others.

I saw him in the battle range about,
And how he singled Clifford forth. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Every man may have a peculiar savour, which,
although not perceptible unto man, is yet sensible unto dogs, who hereby can single out their master in the dark. Bacon.

Dost thou already single me? I thought Gyres and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton, S. A.
Begin, auspicious boy, to cast about Thy infant eyes, and with a smile thy mother single out. Dryden.

Single the lowliest of the am'rous youth;
Ask for his vows, but hope not for his truth. Prior.

2. To sequester; to withdraw.

Ye simply, saith Basil, and universally, whether it be in works of nature, or of voluntary choice, I see not any thing done as it should be, if it be wrought by an agent singling itself from consorts. Hooker.

3. To take alone.

Many men there are, than whom nothing is more commendable when they are singled; and yet, in society with others, none less fit to answer the duties which are looked for at their hands. Hooker.

4. To separate.

Hardly they herd, which by good hunters singled
are. Sidney.

SINGleness.† n. s. [from single.]

1. Not duplicity or multiplicity; the state of being only one.

2. Simplicity; sincerity; honest plain-
ness.

It is not the deepness of their knowledge, but the singleness of their belief, which God accepteth. Hooker.

Men must be obliged to go through their business with singleness of heart. Law.

3. State of being alone.

Hear next, that Athelwold's sad widow swears
Never to violate the holy vow
She to his truth first plighted; swears to bear
The sober singleness of widowhood
To her sad grave. Mason's Elfrida.

SINGLESTICK.* n. s. [single and stick.] A cudgel; better known in the west of England by the title of backsword. It is a word used also in Scotland. See Dr. Jamieson's Supplement.

SINGLIN.* n. s. [from single.] A single gleaning; a handful of gleaned corn.
Brockett's N. C. Words. See also SON-GOW.

SINGLY. adv. [from single.]

1. Individually; particularly.

If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and therefore bound to restitution singly and entirely. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

They tend to the perfection of human nature, and to make men singly and personally good, or tend to the happiness of society. Tillotson, Serm.

2. Only; by himself.

Look thee, 'tis so; thou singly honest man,
Here take: the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasure. Shakspeare, Timon.

3. Without partners or associates.

Belinda
Burns to encounter two adventurous knights,
At ombre singly to decide their doom. Pope.
4. Honestly; simply; sincerely.

SINGSONG.* n. s. A contemptuous expression for bad singing.

Campanella tells us, that the German and Gallican heresy began with sing-song, and is carried on by comedy and tragedies. Rymer on Trag. p. 34.
It was all indeed mere sing-song, or rather (if the expression be not too quaint) sing without song.
Mason on Ch. Mus. p. 163.

SINGULAR. adj. [singulier, Fr. singula-laris, Lat.]

1. Single; not complex; not compound.

That idea which represents one particular de-minate thing is called a singular idea, whether simple, complex, or compound. Watts.

2. [In grammar.] Expressing only one;
not plural.

If St. Paul's speaking of himself in the first person singular has so various meanings, his use of the first person plural has a greater latitude. Locke.

3. Particular; unexampled.

So singular a sadness
Must have a cause as strange as the effect, Denham, Sophy.

Doubtless, if you are innocent, your case is extremely hard, yet it is not singular. Female Quixote.

4. Having something not common to others. It is commonly used in a sense of disapprobation, whether applied to persons or things.

His zeal
None seconded, as singular and rash. Milton, P. L.
It is very commendable to be singular in any excellency, and religion is the greatest excellency;
to be singular in any thing that is wise and worthy,
is not a disparagement, but a praise. Tillotson.

5. Alone; that of which there is but one.

These busts of the emperors and empresses are all very scarce, and some of them almost singular
in their kind. Addison.

SINGULAR.* n. s. Particular; single instance.

We cannot'er run through all singulars.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. ii. 36.

SINGULARIST.* n. s. [from singular.]
One who affects singularity.

To be termed a foppish simpleton, doting on speculations, and enslaved to rules; a fantastical humorist; a precise bigot; a rigid stoick; a demure sneaksby; a clownish singularist, or non-conformist to ordinary rules; a stiff opiniatre; are approbrious names, which divert many persons from their duty. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 34.

SINGULARITY. n. s. [singularité, Fr. from singular.]

1. Some character or quality by which one is distinguished from all, or from most others.

Pliny addeth this singularity to that soil, that the second year the very falling down of the seeds yieldeth corn. Raleigh.

2. Any thing remarkable; a curiosity; uncommon character or form.

Your gallery

Have we pass'd through, not without much content

In many singularities; but we saw not
That which my daughter came to look upon,
The statue of her mother. Shakspeare, Winter Tale.

I took notice of this little figure for the singularity of the instrument: it is not unlike a violin.
Addison on Italy.

3. Particular privilege or prerogative.

St. Gregory, being himself a bishop of Rome, and writing against the title of universal bishop, saith thus: None of all my predecessors ever consented to use this ungodly title; no bishop of Rome ever took upon him this name of singularity. Hooker.

Catholicism, which is here attributed unto the church, must be understood in opposition to the legal singularity of the Jewish nation. Pearson.

4. Character or manners different from those of others.

The spirit of singularity in a few ought to give place to publick judgement. Hooker.

Though, according to the practice of the world, it be singular for men thoroughly to live up to the principles of their religion, yet singularity in this matter is a singular commendation of it.

Singularity in sin puts it out of fashion, since to be alone in any practice seems to make the judgement of the world against it; but the concurrence of others is a tacit approbation of that in which they concur. South.

TO SINGULARIZE. v. a. [se singulariser,
Fr. from singular.] To make single.

SINGULARLY.† adv. [from singular.]

1. Particularly; in a manner not common to others.

Solitude and singularity can neither daunt nor disgrace him, unless we could suppose it a disgrace to be singularly good. South.

2. So as to express the singular number.

Tertullian spake of bishops by succession, which were still singularly one by one. Bp. Morton, Episc. Assert. p. 121.

SINGULTE.† n. s. [singultus, Lat. Dr. Johnson refers to Spenser, and Mr. Mason cites him: But Spenser's word is singulfe, which in editions, subsequent to his own,
was altered: "An huge heape of singulfe."
F. Q. iii. xi. 12.] A sigh.

So when her tears were stopt from either eye,
Her singults, blubberings, seem'd to make them fly
Out at her oyster-mouth, and nose-thrills wide.

Browne, Brit. Past. B. 2. S. 1.

SINISTER. adj. [sinister, Lat.]

1. Being on the left hand; left; not right; not dexter. It seems to be used with the accent on the second syllable, at least in the primitive, and on the first in the figurative sense.

My mother's blood

Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my sire's. Shaks. Troil. and Cress.

Captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. Shaks. All's Well.
A rib,—crooked by nature, bent, as now appears,
More to the part sinister from me drawn.

Milton, P. L.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather inflame and debilitate it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
He plac'd a mighty mug of potent ale. Dryden.

2. Bad; perverse; corrupt; deviating from honesty; unfair.

Is it so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bridle to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning? Hooker.

The duke of Clarence was soon after by sinister means made clean away. Spenser on Ireland.

When are there more unworthy men chosen to offices, when is there more strife and contention about elections, or when do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whitgift.

He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Those may be accounted the left hands of courts; persons that are full of nimble and sinister tricks and shifts, whereby they pervert the plain courses of courts, and bring justice into oblique lines and labyrinths. Bacon, Ess.

The just person has given the world an assurance, by the constant tenor of his practice, that he makes a conscience of his ways, and that he scorns to undermine another's interest by any sinister or inferior arts. South.

3. [Sinistre, Fr.] Unlucky; inauspicious. The accent is here on the second syllable.

Tempt it again: that is thy act, or none:

What all the several ills that visit earth,

Brought forth by night, with a sinister birth,

Plagues, famine, fire, could not reach unto,

The sword, nor surfeits, let thy fury do.

B. Jonson.

SINISTER-HANDED.* adj. [sinister and hand.] Left-handed; unlucky.

That which still makes her mirth to flow,

Is our sinister-handed woe.

Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 2.

SINISTERLY.* adv. [from sinister.] Perversely; corruptly; unfairly.

Persons which most sinisterly and maliciously labour.

Injunctions of Q. Elis. (1559.) sign. D. ii. b. It might have been discerned that the scholars' arms and furniture were not borrowed of them, as some had sinisterly suggested.

A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. (in 1642.)

SINISTROUS.† adj. [sinister, Lat.] Absurd; perverse; wrong-headed: in French gauche.

Might not your maid have some sinistrous respect to delude?

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616.) p. 332.

Many, who are sinistrous unto good actions, are ambidexterous unto bad.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 20.

A knave or fool can do no harm, even by the most sinistrous and absurd choice.

Bentley.

SINISTROUSLY.† adv. [from sinistrous.]

1. With a tendency to the left.

Many in their infancy are sinistrously disposed, and divers continue all their life left-handed, and have but weak and imperfect use of the right.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Perversely; absurdly.

Fall not — to accuse, calumniate, backbite, or sinistrously interpret others.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 16.

TO SINK.† v. n. pret. I sunk, anciently sank; part. sunk or sunken. [rencan, rencan, Saxon; sincken, German; sigcan, M. Goth. from siga, to subside, to fall down. Junius, and Serenius.]

1. To fall down through any medium; not to swim; to go to the bottom.

As rich with prize,

As is the oozy bottom of the sea

With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

In with the river sunk, and with it rose,
Satan, involv'd in rising mist; then sought
Where to lie hid. Milton, P. L.

He swims or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies.

Milton, P. L.

The pirate sinks with his ill-gotten gains.
And nothing to another's use remains. Dryden.

Supposing several in a tempest will rather perish than work, would it not be madness in the rest to chuse to sink together, rather than do more than their share? Addison on the War.

2. To fall gradually.

The arrow went out at his heart, and he sunk down in his chariot. 2 Kings, ix. 24.

3. To enter or penetrate into any body.

David took a stone and slang it, and smote the Philistine, that the stone sunk into his forehead.

1 Sam. xvii. 49.

4. To lose height; to fall to a level.

In vain has nature form'd
Mountains and oceans to oppose his passage;
He bounds o'er all, victorious in his march;
The Alps and Pyreneans sink before him.

Addison, Cat.

5. To lose or want prominence.

What were his marks? — A lean cheek, a blue eye and sunken.

Deep dinted wrinkles on shaks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws.

Dryden.

6. To be overwhelmed or depressed.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

They arraign'd shall sink

Beneath thy sentence. Milton, P. L.

But if you this ambitious prayer deny,
Then let me sink beneath proud Arcite's arms;
And, I once dead, let him possess her charms.

Dryden.

7. To be received; to be impressed.

Let these sayings sink down into your ears.

St. Luke, ix. 44.

Truth never sinks into these men's minds, nor gives any tincture to them. Locke.

8. To decline; to decrease; to decay.

Then down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes which in ages rose. Dryden.
This republic has been much more powerful than it is at present, as it is still likelier to sink than increase in its dominions. Addison on Italy.

Let not the fire sink or slacken, but increase.

Mortimer.

9. To fall into rest or indolence.

Would'st thou have me sink away
In pleasing dreams, and lose myself in love,
When every moment Cato's life's at stake?

Addison, Cat.

10. To fall into any state worse than the former; to tend to ruin.

Nor urg'd the labours of my lord in vain,
A sinking empire longed to sustain. Dryden, Æn.

TO SINK. v. a.

1. To put under water; to disable from swimming or floating.

A small fleet of English made an hostile invasion, or on incursion, upon their havens and roads, and fired, sunk, and carried away ten thousand ton of their great shipping. Bacon.

2. To delve; to make by delving.

At Saga in Germany they dig up iron in the fields by sinking ditches two feet deep, and in the space of ten years the ditches are digged again for iron since produced. Boyle.

Near Geneva are quarries of freestone, that run under the lake: when the water is at lowest, they make within the borders of it a little square, inclosed within four walls: in this square they sink a pit, and dig for freestone. Addison.

3. To depress; to degrade.

A mighty king I am, an earthly god;
I raise or sink, imprison or set free;
And life or death depends on my decree. Prior.
Trifling painters or sculptors bestow infinite pains upon the most insignificant parts of a figure, till they sink the grandeur of the whole.

Pope, Ess. on Homer.

4. To plunge into destruction.

Heaven bear witness,
And if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Ev'n as the axe falls, if I be not faithful. Shaks.

5. To make to fall.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some before standing, and undermine others, sinking them into the abyss.

Woodward.

6. To bring low; to diminish in quantity.

When on the banks of an unlook'd-for stream,
You sunk the river with repeated draughts,
Who was the last in all your host that thirsted?

Addison.

7. To crush; to overbear; to depress.

That Hector was in certainty of death, and depressed with the conscience of an ill cause: if you will not grant the first of these will sink the spirit of a hero, you'll at least allow the second may.

Pope.

8. To diminish; to degrade.

They catch at all opportunities of ruining our trade, and sinking the figure which we make.

Addison on the War.

I mean not that we should sink our figure out of covetousness, and deny ourselves the proper conveniences of our station, only that we may lay up a superfluous treasure. Rogers.

9. To make to decline.

Thy cruel and unnatural lust of power
Has sunk thy father more than all his years,
And made him wither in a green old age. Rome.

To labour for a sunk corrupted state. Lyttleton.

10. To suppress; to conceal; to intervert.

If sent with ready money to buy any thing, and you happen to be out of pocket, sink the money, and take up the goods on account.

Swift, Rules to Servants.

SINK.† n. s. [renc, Saxon, a heap, a collection, which Serenius conjectures to be derived from the Su. Goth. sanka, to collect. Our word is rather perhaps from rencan, Sax. sincken, Germ. to go to the bottom.]

1. A drain; a jakes.

Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sink o' the body. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Bad humours gather to a bile, or as divers kenels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased.

Hayward.

Gather more filth than any sink in town.

Granville.

Returning home at night, you'll find the sink
Strike your offended sense with double stink.

Swift.

2. Any place where corruption is gathered.

What sink of monsters, wretches of lost minds,
Mad after change, and desperate in their states,
Wearied and gall'd with their necessities,
Durst have thought it?

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Our soul, whose country's heav'n's, and God her father,

Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent;

Yet so much in her travail she doth gather,
That she returns home wiser than she went.

Donne.

S'NLESS.† adj. [r̄nleaz, Sax.] Exempt from sin.

Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know

What nearer might concern him. Milton, P. L.

At that tasted fruit

The sun, as from Theystean banquet, turn'd

His course intended; else how had the world

Inhabited, though sinless, more than now

Avoided pinching cold, and scorching heat?

Milton, P. L.

Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,

Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou
Satt'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace.

Milton, P. R.

No thoughts like mine his sinless soul profane,
Observant of the right.

Dryden, Or.

Did God, indeed, insist on a sinless and unerring observance of all this multiplicity of duties; had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas, who should live, if God did this?

Rogers.

S'NLESSNESS. n. s. [from sinless.] Exemption from sin.

We may the less admire at his gracious condescensions to those, the sinlessness of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude.

Boyle, Seraph. Love.

S'NNER. n. s. [from sin.]

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.

Let the boldest sinner take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him.

South.

Never consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men; but as poor *sinner*s, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, devotion, and self-denial.

Lowe.

2. An offender; a criminal.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire.

Shakespeare, Timon.

Over the guilty then the fury shakes

The sounding whip, and brandishes her snakes,
And the pale sinner with her sisters takes.

Dryd.

Thither, where *sinner*s may have rest, I go,
Where flames refin'd in breasts seraphick glow.

Pope.

To S'NNER.* v. n. To act the part of a sinner. Dr. Johnson had mistakenly placed the following example as an illustration of the noun.

Whether the charmer sinner it or saint it,
If folly grows romantic, I must paint it.

Pope.

SINO'FEERING. n. s. [sin and offering.] An expiation or sacrifice for sin.

The flesh of the bullock shalt thou burn without the camp: it is a sinoffering. Ex. xxix. 14.

S'NOPER, or Sinople. n. s. [terra pontica, Latin.] A species of earth; ruddle.

Ainsworth.

To S'NUATE. v. a. [sinuo, Latin.] To bend in and out.

Another was very perfect, somewhat less with the margin, and more sinated.

Woodward on Fossils.

SINU'ATION. n. s. [from sinate.] A bending in and out.

The human brain is, in proportion to the body, much larger than the brains of brutes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfractus or sinuations.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

SINUOSITY.† n. s. [from sinuous.] The quality of being sinuous.

There was no need — of any sinuosity or protuberance whatsoever.

Biblioth. Bibl. i. 235.

S'INUOUS. adj. [sinueux, Fr. from sinus, Lat.] Bending in and out.

Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous.

Bacon.

These, as a line, their long dimensions draw,
Streaking the ground with sinuous trace.

Milton, P. L.

In the dissections of horses, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, whereat the gall is usually seated in quadrupeds, I discover an hollow, long, membranous substance.

Brown.

SINUS.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. A bay of the sea; an opening of the land.

Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea: whether that be true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinuses, might have had such an original.

Burnet, Theory.

2. Any fold or opening.

There was no sinus or inequality, or perhaps so much as one pore left open, according to this hypothesis of the figure of the ark.

Biblioth. Bibl. i. 235.

To SIP. v. a. [ripan, Sax. sippen, Dutch.]

1. To drink by small draughts; to take at one apposition of the cup to the mouth no more than the mouth will contain.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs their elemental tea.

Pope.

2. To drink in small quantities.

Find out the peaceful hermitage;

The hairy gown and mossy cell,

Where I may sit and rightly spell

Of every star that heaven doth shed,

And every herb that sips the dew.

Milton, Il Pens.

3. To drink out of.

The winged nation o'er the forest flies:

Then stooping on the meads and leafy bowers,

They skim the floods and sip the purple flowers.

Dryden.

To SIP. v. n. To drink a small quantity.

She rais'd it to her mouth with sober grace;

Then, sipping, offer'd to the next.

Dryden, Æn.

SIP. n. s. [from the verb.] A small draught; as much as the mouth will hold.

Her face o' fire

With labour, and the thing she took to quench it

She would to each one sip.

Shaks. Wint. Tale.

One sip of this

Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,

Beyond the bliss of dreams.

Milton, Comus.

To SIPE.* v. n. [sippen, Teut.] To ooze or drain out slowly. North. Grose.

S'IPING.* n. s. [from To sipe.] The act of oozing.

The sluggishness of the rainy day, the dropping of the eaves, the siping through of waters into the house, put us in mind of the irksomeness and annoyances of old age.

Granger on Eccles. (1621.) p. 316.

S'IPHON. n. s. [σιψω; sipho, Lat. siphon, Fr.] A pipe through which liquors are conveyed.

Beneath the incessant weeping of these drains I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Of stiff compacted clay.

Thomson, Autumn.

S'IPID.* adj. [an old form of sapid; which see.] Savoury: this seems not an improper word, as opposed to insipid, and is in the vocabulary of Cockeram.

S'IPPER. n. s. [from sip.] One that sips.

S'IPPET.† n. s. [sop, sip, sippet.] A small sop.

Your sweet sippets in widows' houses.

Milton, Eiconoclast. § 24.

SI'QUIS.* n. s. [Latin; meaning, if any one.] An advertisement or notification. Formerly a bill pasted on a wall, door, post, &c. Cotgrave and Sherwood. The word is still used, when he, who has not been educated at our universities, or having been there educated, has been a certain time absent from them, intends to be a candidate for holy orders. He causes notice to be given by the minister to the congregation of the parish where he resides, on some Sunday, of his intention, to enquire if there be any impediment that may be alleged against him; and a certificate is then given accordingly.

Saw'st thou ever siquis patch'd on Paul's church-door?

Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 5.

A merry Greeke set up a siquis late,
To singeing a stranger come to town.

Wroth, Epigr. (1620.)

SIR.† n. s. [sire, Fr. from the Goth. sihor, lord. Hickes. Icel. saer, syr, sir, the same. Serenius. Some carry it to sar, Heb. a prince.

1. The word of respect in compellation.

Speak on, sir,

I dare your worst objections: If I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

But, sirs, be sudden in the execution;
Withal obdurate; do not let him plead.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Sir king,

This man is better than the man he slew.

Shaks.

At a banquet the ambassador desired the wise men to deliver every one of them some sentence or parable, that he might report to his king, which they did: only one was silent, which the ambassador perceiving, said to him, Sir, let it not displease you; why do not you say somewhat that I may report? He answered, Report to your lord, that there are that can hold their peace.

Bacon, Apophthi.

2. The title of a knight or baronet. This word was anciently so much held essential, that the Jews in their addresses expressed it in Hebrew characters.

Sir Horace Vere, his brother, was the principal in the active part.

Bacon, War with Spain.

The court forsake him, and sir Balaam hangs.

Pope.

3. Formerly the title of a priest. Hence, as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, a Sir John came to be the nickname of a priest. — "A priest was the third of the three syrs, which only were in request of old; (no baron, viscount, earle, nor marquisse, being then in use;) to wit, Sir King, Sir Knight, and Sir Priest." Watson's Decacord. of Quodlib. Quest. 1602, p. 53.

Are there not women that would tell as good a tale as the best Sir John, i. e. Parson. Harbours for Faithful Subjects, (1559,) sign. H. 2.

Let me thy tale borowe
For our Sir John to say to-morrowe.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.
But this good Sir did follow the plain word,
No meddled with their controversies vain;
All his care was, his service well to sain.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

4. It is sometimes used for man.

I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgement,
In the election of a sir so rare. Shaks. Cymbeline.

5. A title given to the loin of beef, which one of our kings knighted in a fit of good humour.

He lost his roast-beef stomach, not being able to touch a sir-loin which was served up. Addison.

And the strong table groans
Beneath the smoking sir-loin, stretch'd immense
From side to side. Thomson, Autumn.

It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit which is strong enough to turn a sir-loin of beef, should not be able to turn a lark. Swift.

SIRE, † n. s. [sire, Fr. senior, Lat.]

1. The word of respect in addressing the king.

2. A father. Used in poetry.

He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue like a loving sire.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

A virgin is his mother, but his sire

The power of the Most High. Milton, P. L.

And now I leave the true and just supports
Of legal princes and of honest courts,
Whose sires, great partners in my father's cares,
Saluted their young king at Hebron crown'd.

Prior.

Whether his hoary sire he spies,
While thousand grateful thoughts arise,
Or meets his spouse's fondler eye.

Pope, Chor. to Brutus.

3. It is used in common speech of beasts: as, the horse had a good sire, but a bad dam.

4. It is used in composition: as, grand-sire, great-grand-sire.

To SIRE, v. a. To beget; to produce.

Cowards father cowards, and base things sire the base. Shakspeare.

SIREN, † n. s. [Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Some have derived this word from the Greek σειρα, (seira), a chain, as if it were impossible not to be enchained by the allurements of a siren. Vossius, Morin, &c. Bochart calls it a Phœnician word, meaning a songstress. So the Hebrew syer, a song. This is, doubtless, the origin.] A goddess who enticed men by singing, and devoured them; any mischievous alluring woman.

Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears:
Sing, siren, to thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shaks.

SIREN,* adj. Alluring; bewitching like a siren.

By the fair insinuating carriage, by the help of the winning address, the syren mode or mien, he can inspire poison, whisper in destruction to the soul.

Hammond, Works, iv. 470.

Lulled with syren song. Young.
To SIRENIZE,* v. n. [from siren.] To practise the allurements of a siren.

Cockeram.

SIRIASIS, n. s. [σισιας]. An inflammation of the brain and its membrane, through an excessive heat of the sun.

Dict.

SIRIUS, n. s. [Latin.] The dogstar.

SIRLOIN, † n. s. The loin of beef. See the fifth sense of Sir.

SIRNAME,* See SURNAME.

SIROCCO, n. s. [Italian; syrys ventus, Lat.] The south-east or Syrian wind.

Forth rush the levant and the potent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise,

To SIRPLE,* v. n. [sorpla, Swedish.] To sip often; nearly allied to tipping. A northern word. Grose, and Brockett.

SIRRAH, † n. s. [sir, ha! Minshew.] A compellation of reproach and insult. Dr. Johnson. — This is the general acceptance of the word. It is sometimes used without either reproach or insult; with a sort of playfulness, as to children, and formerly to women also, and among friends; and with a kind of hastiness to servants.

As, syra, there said you wel!

Confut. of N. Shanton, (1546,) sign. G. i. b. Our visits we will change after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce.

Sirrah, there's no room for faith, troth, or honesty in this bosom of thine. Shaks. Hen. IV.

Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions: as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Sirrah, Iras, go! [Cleopatra to her female servant.] Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Sirrah, why dost not thou marry? [one gentlewoman to another.] Beaumont and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah, to hate our family. L' Etranger.

Guess how the goddess greets her son,
Come hither, sirrah; no, begone. Prior.

SIRT,* n. s. [syrtis, Latin.] A bog; a quicksand. Milton uses the Latin word; but this old English word has hitherto been unnoticed.

They discovered the immense and vast ocean of the courts to be all over full of flats, shelves, shallows, quicksands, crags, rocks, gulfs, whirlpools, sirts, &c. Trans. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 42.

SIRUP, † n. s. [Arabick.] The juice of SIRUP, vegetables boiled with sugar.

Shall I, whose ears her mournful words did seize,

Her words in sirup laid of sweetest breath, Relent? Sidney.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep,
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shaks. Othello.

And first, behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm, and fragrant syrups mixt.

Milton, Comus.
Those expressed juices contain the true essential salt of the plant; for if they be boiled into the consistence of a sirup, and set in a cool place, the essential salt of the plant will shoot up on the sides of the vessels. Arbuthnot.

SIRUPED, adj. [from sirup.] Sweet, like sirup; bedewed with sweets.

Yet, when there haps a honey fall,
We'll lick the syrup leaves:

And tell the bees that theirs is gall. Drayton.

SIRUPY, adj. [from sirup.] Resembling sirup.

Apples are of a sirupy tenacious nature.

Mortimer.

SISE, n. s. [contracted from assize.]

You said, if I returned next size in lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace. Donne.

SISKIN, † n. s. [synthen, Teut.] A bird; the greenfinch.

The canary, the linnet, the siskin, and the bulfinch, seem natural musicians.

Transl. of Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

SISTER, † n. s. [geseor, Saxon; zuster, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — M. Gothick, suister; Icel. syster; from syst, uterus, Wachter. See also BROTHER. Our old lexicography gives this word in the northern form also of suster. See Hulot.]

1. A woman born of the same parents; correlative to brother.

Her sister began to scold.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

I have said to corruption, Thou art my father: to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister.

Job, xvii. 14.

2. Woman of the same faith; a christian. One of the same nature, human being.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of food, and you say unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled; notwithstanding you give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? James, ii. 16.

3. A female of the same kind.

He chid the sisters,

And bade them speak to him. Shaks. Macbeth.

4. One of the same kind; one of the same condition.

The women, who would rather wrest the laws, Than let a sister-plaintiff lose the cause, As judges on the bench more gracious are, And more attent to brothers of the bar, Cry'd one and all, the suppliant should have right: And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight. Dryden.

There grew two olives, closest of the grove,
With roots entwined, and branches interwove:
Alike their leaves, but not alike their smil'd.
With sister-fruits: one fertile, one was wild. Pope.

SISTER in law, n. s. A husband or wife's sister.

Thy sister in law is gone back unto her people: return thou after thy sister in law. Ruth, i. 15.

To SISTER,* v. a. [from the noun.] To resemble closely.

She — with her needl composes
Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry,
That even her art sisters the natural roses.

Shakspeare, Pericles.

To SISTER,* v. n. To be akin; to be near to.

A hill whose concave womb reworded
A plaintful story from a sistering vale.

Shakspeare, Lov. Complaint.

SISTERHOOD, † n. s. [from sister.]

1. The office or duty of a sister.

She abhor'd

Her proper blood, and left to do the part
Of sisterhood, to do that of a wife.

Daniel, Civ. War.

2. A set of sisters.

There is a kind of natural equality in sisterhood.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 407.

3. A number of women of the same order.

I speak
Wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare.
Shakspeare.

A woman who flourishes in her innocence, amidst that spite and rancour which prevails among her exasperated sisterhood, appears more amiable.
Addison, Freeholder.

SISTERLY. adj. [from sister.] Like a sister; becoming a sister.

After much debatement,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him.
Shakspeare.

TO SIT. † v. n. preterite, I sat. [sitam, Gothick; ptcan, Sax. setten, Dutch.]

1. To rest upon the buttocks.
Their wives do sit beside them carding wool.

Aloft, in awful state,
The godlike hero sat
On his imperial throne.
Dryden.

2. To perch. In the following lines, ascribed to Dr. Borde, which Camden (and also the antiquary Hearne) has cited, the word is not sit but set. See the 14th sense of Cock. Another example is now given.

All new fashions be pleasant to me,
I will have them whether I thrive or thee,
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look,
What should I do but set [sit] cock on the hoop?
Borde.

A white thorn in an orchard, that every bird
sitteth upon.
Baruch, vi. 71.

3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.

Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?
Numb.

Why sit we here each other viewing idly?
Milton, P. L.

4. To be in any local position.

I should be still
Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind:
Peering in maps for ports. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.
Those
Appointed to sit there had left their charge.
Milton, P. L.

The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair.
A. Phillips.

5. To rest as a weight or burthen.

Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shaks.
When God lets loose upon us a sickness, if we fear to die, then the calamity sits heavy on us.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only galls our sores, and makes the burthen that is upon us sit more uneasy.
Tillotson.

Fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
And horror heavy sat on every mind. Dryden.

Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, can equal the uneasiness that sits so heavy upon us.
Locke.

6. To settle; to abide.

That this new comer, shame,
There sit not and reproach us. Milton, P. L.

When Thetis blush'd, in purple not her own,
And from her face the breathing winds were blown;
A sudden silence sate upon the sea,
And sweeping oars, with struggling, urg'd their way. Dryden.

He to the void advanc'd his pace;
Pale horror sat on each Arcadian face. Dryden.

7. To brood; to incubate.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days.
Jer. xvii. 11.

The egg laid and severed from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen; but only a quickening heat when she sitteth.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison.

8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum. [sied, old Fr. "cet accoustre-ment luy sied bien, this garment becomes, sits, &c." Cotgrave.]

How ill it sits with that same silver head
In vain to mock! Spenser, F. Q.

This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think. Shakspeare.

Heaven knows
By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well,
How troublesome it sate upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet.

Shakspeare.
Your preferring that to all other considerations does, in the eyes of all men, sit well upon you.
Locke.

9. To be placed in order to be painted.

One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome. Garth.

10. To be in any situation or condition.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury.

Bacon.
Suppose all the church-lands were thrown up to the laity; would the tenants sit easier in their rents than now? Swift.

11. To be convened, as an assembly of a publick or authoritative kind; to hold a session: as, the parliament sits: the last general council sate at Trent.

12. To be placed at the table.

Whether is greater he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? St. Luke, xxii. 27.

13. To exercise authority.

The judgement shall sit, and take away his dominion. Dan. vii. 26.
Asses are ye that sit in judgement.

Judges, v. 10.
Down to the golden Chersonese, or where
The Persian in Ecbatan sate. Milton, P. L.

One council sits upon life and death, the other is for taxes, and a third for the distributions of justice. Addison.

Assert, ye fair ones, who in judgement sit,
Your ancient empire over love and wit. Rowe.

14. To be in any solemn assembly as a member.

Three hundred and twenty men sat in council
daily. 1 Maccabees.

15. TO SIT down. Down is little more than emphatical.

Go and sit down to meat. St. Luke, xvii. 7.
When we sit down to our meal, we need not su-perst the intrusion of armed uninvited guests.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

16. TO SIT down. To begin a siege.

Nor would the enemy have sate down before it,
till they had done their business in all other places.
Clarendon.

17. TO SIT down. To rest; to cease as satisfied.

Here we cannot sit down, but still proceed in our search, and look higher for a support. Rogers.

18. TO SIT down. To settle; to fix abode.

From besides Tanais, the Goths, Huns, and Getes sat down. Spenser.

19. TO SIT out. To be without engagement or employment.

They are glad, rather than sit out, to play very small game, and to make use of arguments such as will not prove a bare inexperience.

Bp. Sanderson's Judgement.
20. TO SIT up. To rise from lying to sitting.

He that was dead, sat up, and began to speak.
St. Luke, vii.

21. TO SIT up. To watch; not to go to bed.

Be courtly,
And entertain, and feast, sit up, and revel;
Call all the great, the fair and spirited dames
Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
Of freedom. B. Jonson.

Some sit up late at winter-fires, and fit
Their sharp-edg'd tools. May.

Most children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night. Locke.

TO SIT. v. a.

1. To keep the seat upon.
Hardly the muse can sit the head-strong horse,
Nor would she, if she could, check his impetuous force. Prior.

2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows sit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.

The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
What perils pass, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.

Shakspeare.
He came to visit us, and calling for a chair, sat
him down, and we sat down with him. Bacon.

Thus fenc'd,
But not at rest or ease of mind,
They sat them down to weep. Milton, P. L.

3. To be settled to do business: this is rather neuter.

The court was snt before Sir Roger came, but the justices made room for the old knight at the head of them. Addison.

SITE. n. s. [situs, Lat.]

1. Situation; local position.

The city' self he strongly fortifies,
Three sides by site it well defended has. Fairfax.
Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple.
Bacon.

If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in any muscle. 'Tis only the site and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart. Bentley.

Before my view appear'd a structure fair,
Its site uncertain if on earth or air. Pope.

2. It is taken by Thomson for posture, or situation of a thing with respect to itself;
but improperly.

And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
In melancholy site, with head inclin'd.
And love-dejected eyes. Thomson, Spring.

SIT'D. * adj. [from site.] Placed; situated.

It sit'd was in fruitful soyle of old,
And girl in with two walls on either side.

Spenser, F. Q.
Above were sited the masques, over whose heads
he devised two eminent figures.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.
SIT'FAST. n. s. [sit and fast.] A hard knob growing under the saddle.

Farrier's Dict.
SITH. † conjunction. [pröe, Saxon.] Since;
seeing that. Obsolete.

What ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom, notwithstanding, sith it was their custom, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be in-tomb'd. Hooker.

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence.
Shakespeare.

SITHE.† n. s. Time. Obsolete.

A thousand sithes I curse that careful house.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Jan.

The foolish man threat woe wondrous blith,—
And humbly thanked him a thousand sith.
Spenser, F. Q.

SITHE. n. s. [sith, Saxon.] This word is very variously written by authors: I have chosen the orthography which is at once most simple, and most agreeable to etymology.] The instrument of mowing; a crooked blade joined at right angles to a long pole.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
And then grace us in the disgrace of death:
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
The endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour, which shall bate his scythe's keen edge,
And make us heirs of all eternity. Shakespeare.
Time is commonly drawn upon tombs, in gardens, and other places, an old man, bald, winged,
with a sithe and an hour-glass.

Peacham on Drawing.
There rude impetuous rage doth storm and fret;
And there, as master of this murder brood,
Swinging a huge sithe, stands impartial death,
With endless business almost out of breath.

While the milk-maid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his sithe. Milton, L' All.
The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
But useless lances into sithes shall bend,
And the broad falchion in a plough-share end.
Pope.

Grav'd o'er their seats the form of Time was found,
His sithe revers'd, and both his pinions bound.
Pope.

But, Stella, say, what evil tongue
Reports you are no longer young?
That Time sits with his sythe to mow
Where erst sat Cupid with his bow. Swift.

TO SITHE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To cut down with a sithe.

Time had not sithed all that youth begun.
Shakespeare, Lov. Complaint.

S'ITHED.* adj. Armed with sithes.
Galgacus' scythed, iron car,
That, swiftly whirling through the walks of war, Dash'd Roman blood, and crush'd the foreign throngs.

Dr. Warton, Verses at Montaubon, (1750).

S'ITHEMAN.* n. s. [sithe and man.] One who uses a sithe; a mower.

Reapers cutting downe come in every field;
sithemen labouring hard.

Peacham, Gard. of Eloquence, (1577.) sign. P. ii. b.
The stooping sitheman, that doth harb the field,
Thou mak'st wink sure; in night all creatures sleep. Marston, Malcontent.

S'ITHENCE.† adv. [sithen, sithen, Saxon.
Chaucer, sithen.] Since; in latter times.
This over-running and wasting of the realm was the beginning of all the other evils which sithence have afflicted that land. Spenser on Ireland.

S'ITTER.† n. s. [from sit.]

1. One that sits.
The Turks are great sitters, and seldom walk;
whereby they sweat less, and need bathing more.
Bacon.
2. One that watches, or goes not to bed.
Not a-bed, ladies? you're good sitters up.
Beaumont and F. Philaster.
3. A bird that broods.

The oldest hens are reckoned the best sitters;
and the youngest the best layers. Mortimer.

S'ITTING. n. s. [from sit.]

1. The posture of sitting on a seat.
2. The act of resting on a seat.
Thou knowest my down-sitting, and mine uprising. Psalms.
3. A time at which one exhibits himself to a painter.
Few good pictures have been finished at one sitting; neither can a good play be produced at a heat. Dryden.
4. A meeting of an assembly.
I'll write you down;
The which shall point you forth at every sitting,
What you must say. Shakespeare.
I wish it may be at that sitting concluded, unless the necessity of the time press it. Bacon.

5. A course of study uninterrupted.
For the understanding of any one of St. Paul's epistles, I read it all through at one sitting. Locke.
6. A time for which one sits, as at play, or work, or a visit.
What more than madness reigns,
When one short sitting many hundreds drains!
And not enough is left him to supply
Board-wages, or a footman's livery. Dryden.

7. Incubation.
Whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male bird takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough, and amuses her with his songs, during the whole time of her sitting. Addison.

SITUATE. part. adj. [from situs, Lat.]

1. Placed with respect to any thing else.
He was resolved to chuse a war, rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being so great and opulent a duchy, and situate so opportunely to annoy England. Bacon.
Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden.
The eye is a part so artificially composed, and commodiously situate, as nothing can be contrived better for use, ornament, or security.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Placed; consisting.
Earth hath this variety from heaven,
Of pleasure situate in hill or dale. Milton, P. L.

SITUATION. n. s. [from situate; situation,
French.]

1. Local respect; position.
Prince Cesarini has a palace in a pleasant situation, and set off with many beautiful walks.
Addison on Italy.
2. Condition; state.
Though this is a situation of the greatest ease and tranquillity in human life, yet this is by no means fit to be the subject of all men's petitions to God.
Rogers, Sermon.

3. Temporary state; circumstances. Used of persons in a dramatick scene.

SIX.† adj. [six, Sax. sex, Su. Goth. saihs, M. Goth. shesh, Persian.] Twice three;
one more than five.

No incident in the piece or play but must carry on the main design; all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when Nature can do her work with five. Dryden.

SIX.* n. s. The number six.

That of six hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural consideration, as being a perfect number.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
SIX and seven. To be at six and seven, is to be in a state of disorder and confusion. A ludicrous expression, that has been long in use.

All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven. Shaks.

In 1588, there sat in the see of Rome a fierce thundering friar, that would set all at six and seven, or at six and five, if you allude to his name.
Bacon.

What blinder bargain e'er was driven,
Or wager laid at six and seven? Hudibras.
John once turned his mother out of doors, to his great sorrow; for his affairs went on at six and sevens. Arbutnot.

The goddess would no longer wait;
But, rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven.
Harness'd in her doves, and flew to heaven. Swift.

SIXFOLD.* adj. [six-peals, Sax.] Six times told.

SIXPENCE. n. s. [six and pence.] A coin;
half a shilling.

Where have y left the money that I gave you?
Oh! — sixpence that I had. Shakespeare.
The wisest man might blush,
If D — lov'd sixpence more than he. Pope.

SIXPENNY.* adj. Worth sixpence.
Slave, dost thou think I am a sixpenny jug?
Preston, Trag. of Cambises, (1561.)
Your sinful, sixpenny mechanicks.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady, Ind.
SIXSCORE. adj. [six and score.] Six times twenty.

Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit.
Sandys.

The crown of Spain hath enlarged the boundaries thereof within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans. Bacon.

SIXTEEN. adj. [*six*tyne, Saxon.] Six and ten.

It turned the voice thirteen times; and I have heard of others that it would return sixteen times.

If men lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about sixteen or eighteen.
J. Taylor.

SIXTEENTH. adj. [*six*tyoða, Saxon.] The sixth after the tenth; the ordinal of sixteen.

The first lot came forth to Jehoiah, the sixteenth to Immer. 1 Chron. xxiv. 14.

SIXTH. adj. [*six*ta, Saxon.] The first after the fifth; the ordinal of six.

You are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take
A sixth, letting them thrive again. Shakespeare.

There succeeded to the kingdom of England
James the Sixth, then king of Scotland. Bacon.

SIXTH. n. s. [from the adjective.] A sixth part.

Only the other half would have been a tolerable seat for rational creatures, and five-sixths of the whole globe would have been rendered useless.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

SIXTHLY. adv. [from six.] In the sixth place.

Sixthly, living creatures have more diversity of organs than plants. Bacon.

SIXTIETH. adj. [*six*tiexoða, Saxon.] The tenth six times repeated; the ordinal of sixty.

Let the appearing circle of the fire be three foot diameter, and the time of one entire circulation of it the sixtieth part of a minute, in a whole day there will be but 86,400 such parts. Digby on Bodies.

SIXTY. adj. [*six*ty, Saxon.] Six times
ten.

When the boats were come within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther. Bacon.

Of years 7 times 9, or the year sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SIXZABLE.* adj. [from six.] Of considerable bulk. See SIZEABLE.

The whole was drawn out, and digested into a sizeable volume. Hurd, Life of Warburton.

SIZE. n. s. [perhaps rather cise, from incise, Lat. or from assise, French.]

1. Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.

I ever verified my friends,

With all the size that verity

Would without lapsing suffer. Shaks. Coriol.

If any decayed ship be new made, it is more fit to make her a size less than bigger. Raleigh.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,

The linckstots touch, the pond'r about ball expires. Dryden.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

The marital goddess,

Like thee, Telemachus, in voice and size,

With speed divine, from street to street she flies. Pope.

2. [Assise, old French.] A settled quantity. In the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table:

whence they say a sizer at Cambridge.

'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,

To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,

And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt

Against my coming in. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. Figurative bulk; condition.

This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less size and quality. L'Estrange.

They do not consider the difference between elaborate discourses, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, for the middling or lower size of people. Swift.

4. [Sisa, Italian.] Any viscous or glutinous substance.

To SIZE† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to increase the bulk of.

Can you confess to your penurious uncle,

In his full face of love, to be so strict

A niggard to your commons, that you're fair

To size your belly out with shoulder fees?

Beaumont and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

2. To adjust; to arrange according to size.

The foxes weigh the geese they carry,

And ere they venture on a stream,

Know how to size themselves and them. Hudibras.

Two troops so match'd were never to be found,

Such bodies built for strength, of equal age,

In stature siz'd. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

3. [From assise.] To settle; to fix.

There was a statute for dispersing the standard of the exchequer throughout England; thereby to size weights and measures. Bacon, Hen. VII.

4. To cover with glutinous matter; to besmear with size.

When we treat of sizing and stiffening.

Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 294.

SIZED. adj. [from size.] Having a particular magnitude.

What my love is, proof hath made you know,

And as my love is siz'd, my fear is so. Shaks.

That will be a great horse to a Welshman, which is but a small one to a Fleming; having, from the different breed of their countries, taken several sized ideas, to which they compare their great and their little. Locke.

SIZABLE. adj. [from size.] Reasonably bulky; of just proportion to others.

He should be purged, sweated, vomited, and starved, till he come to a sizeable bulk. Arbuthnot.

SIZER, or SERVITOR.† n. s. A certain rank of students in the university of Cambridge. See SERVITOR.

Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 294.

SIZERS. n. s. See SCISSARS.

A buttrice and pincers, a hammer and nail,

An apron and sizers for head and for tail. Tusser.

SIZINESS. n. s. [from sizy.] Glutinousness; viscosity.

In rheumatisms, the siziness passes off thick contents in the urine, or glutinous sweats.

Floyer on the Humours.

Cold is capable of producing a siziness and viscosity in the blood. Arbuthnot.

SIZY. adj. [from size.] Viscous; glutinous.

The blood is sizy, the alkaliescent salts in the serum producing coriaceous concretions.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

SKADDLE. n. s. [scæðniſe, Saxon; scath is harm; thence stathle, scaddle.] Hurt; damage. Dict.

SKADDLE.* adj. [from the substantive.] Mischievous; ravenous. In Kent, spoken of dogs that are apt to steal; in the north, of young horses that fly out. See Ray and Grose, in V. SCADDE.

SKADDONS. n. s. The embryos of bees. Bailey.

SKAIN.† n. s. [esaigne, Fr.] A knot

SKAIN.† n. s. [of thread or silk wound and doubled.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skain of sley'd silk, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse?

Shakspeare.

Our stile should be like a skain of silk, to be found by the right thread, not ravell'd or perplexed. Then all is a knot, a heap. B. Jonson.

Besides, so lazy a brain as mine is, grows soon weary when it has so entangled a skain as this to unwind. Digby.

SKAINSMATE.† n. s. [I suppose from skain, or skean, a knife, and mate. Dr. Johnson. — The commentators explain the word, in the example, by cut-throat companions, from skean, a knife or dagger; to which Mr. Douce objects; and offers the following conjecture, but not with entire confidence in its propriety: "It will be recollected that there are skains of thread; so that the good nurse may perhaps mean nothing more than sempstresses, a word not always used in the most honourable acceptance. She had before stated that she was none of his flirt-gills." Illustr. of Shakspeare, ii. 188. — The following notice of skainsmate may not be overpassed: "One who assists another in winding off a skain of silk; for it must be done by two: and these among the weavers are looked upon as the lowest kind of people." Warner's Lett. to Garrick on a Gloss. to Shakspeare, 1768. p. 80.] A messmate; a companion.

Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt-gills; I am none of his skainsmates. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

To SKALE. v. a. To disperse. Our northern word. See To SCALE.

SKAR, or SKARE.* adj. Wild; timid; shy. Thus given by Grose as a northern word. It is in fact scared, frightened.

SKATE. n. s. A sort of shoe armed with iron for sliding on the ice. See SCATE.

To SKATE.† To slide on scates. See To SCATE.

SKATE. n. s. A flat sea-fish. See SCATE.

SKEAN.† n. s. [Irish and Erse; jægan, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius notices the Irish sgian, or skian, and therewith the Icel. skeina, to wound.] A short sword; a knife.

Any man that is disposed to mischief, — may under his mantle privily carry his head-piece, skean, or pistol, to be always in readiness. Spenser on Ireland.

The Irish did not fail in courage or fierceness, but being only armed with darts and skeines, it was rather an execution than a fight upon them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

A cubit at least the length of their skeans: Swift, Descr. of an Irish Feast.

SKEAL.* n. s. [schale, German, patera, poculum patulum; vox Longobardica. Wachter.] A shallow wooden vessel for holding milk or cream. Gloucestershire, according to Grose. It is also so employed in other parts of England; and, as he observes under another form of the word, skiel, is, in the west, a beer-cooler, used in brewing.

To SKEER. v. a. To mow lightly over: applied to pastures which have been summer-eaten, never to meadows. In a neuter sense, to move along quickly, and slightly touching. Jennings's West Country Words. It is another form of shear. [scipian, Sax.]

SKEG. n. s. A wild plum.

SKEGGER. n. s.

Little salmon, called skeggers, are bred of such sick salmon that might not go to the sea, and though they abound, yet never thrive to any bigness. Walton, Angler.

SKELETON. n. s. [σκελετος, Gr.]

1. [In anatomy.] The bones of the body preserved together as much as can be in their natural situation. Quincy.

When rattling bones together fly, From the four corners of the sky; When sinews o'er the skeletons are spread, Those cloth'd with flesh, and life inspires the dead. Dryden.

Though the patient may from other causes be exceedingly emaciated, and appear as a ghastly skeleton, covered only with a dry skin, yet nothing but the ruin and destruction of the lungs denominates a consumption. Blackmore.

I thought to meet, as late as Heaven might grant, A skeleton, ferocious, tall, and gaunt, Whose loose teeth in their naked sockets shook, And grin'd terrific, a Sardonian look. Hart.

2. The compages of the principal parts. The great structure itself, and its great integrals, the heavenly and elementary bodies, are framed in such a position and situation, the great skeleton of the world. Hale.

The schemes of any of the arts or sciences may be analyzed in a sort of skeleton, and represented upon tables, with the various dependencies of their several parts. Watts.

SKELLUM.† n. s. [schelme, Fr. "a knave, rascal, &c. from a German word that signifies wicked." Cotgrave. The German schelm, to which Skinner also has referred, means primarily the carcass of an animal cast out, and thence its application to a worthless person. See Wachter in V. SCHELM. And Dr. Jamieson in the Scottish SHELM. And Spegel's Su. Goth. Gloss. in V. SKELM.] A villain; a scoundrel.

Sir Richard Greenvil (in 1643) having deserted to the king at Oxford, they declared him traitor, rogue, villain, and skellum.

Biograph. Britann. 2306.

TO SKÉLLY.* v. n. [skaela, Icel. schielen, Germ. scheele ooghen, Teut. oculi limi, obliqui, &c.] To squint. See Brockett's N. C. Words.

SKÉLP.* n. s. [skelfu, Icel. to fright; occasionally however used in the sense of to strike. Dr. Jamieson.] A blow; a smart stroke. Craven Dialect, and Brockett's N. C. Words. It appears to be also a Suffolk word. Moor's Suff. Gloss. TO SKEN.* v. n. To squint. Westmoreland and Craven Dialects.

SKÉP.† n. s.

1. A sort of basket, narrow at the bottom, and wide at the top, to fetch corn in. [cep, Saxon, cumera. Lye.]

A pitchfork, a doongfork, sieve, shep, and a bin. Tusser.

2. In Scotland, the repositories where the bees lay their honey is still called shep. Dr. Johnson. — A bee-hive is also a shep in some parts of England. [seip, Gael. a bee-hive. Shaw.]

SKÉPTICK.† n. s. [σκεπτικός, Gr. sceptique, Fr. Notwithstanding the authority of Dr. Johnson in writing skeptick, skeptical, &c. the old form of sceptick, &c. maintains its ground.] One who doubts, or pretends to doubt of every thing.

He is a scepticks, and dares hardly give credit to his senses. Bp. Hall, Charact. (ed. 1608), p. 151. Bring the cause unto the bar; whose authority none must disclaim, and least of all those scepticks in religion. Dec. of Piety.

Survey

Nature's extended face, then, scepticks, say, In this wide field of wonders can you find No art? Blackmore.

With too much knowledge for the sceptick's side, With too much weakness for the stoick's pride, Man hangs between. Pope, Ess. on Man. The dogmatist is sure of every thing, and the sceptick believes nothing. Watts, Logick.

SKÉPTICAL. adj. [from sceptick.] Doubtful; pretending to universal doubt.

May the Father of mercies confirm the sceptical and wavering minds, and so prevent us, that stand fast, in all our doings, and further us with his continual help. Bentley.

SKÉPTICALLY.* adv. [from sceptical.] With doubts; in a sceptical manner.

There are those who do not abandon themselves to desperate atheism, nor sceptically cast off all care of religion. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. III.

SKÉPTICISM. n. s. [scepticisme, Fr. from sceptick.] Universal doubt; pretence or profession of universal doubt.

I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatick way. Dryden.

TO SKÉPTICISE.* v. n. [from skeptick.] To pretend to doubt of every thing.

You can afford to scepticise, where no one else will so much as hesitate.

Ld. Shaftsbury, Mor. P. II. § 1.

TO SKETCH.† v. a. [schetsen, Dutch; but Dr. Johnson derives our verb from the noun; and Mr. Tooke tells us that our noun, and the Dutch schets, and the Ital. schizzo, and even the Fr. esquisse, are all the Sax. participle ȝeatan, from ȝeatan, to throw, to cast forth, to throw out. See the Div. of Purl. ii. 144. Of the verb neither Dr. Johnson, nor Mr. Tooke, has taken any notice. Wachter, who refers the German schitz (a sketch) to schatten, a shadow, observes under the latter word that the Dutch have formed the verb schetsen, to shadow, to express in rude signs, from the ancient scato, (Francic.) a shadow; whence schets, a rough draught, an outline; "inchoati operis rudis delineatio, cretâ, carbone, vel penicillo facta." He then says, that the German painters call a delineation of this kind schitz or skitze, in imitation of the Dutch, who particularly studied painting; and that the Ital. schizzo, and Fr. esquisse, are from the same original.]

1. To draw, by tracing the outline.

If a picture is daubed with many glaring colours, the vulgar eye admires it; whereas he judges very contemptuously of some admirable design sketched out only with a black pencil, though by the hand of Raphael. Watts, Logick.

2. To plan, by giving the first or principal notion.

The reader I'll leave in the midst of silence, to contemplate those ideas which I have only sketch'd, and which every man must finish for himself. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

SKETCH.† n. s. [schets, Dutch, from the verb schetsen. See TO SKETCH.] An outline; a rough draught; a first plan.

I intend only what the Dutch painters call a schytz, and not a perfect delineation or draught. Pett's Pref. to Bp. Barlow's Rem. (1693), p. ult.

The first schetse of a comedy, called The Paradox. Dr. Pope's Life of Bp. Ward, (1697), p. 149.

I shall not attempt a character of his present majesty, having already given an imperfect sketch of it. Addison.

As the lightest sketch, if justly trac'd, Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd, So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.

SKREW.* adj. [skiaew, or skæw, Dan. skæf, Goth. from skæ. See ASKEW. Dr. Johnson notices this adjective in the form of skue, but says that no satisfactory derivation of it is found.] Oblique; distorted.

Here's a gallimaufry of speech indeed. — I remember about the year 1602 many used this skew kind of language.

Brewer, Com. of Ling. (ed. 1657), D. 7. SKEW.* adv. Awry. Huloet.

TO SKEW.* v. a.

1. To look obliquely upon; figuratively, to notice slightly.

Our service Neglected, and look'd lamely on, and skew'd at With a few honourable words. Beaumont and Fl. Loy. Subject.

2. To shape or form in an oblique way.

Windows broad within and narrow without, or skewed and closed. 1 Kings, vi. 4. (margin.)

TO SKEW.* v. n.

1. To walk obliquely: still used in some parts of the north.

Child, you must walk straight, without skiewing and shailing to every step you set. L'Estrange.

2. To look obliquely; to squint. Used also in the north and in Cheshire. Wilbraham and Brockett.

3. To look suspiciously or uncharitably.

Whenever we find ourselves ready to fret at every cross occurrence, — to slug in our own performances, to skew at the infirmities of others; take we notice first of the impatience of our own spirits, and condemn it.

Bp. Sanderson's 21 Sermon. (1681), p. 111.

SKÉWER. n. s. [skere, Danish.] A wooden or iron pin, used to keep meat in form.

Sweetbreads and collops were with skewers prick'd About the sides. Dryden, Iliad.

Once may overlook A skewer sent to table by my cook. King.

From his rug the skewer he takes, And on the stick ten equal notches makes. Swift. Send up meat well stuck with skewers, to make it look round; and an iron skewer, when rightly employed, will make it look handsomer.

Swift, Dir. to the Cook.

TO SKÉWER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with skewers.

SKIFF.† n. s. [schiff, German; esquif, Fr. scapha, Lat. scapha, Gr.] A small light boat.

If in two skiffs of cork a loadstone and steel be placed within the orb of their activities, the one doth not move, the other standing still; but both steer into each other. Brown.

In a poor skiff he pass'd the bloody main, Chock'd with the slaughter'd bodies of his train. Dryden.

On Garrway cliffs

A savage race, by shipwreck fed, Lie waiting for the founder'd skiffs, And strip the bodies of the dead. Swift.

TO SKIFF.* v. a. [from the noun.] To pass over in a small light boat.

They two have cabin'd

In many as dangerous as poor a corner, Peril and want contending; they have skiff'd Torrents, whose roaring tyranny and power I the least of these was dreadful.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

SKILFUL. adj. [skill and full.] Knowing; qualified with skill; possessing any art; dexterous; able. It is, in the following examples, used with of, at, and in, before the subject of skill. Of seems poetical, at ludicrous, in popular and proper.

His father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold and silver. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

They shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation, to weeping.

Amos, v. 16.

Will Vafer is skilful at finding out the ridiculous side of a thing, and placing it in a new light.

Taitler.

Say, Stella, feel you no content, Reflecting on a life well spent? Your skilful hand employ'd to save Despairing wretches from the grave: And then supporting with your store Those whom you dragg'd from death before.

Swift.

Instructors should not only be skilful in those sciences which they teach; but have skill in the method of teaching, and patience in the practice.

Watts on the Mind.

SKILFULLY. adv. [from skilful.] With skill; with art; with uncommon ability; dexterously.

As soon as he came near me, in fit distance, with much fury, but with fury skilfully guided, he ran upon me.

Ulysses builds a ship with his own hands, as skilfully as a shipwright. Broome.

SKILFULNESS. n. s. [from skilful.] Art; ability; dexterousness.

He fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands. Ps. lxxviii. 72.

SKILL.† n. s. [skil, Icelandic.]

1. Knowledge of any practice or art; readiness in any practice; knowledge; dexterity; artfulness.

Skill in the weapon is nothing without sack. Shakspeare.

Of nothing profits more
Than self-esteem grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd; of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head.

Milton, P. L.
I will from wond'rous principles ordain
A race unlike the first, and try my skill again.

Phocion the Athenian general, then ambassador from the state, by his great wisdom and skill at negotiations, diverted Alexander from the conquest of Athens, and restored the Athenians to his favour. Swift.

2. Any particular art.

Learned in one skill, and in another kind of learning unskilful. Hooker.

3. Reason; cause. [scýle, Saxon.] This is a very ancient meaning of the word.

He, for the same skile, sette not his name tofore.

Wicliffe, Prolog. to the Heb.

You have

As little skill to fear, as I have purpose

To put you to 't. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

To SKILL.† v. n. [skilia, Icelandic.]

1. To be knowing in; to be dexterous at; to know how; not invariably with of, as Dr. Johnson has stated it; but usually so.

They that skill not of so heavenly matter,
All that they know not, envy or admire.

Spenser.

Here is not any among us that can skill to hew timber.

1 Kings, v. 6.

The overseers were all that could skill of instruments of music.

2 Chron. xxxiv. 12.

One man of wisdom, experience, learning, and direction, may judge better in those things that he can skill of, than ten thousand others that be ignorant. Whitgift.

2. [Skilia, Icelandic, signifies also to distinguish.] To differ; to make difference; to interest; to matter. Not now in use.

Whether the commandments of God in Scripture be general or special, it skilleth not. Hooker.

What skills it, if a bag of stones or gold
About thy neck do drown thee? raise thy head,

Take stars for money; stars not to be told
By any art, yet to be purchased.

None is so wasteful as the scraping dame;
She loseth three for one; her soul, rest, fame.

Herbert.

He intending not to make a summer business of it, but a resolute war, without term prefixed, until he had recovered France, it skilled not much when he began the war, especially having Calais at his back where he might winter.

Bacon.

To SKILL.* v. a. To know; to understand. Still used in the north. Craven Dial. and Brockett.

I skill not what it is.

Beaum. and Fl. Love's Cure.

That age was so far from skilling descent of the fugues, that they were not come up to counterpoint.

Gregory, Posthum. p. 116.

SKILLED. adj. [from skill.] Knowing; dexterous; acquainted with: with of poetically, with in popularly.

Of these nor skill'd nor studious. Milton, P. L.
Moses, in all the Egyptian arts was skill'd,
When heavenly power that chosen vessel fill'd.

Denham.

He must be very little skilled in the world, who thinks that a voluble tongue shall accompany any good understanding.

Locke.

SKILLLESS.† adj. [from skill.] Wanting skill; artless. Not now in use; but formerly very common.

Wisdom, farewell! the skillless man's direction. Sidney, Arc. b. 4.

These rude youths, and skillless minions of the court.

North, Tr. of Philosophers at Court, (1575), p. 16.
Nor have I seen

More that I may call men than you:

How features are abroad I'm skillless of. Shaks.

Jealously what might befal my travel,
Being skillless in these parts; to such a stranger,
Unguided and unfriended, often prove

Rough and inhospitable. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Mis-shapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skillless soldier's flask

Is set on fire. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

SKILLET. n. s. [escuelle, Fr.] A small kettle or boiler.

When light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid foil with wanton dulness

My speculative and offic'd instruments,

Let house-wives make a skillet of my helm.

Shakspeare, Othello.

Break all the wax, and in a kettle or skillet set it over a soft fire.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

SKILT.† n. s. A word used by Cleaveland, of which I know not either the etymology or meaning. Dr. Johnson. — I suppose it to mean difference. See the second sense of To SKILL.

Smeety-muuns! The goblin makes me start:

I' the name of rabbi Abraham, what art?

Syriack? Or Arabick? Or Welsh? What skill?

Ape all the bricklayers that Babel built.

Cleaveland.

To SKIM. v. a. [properly to scum, from scum; Fr. escume.]

1. To clear off from the upper part, by passing a vessel a little below the surface.

My coz Tom, or his coz Mary,
Who hold the plough or skim the dairy,
My fav'rite books and pictures sell. Prior.

2. To take by skimming.

She boils in kettles must of wine, and skims
With leaves the dregs that overflow the brims.

Dryden.

His principal studies were after the works of Titian, whose cream he has skimmed.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The surface of the sea is covered with its bubbles, while it rises, which they skim off into their boats, and afterwards separate in pots. Addison.

Whilome I've seen her skim the cloated cream,
And press from spongy curds the milky stream.

Gay.

3. To brush the surface slightly; to pass very near the surface.

Nor seeks in air her humble flight to raise,
Content to skim the surface of the seas. Dryden.

The swallow skims the river's wat'ry face. Dryden.

A winged eastern blast just skimming o'er
The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore.

Prior.

4. To cover superficially. Improper. Per-haps originally skin.

Dangerous flats in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray.

Dryden.

To SKIM. v. n. To pass lightly; to glide along.

Thin airy shapes o'er the furrows rise,

A dreadful scene! and skim before his eyes.

Addison.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labours, and the words move slow;
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er the unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Pope.

Such as have active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile spirit, will fix nothing in their memory.

Watts on the Mind.

They skim over a science in a very superficial survey, and never lead their disciples into the depths of it.

Watts.

SKIM.* n. s. Scum; refuse.

Although Philip took delight in this skim of men, [gross flatterers,] yet could they never draw him by their charming to incur those vices which his son ran into.

Bryskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606), p. 108.

SKIMBLESKAMBLE. adj. [A cant word formed by reduplication from scamble.]

Wandering; wild.

A couching lion and a ramping cat,

And such a deal of skimbleskamble stuff;

As puts me from my faith. Shakspeare.

SKIMMER.† n. s. [from skim.]

1. A shallow vessel with which the scum is taken off.

Wash your wheat in three or four waters, stirring it round; and with a skimmer, each time, take off the light. Mortimer.

2. One who skims over a book or subject: a ludicrous word.

There are different degrees of skimmers: first, he who goes no farther than the title-page; secondly, he who proceeds to the contents and index, &c.

Skelton, Deism Revel. Dial. viii.

SKIMMILK. n. s. [skim and milk.] Milk from which the cream has been taken.

Then cheese was brought: says Slouch, this e'en shall roll;

This is skimmilk, and therefore it shall go. King.

SKIMMINGTON.* To ride skimmington is a vulgar phrase, which means a kind of burlesque procession in ridicule of a man who suffers himself to be beat by his wife. In the north, riding the stang has a similar meaning. See STANG. Skimmington has been supposed to be the name of some notorious scold of the olden time. See Brand's Pop. Antiq. ii. 110.

When the young people ride the skimmington, There is a general trembling in a town:
Not only he, for whom the person rides,
Suffers, but they sweep other doors besides;
And by that hieroglyphick does appear,
That the good woman is the master there!

King, Miscell. p. 590.

SKIN.† n. s. [skind, Danish; skinn, Su. Goth.]

1. The natural covering of the flesh. It consists of the cuticle, outward skin, or scarf skin, which is thin and insensible, and the cutis, or inner skin, extremely sensible.

The body is consumed to nothing, the skin feeling rough and dry like leather.

Harvey on Consumptions.

The priest on skins of off'rings takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Hide; pelt; that which is taken from animals to make parchment or leather.

On whose top he strow'd

A wilde goat's shaggy skin; and then bestow'd
His own couch on it. Chapman.

3. The body; the person: in ludicrous speech.

We meet with many of these dangerous civilities, wherein 'tis hard for a man to save both his skin and his credit.

L'Estrange.

4. A husk.

To SKIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To flay; to strip or divest of the skin.

The beavers run to the door to make their escape, are there entangled in the nets, seized by the Indians, and immediately skinned.

Ellis's Voyage.

2. To cover with the skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place, Whilst rank corruption, mining all within, Infects unseen.

Shakespeare.

Authority, though it err like others, Has yet a kind of medicine in itself, That skins the vice o' the top.

Shakespeare.

The wound was skinned; but the strength of his thigh was not restored.

Dryden.

It only patches up and skins it over, but reaches not to the bottom of the sore.

Locke.

The last stage of healing, or skinning over, is called cicatrization.

Sharp, Surgery.

3. To cover superficially.

What I took for solid earth, was only heaps of rubbish, skinned over with a covering of vegetables.

Addison.

SKINDEEP.* adj. [skin and deep.] Slight; superficial.

There is a power in virtue to attract our adherence to her before all the transient and skin-deep pleasures that we fondly search after.

Feltham, Res. ii. 57.

SKINFINT. n. s. [skin and flint.] A nigardly person.

SKINK. n. s. [scenc, Saxon.]

1. Drink; any thing potable.

2. Pottage.

Scotch skink, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and sinews of beef, but long boiled.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To SKINK. v. n. [scencan, Sax.] To serve drink. Both noun and verb are wholly obsolete.

SKINKER. n. s. [from skink.] One that serves drink.

I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under skinker; one that never spake other English in his life, than eight shillings and sixpence, and you are welcome, sir.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Hang up all the poor hop-drinkers,

Cries old Sim, the king of skinkers.

B. Jonson.

His mother took the cup the clown had fill'd: The reconciler bowl went round the board, Which, empty'd, the rude skinker still restor'd.

Dryden.

SKINLESS.* adj. [skin and less.] Having a slight skin: as, the skinless pear. See PEAR.

SKINNED. adj. [from skin.] Having skin; hard; callous.

When the ulcer becomes foul, and discharges a nasty ichor, the edges in process of time tuck in, and, growing skinned and hard, give it the name of callous.

Sharp, Surgery.

SKINNER. n. s. [from skin.] A dealer in skins, or pelts.

SKINNESS. n. s. [from skinny.] The quality of being skinny.

SKINNY. adj. [from skin.] Consisting only of skin; wanting flesh.

Her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Least the asperity of these cartilages of the windpipe should hurt the gullet, which is tender, and of a skinny substance, these annular gristles are not made round; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way.

Ray on the Creation.

His fingers meet

In skinny films, and shape his oary feet.

Addison, Ovid.

To SKIP.† v. n. [squittire, Italian; esquiver, Fr. I know not whether it may not come, as a diminutive, from scape. Dr. Johnson. — The derivation given by Dr. Johnson is fanciful and unfounded. Serenius satisfactorily refers our word to the Icel. skopa, to run up and down.] To fetch quick bounds; to pass by quick leaps; to bound lightly and joyfully.

Was not Israel a derision unto thee? Was he found among thieves? For since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy.

Jer. xlviii. 27.

The queen, bound with love's powerful'st charm, Sat with Pigwiggan arm in arm:

Her merry maids that thought no harm, About the room were skipping.

Drayton.

At spur or switch no more he skipt, Or mended pace, than Spaniard whipt.

Hudibras.

The earth-born race O'er ev'ry hill and verdant pasture stray, Skip o'er the lawns, and by the rivers play.

Blackmore.

John skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, peeping into every cranny.

Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Thus each hand promotes the pleasing pain, And quick sensations skip from vein to vein.

Pope.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day, Had he thy reason, would he skip and play?

Pope.

To SKIP over. To pass without notice.

Pope Pius II. was wont to say, that the former popes did wisely to set the lawyers a work to debate, whether the donation of Constantine the Great to Sylvester of St. Peter's patrimony were good or valid in law or no; the better to skip over the matter in fact, whether there was ever any such thing at all or no.

Bacon, Apoph.

A gentleman made it a rule, in reading, to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end.

Swift.

To SKIP. v. a.

1. To miss; to pass.

Let not thy sword skip one:

Pity not honour'd age for his white beard;

He is an usurer.

Shakespeare, Timon.

They who have a mind to see the issue, may skip these two chapters, and proceed to the following.

Burnet.

2. In the following example skip is active or neuter, as over is thought an adverb or preposition.

Although to engage very far in such a metaphysical speculation were unfit, when I only endeavour to explicate fluidity, yet we dare not skip it over, lest we be accused of overseeing it.

Boyle.

SKIP. n. s. [from the verb.] A light leap or bound.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he had said his strength had not yet forsaken him.

Sidney.

You will make so large a skip as to cast yourself from the land into the water.

More against Atheism.

SKIPJACK.† n. s. [skip and jack.] An upstart.

A way was opened to every skipjack.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) Ll. ii. b. The want of shame or brains does not presently entitle every little skipjack to the board's end in the cabinet.

L'Estrange.

SKIPPENNEL. n. s. [skip and kennel.] A lackey; a footboy.

SKIPPER.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A dancer.

Huloet.

2. A youngling; a thoughtless person.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I: — Skipper, stand back; 'tis age that nourisheth.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

3. [Schipper, Dutch.] A shipmaster; a shipboy.

Are you not afraid of being drowned too? No, not I, says the skipper.

L'Estrange.

No doubt you will return very much improved. — Yes, refined like a Dutch skipper from a whale-fishing.

Congreve.

4. The hornfish, so called in some places.

SKIPPET. n. s. [probably from skiff.] A small boat. Not used.

'Upon the bank they sitting did espy

A dainty damsel, dressing of her hair,

By whom a little skippet floating did appear.

Spenser, F. Q.

SKIPPINGLY.* adv. [from skip.] By skips and leaps.

Huloet.

If one read skippingly and by snatches, and not take the thread of the story along, it must needs puzzle and distract the memory.

Howell, Instr. For. Trav. p. 39.

To SKIRL.* v. n. To scream out. Common in the north of England. Perhaps from shirl, our old word for shrill. See SHRILL.

SKIRMISH.† n. s. [from ys and carm, Welsh, the shout of war: whence ysgarm, and ysgarmes, old British words.

Maes a naw 'sgarmes a wnan, says an ancient writer. Escarmouche, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Junius deduces it from the Greek κλῆμα, (karmé), a battle, prefixing the s. Others from the German verb schirmen, to skirmish. Our word approaches nearest in form the ancient Fr. skermuche, "petit combat." Our word was formerly written skaramouche. See Harington's Nugæ Antiquæ, vol. i. p. 282.]

1. A slight fight; less than a set battle. When we shall wrestle with death, if we winne that skirmish we have enough.

Potter, Sermon at Sir E. Seymour's Bur. (1613), p. 18.

One battle, yes, a skirmish more there was

With adverse fortune fought by Carlismand;

Her subjects most revolt.

Philips, Briton.

2. A contest; a contention.

There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit.

Shakespeare.

These skirmishes expire not with the first propugnators of the opinions: they perhaps began as single duellers; but then they soon have their partisans and abettors, who not only enhance but intail the feud to posterity.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

To SKIRMISH.† v. n. [escarmoucher, Fr. from the noun.] To fight loosely; to fight in parties before or after the shock of the main battle.

Ready to charge, and to retire at will;

Though broken, scatter'd, fled, they skirmish still.

Fairfax.

Ere the war began,

He lightly skirmishes on every string

Charg'd with a flying touch.

Croshaw, Musick's Duel.

A gentleman volunteer, skirmishing with the enemy before Worcester, was run through his arm in the middle of the biceps with a sword, and shot with a musket-ball in the same shoulder.

Wiseman, Surgery.

SKIRMISHING.* n. s. [from skirmish.] Act of fighting loosely.

Alarum: skirmishings. Talbot pursueth the Dauphin.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

Rhetorical flowers — are but light skirmishings, and not serious contentings, in matters of religion.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 42.

I'll pass by the little skirmishings on either side.

Atterbury.

SKIRMISH.† n. s. [from skirmish.] He who skirmishes. Barret.

To SKIRR.† v. a. [This word seems to be derived from scip, Saxon, pure, clean; unless it shall be rather deduced from scipdow. Dr. Johnson. — The Saxon word, cited by Dr. Johnson, has no connection with skirr. The Greek σκιρτάω, (skirtao), is to jump or run about, and derived from σκαίω, (skairo), to leap; but perhaps our word is from the Italian scorrere, "to run here and there." Flofio's Dict. This is the exact sense of the neuter verb.] To scour; to ramble over in order to clear.

Send out more horses, skirr the country round.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To SKIRR.† v. n. To scour; to scud; to run in haste. This word is used in some parts of the north for to slide swiftly.

We'll make them skirr away as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Light shadows,

That, in a thought, scur o'er the fields of corn.

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

SKIRRET.† n. s. [sisarum, Lat. Camden calls skirrets, skirworts. Ray, Rem. p. 152.] A plant.

Skirrets are a sort of roots propagated by seed. Mortimer.

SKIRRY.* See SKURRY.

SKIRT. n. s. [schoerte, Swedish.]

1. The loose edge of a garment; that part which hangs loose below the waist.

It's but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, side sleeves and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

As Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent.

1 Sam. vi. 27.

2. The edge of any part of the dress.

A narrow lace, or a small skirt of ruffled linen, which runs along the upper part of the stays before, and crosses the breast, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.

3. Edge; margin; border; extreme part.

He should seat himself at Athie, upon the skirt of that unquiet country. Spenser on Ireland.

Ye mists, that rise

From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,
Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
In honour to the world's great Author rise.

Milton, P. L.

Though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts

Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton, P. L.
The northern skirts that join to Syria have entered into the conquests or commerce of the four great empires; but that which seems to have secured the other is the stony and sandy deserts, through which no army can pass. Temple.

Upon the skirts

Of Arragon our squander'd troops he rallies.

Dryden.

To SKIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To border; to run along the edge.

Temple skirteth this hundred on the w. side. Carew.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champions rich'd,

With plenteous rivers and wide skirted meads,

We make thee lady. Shakespeare.

The middle pair

Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold.

Milton, P. L.

A spacious circuit on the hill there stood,
Level and wide, and skirted round with wood.

Addison.

Dark cypresses the skirting sides adorn'd,
And gloomy eugh-trees, which for ever mourn'd.

Harte.

SKIT.* n. s. [skats, Icel. a frolicsome, or pert woman.]

1. A light, wanton wench. The word is also used in Scotland.

[Herod] at the request of a dancing skit stroke off the head of St. John the Baptist.

Howard, (E. of North.) Def. ag. Sup. Proph. (1589.)

2. A reflection. [from the Sax. scitan, to cast forth. The word is now used for some jeer, or jibe, or covered imputation, thrown or cast upon any one. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 144.]

To SKIT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To cast reflections on. North. Grose.

SKI'TTISH.† adj. [skyg, Danish; schew, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Su. Goth. skyg, shy, as applied to a horse, from sky, to avoid, to shun. Serenius.]

1. Shy; easily frightened.

A skittish filly — fair enough for such a pack-saddle. Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

A restif skittish jade had gotten a trick of rising, starting, and flying out at his own shadow.

L'Estrange.

2. Wanton; volatile; hasty; precipitate.

[from skit. See SKIT.]

Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,

Sets all on hazard. Shakespeare.

He still resolv'd, to mend the matter,
T' adhere and cleave the obstinate;
And, still the skittisher and looser
Her freaks, appear'd to sit the closer. Hudibras.

3. Changeable; fickle.

Some men sleep in skittish fortune's hall,

While others play the ideots in her eyes. Shaks.

Such as I am, all true lovers are;

Unstead and skittish in all notions else,

Save in the constant image of the creature

That is below'd. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

What skittish things popular benevolence and popular applause have been always found to be, experience hath taught others.

Hammond, Works, iv. 547.

SKI'TTISHLY.† adv. [from skittish.] Wantonly; uncertainly; fickle. Sherwood.

The beasts were very plump, and skittishly played as they passed by; not knowing whither they were driven. Sitwat. of Parad. (1689.) p. 99.

SKI'TTISHNESS. n. s. [from skittish.] Wantonness; fickleness.

SKI'TTLES.* n. s. [formerly keels or kayles, and kettelpins. See KAYLE. "When shall our kittell-pins return again into the Grecian skytalls?" Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, 1649, p. 43.] Ninepins. No more the wherry feels my stroke so true;

At skittles, in a grizzle, can I play?

Watson, Ode to a Grizzle Wig.

SKONCE. n. s. [See SCONCE.]

Reinard ransacketh every corner of his wily skonce, and bestirreth the utmost of his nimble stumps to quit his coat from their jaws. Carew.

SKREED.* n. s. [skrida, Icel. A border of cloth. Craven Dialect.

To SKREAK, or SKRIKE.† See To SKREAK.

SKREEN. n. s. [escran, escrein, Fr. which Minsheu derives from secceruculum, Lat. Nimis violentus ut solet, says Skinner, which may be true as to one of the senses; but if the first sense of skreen be a kind of coarse sieve or riddle, it may perhaps come if not from cribrum, from some of the descendants of cermo.]

1. A riddle or coarse sieve.

A skuttle or skreen to rid soil fro' the corn.

Tusser.

2. Any thing by which the sun or weather is kept off.

To cheapen fans or buy a screen. Prior.

So long condemn'd to fires and screens,

You dread the waving of these greens. Anonymous.

3. Shelter; concealment.

Fenc'd from day, by night's eternal skreen;

Unknown to heaven, and to myself unseen. Dryden.

To SKREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To riddle; to sift. A term yet used among masons when they sift sand for mortar.

2. To shade from sun or light, or weather.

3. To keep off light or weather.

The curtains closely drawn, the light to skreen;

Thus cover'd with an artificial night,

Sleep did his office. Dryden.

The waters mounted up into the air: their interposition betwixt the earth and the sun skreen and fence off the heat, otherwise insupportable.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

4. To shelter; to protect.

Ajax interpos'd

His sevenfold shield, and skreen'd Laertes' son,

When the insulting Trojans urg'd him sore. Philips.

He that travels with them is to skreen them, and get them out when they have run themselves into the briars. Locke.

His majesty encouraged his subjects to make mouths at their betters, and afterwards skreened them from punishment. Spectator.

The scales, of which the scarf-skin is composed, are designed to fence the orifices of the secretory ducts of the military glands, and to skreen the nerves from external injuries. Cheyne.

To SKRINGE.*† v. a. [perhaps a corruption of skrew.] See To SKRUGE.

To SKRUGE.† v. a. [perhaps from the Dan. skranten, infirm, feeble; skranter, to be weakly.] Low; stunted. Craven Dialect.

SKRU'NTY.* adj. [perhaps from the Dan. skranten, infirm, feeble; skranter, to be weakly.] Low; stunted. Craven Dialect.

SKUE.† adj. [See SKREW.] Oblique; sidelong. It is most used in the adverb askue.

Several have imagined that this skue posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing; and that, if the poles had been erect to the plane of the ecliptic, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise. Bentley.

SKURRY.* n. s. [from To skirr.] Haste; impetuosity. "What a hurry-scurry!"

Brockett's N. C. Words, and Moor's Suffolk Words.

To SKUG.* To hide. See To SCUG.

To SKULK. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice. See To SCULK.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,

You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away. Dryden.

While publick good aloft in pomp they wield,

And private interest skulks behind the shield. Young.

SKULL. n. s. [skiola, Icelandic, a head.]

1. The bone that incloses the head: it is made up of several pieces, which, being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contains the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain. Quincy.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes,

Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the batter'd skull within the brains.

Dryden.
2. [Sceole, Saxon, a company.] A shoal.
See SCULL.

Repair to the river where you have seen them swim in skulls or shoals. Wallon.

1. A headpiece.

2. [Cassida, Lat.] A plant.

SKUTE. * n. s. [schuyt, Dutch.] A boat or small vessel.

They carried with them all the skutes and boats that might be found.

Sir R. Williams, Act. of the Low Countries, (1618), p. 114.

SKY. † n. s. [sky, Danish; from skya, Su. Goth. to cover.]

1. The region which surrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere. It is taken for the whole region without the earth. The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky.

Milton, P. L.
The maids of Argos, who with frantic cries,
And imitated howlings, fill'd the skies. Roscommon.
Raise all thy winds, with night involve the skies.

2. The heavens.

The thunder's bolt, you know,
Sky planted, batters all rebelling coasts,
Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

What is this knowledge but the sky stol'n fire,
For which the thief still chain'd in ice doth sit?

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high,
With adamantine columns threatens the sky. Dryden.

3. The weather; the climate.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.
We envy not the warmer climate that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies;

Nor at the coarseness of our heav'n repine,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiads shine.

4. [Sky, Su. Goth.] A cloud; a shadow.
She passeth, as it were, a sky,
All clean out of the lady's sight.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.
SKYEX. adj. [from sky. Not very elegantly formed.] Ethereal.

A breath thou art,
Servile to all the skyey influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflict.

Shaks. Meas. for Meas.
SKYCOLOUR. n. s. [sky and colour.] An azure colour; the colour of the sky.

A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of skycolour, but nothing near so high as the ceruleous tincture of silver.

Boyle.
SKYCOLOURED. adj. [sky and colour.] Blue; azure; like the sky.

This your Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water-nymphs are dressed in skycoloured garments.

Addison.
SKYDYED. adj. [sky and dye.] Coloured like the sky.

There figs, skydyed, a purple hue disclose. Pope.

SKYED. adj. [from sky.] Enveloped by the skies. This is unauthorized and inelegant.

The pale deluge floats
O'er the sky'd mountain to the shadowy vale.

Thomson.
SKYISH. adj. [from sky.] Coloured by the ether; approaching the sky.

Of this flat a mountain you have made,
T'o o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

SKYLARK. n. s. [sky and lark.] A lark that mounts and sings.

He next proceeded to the skylark, mounting up by a proper scale of notes, and afterwards falling to the ground with a very easy descent. Spectator.

SKYLIGHT. n. s. [sky and light.] A window placed in a room, not laterally, but in the ceiling.

A monstrous fowl dropt through the skylight, near his wife's apartment. Arbutnot and Pope.

SKYROCKET. n. s. [sky and rocket.] A kind of firework, which flies high, and burns as it flies.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a skyrocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison.

SLAB. † adj. [A word, I suppose, of the same original with slabber, or slaver. See TO SLABBER. The Teut. slabbe is a slabbering-bib.] Thick; viscous; glutinous.

Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab;
Make the gruel thick and slab. Shakespeare, Mac.

SLAB. † n. s.

1. A puddle. Ainsworth.
They must be diligently cleansed from moss,
slab, and ooze. Evelyn.

2. A plane of stone: as, a marble slab.

3. The outside plank of a piece of timber when sawn into boards. Ray, and Grose.

TO SLABBER. † v. a. [Teut. slabben, slabberen.]

1. To sup up hastily. This meaning Dr. Johnson has overpassed. The Teut. is the same.

To slabber pottage up half hot and cold.
Barret, Aliv. (1580.)

2. To smear with spittle.

He slabbered me all over, from cheek to cheek, with his great tongue. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

3. To shed; to spill.

The milk-pan and cream-pot so slabber'd and tost,
That butter is wanting, and cheese is half lost.

Tusser.
TO SLABBER. v. n.

1. To let the spittle fall from the mouth; to drive.

2. To shed or pour any thing.

SLABBERER. n. s. [from slabber.] One who slabbers; an idiot.

SLABBY. adj. [The same with slab.]

1. Thick; viscous. Not used.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, slabby and greasy medicaments are to be forborn, and drying to be used. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. Wet; floody: in low language.
When wagish boys the stunted besom ply,
To rid the slabby pavements, pass not by. Gay.

SLACK. † adj. [pleac, Saxon; slak, Su. Goth. slaken, Icelandic; yslack, Welsh; laxus, Lat.]

1. Not tense; not hard drawn; loose.

The vein in the arm is that which Aretæus commonly opens; and he gives a particular caution in this case to make a slack compression, for fear of exciting a convulsion. Arbutnot.

2. Relaxed; weak; not holding fast.

In that day, it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear not; and to Zion, let not thine hands be slack. Zeph. iii. 16.

All his joints relax'd:
From his slack hand the garland wreath'd for Eve
Down dropp'd, and all the faded roses shed.

Milton, P. L.
3. Remiss; not diligent; not eager; not fervent.

Thus much help and furtherance is more yielded, in that, if so be our zeal and devotion to Godward be slack, the alacrity and fervour of others serveth as a present spur. Hooker.

Seeing his soldiers slack and timorous, he re-proved them of cowardice and treason. Knolles.

Nor were it just, would he resume that shape,
That slack devotion should his thunder 'scape. Waller.

Rebellion now began, for lack
Of zeal and plunder, to grow slack. Hudibras.

4. Not violent; not rapid.

With slack pace. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.
Their pace was formal, grave, and slack;

His nimble wit outran the heavy pack. Dryden.

5. Not intense.

A handful of slack dried hops spoil many pounds, by taking away their pleasant smell. Mortimer.

TO SLACK. † } v. n. [Sax. slacian.]

TO SLACKEN. } v. n. [Sax. slacian.]

1. To be remiss; to neglect.

When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord,
slack not to pay it. Deut. xxiii. 21.

2. To lose the power of cohesion.

The fire, in lime burnt, lies hid, so that it appears to be cold; but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder.

3. To abate.

Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames. Milton, P. L.

4. To languish; to fail; to flag.

Ainsworth.

Stacking in such care and desire.
Necessary Erudit. of a Chris. Man, (1543), sign. A. 8.

TO SLACK.

TO SLACKEN. } v. a.

1. To loosen; to make less tight.

Ah! generous youth, that wish forbear;
Slack all thy sails, and fear to come. Dryden.

Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd sails
Had still at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bridle's reins,
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn or stop, as she them slacks or strains.

Davies.
Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught not to slack nor strain its tender strings.

Pope.

3. To ease; to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for slake.

Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint, which they were used unto, now slack'd, they grow more loose.

Spenser.

If there be cure or charm
To respite or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton, P. L.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant

Allotted, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst, and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of eagerness.

My guards
Are you, great powers! and the unbated strength
Of a firm conscience; which shall arm each step
Ta'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace.

B. Jonson.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course.

Milton, P. L.

5. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still.

Bacon.

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate.

Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's cumbance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.

Milton, P. R.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the amorous youth bestow'd the race.

Waller.

One conduces to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way.

Dryden.

6. To relieve; to unbend.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flower
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour.

Denham.

7. To withhold; to use less liberally.

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance.

Shakespeare.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some unslack'd lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together.

Mortimer.

9. To neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine?
— If then they chanc'd to slack ye,

We would control them.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

This good chance, that thus much favour,eth,

He *slack*s not.

Daniel, Civ. War.

Slack not the good presage, while heav'n inspires

Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires.

Dryden.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.

I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence

Unbent your thoughts, and slacken d'em to arms.

Addison.

SLACK.† n. s. [from the verb To slack.
This substantive is called slake in the north of England.] Small coal; coal broken in small parts: as, slack'd lime turns to powder.

SLACK.* n. s. A valley or small shallow dell. North. Grose, and Craven Dialect. [Icel. slakur.]

SLACKLY.† adv. [pleaclice, Sax.]

1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.

2. Negligently; remissly.

That a king's children should be so convey'd,
So slackly guarded, and the search so slow

That could not trace them.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

3. Tardily.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

SLACKNESS.† n. s. [pleacnerre, Sax.]

1. Looseness; not tightness.

2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.

It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted.

These thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness. Shaks. Wint. Tale.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place
By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd.

Milton, P. L.

3. Tardiness.

When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected.

Sharp, Surgery.

4. Weakness; not force; not intensesence.

Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy.

Brewerwood.

SLADE.* n. s. [plæb, Sax. vallis, Somner;

via in montium convallibus, Lye. But Lye adds the Icel. slæd, a valley.] A flat piece of ground lying low and moist;
a little den or valley.

The thick and well grown fog doth matt my smoother slades;

And on the lower leas, as on the higher hedges,
The daintie clover grows. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

SLAG. n. s. The dross or recrement of metal.

Not only the calces but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed about the glass or slag of copper.

Boyle.

SLAIE.† n. s. [plæ, Saxon. Dr. Johnson cites this word, without any etymology, merely from Ainsworth. It was in use long before. See it in Sherwood. It is properly sley, though sometimes written also slay. See SLEY.] A weaver's reed.

SLAIN.† The participle passive of slay.
[playen, Saxon.]

The slain of the Lord shall be many.

Isa. lxi. 16.

The king grew vain,

Fought all his battles o'er again;

And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew
the slain.

Dryden.

To SLAKE. v. a. [from slack, Skinner;

from slæcka, Icelandick, to quench,
Lye.]

1. To quench; to extinguish.

He did always strive Himself with salves to health for to restore;
And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore.

Spenser.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,

And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,

It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

His spirit with her cold hand slakes

His shires, the sparks of life, and chills his heart.

Crashaw.

From Iulus' head

A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed:

Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair.

Dryden.

The fragrant fruit from bending branches slake,

And with the crystal stream their thirst at pleasure
slake.

Blackmore, Ceytation.

Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase;

Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst.

Addison, Cato.

2. It is used of lime; so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of to slack or slake lime be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime,
and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it.

Woodward.

To SLAKE.† v. n. [This is apparently from slack.]

1. To grow less tense; to be relaxed.

If she the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay;

But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay.

Davies.

2. To abate.

The fever slaketh. Barret, Alv. (1580.)

3. To go out; to be extinguished.

She perceiving that his flame did slake,
And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake.

Brown.

SLAKE.* n. s. See SLACK.

To SLAM.† v. a. [Icel. slæmra, levitèr verberare, cadere; aliis cognatum creditutor Icel. lemia, verberare. Serenius.

To slaughter; to crush; a word not used but in low conversation. Dr. Johnson.

— It is used in the north both for to beat or cuff a person, and also to push violently: as, he slamm'd to the door. See Grose. It is also used at cards: as, he is slammed, that is, beaten, without winning one trick.

SLAM.* n. s. Defeat: applied, at cards, to the adversary who has not reckoned a single point. A low phrase.

Thus all the while a club was trump,
There's none could ever beat the rump;

Until a noble general came,
And gave the cheaters a clear slam. Loyal Songs.

SLAM'KIN.* } n. s. [perhaps from the SLAM'MERKIN. } German schlam, dirt.]

A slatternly woman; a trollop; a vulgar
word.

To SLANDER.† v. a. [esclander, old

French, the same. Dr. Johnson refers to the Lat. scandalum; Dr. Jamieson, to the Su. Goth. klander, from kland, infamy, as the origin.] To censure falsely; to belie.

Slander Valentine

With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent.

Shakespeare.

He hath slandered thy servant unto the king.

2 Sam. xix. 27.

Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slandering it.

Whitgift.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
By practice harden'd in thy slandering trade;

Obtending heaven for what'er ills befall,
And sputtering under specious names thy gall.

Dryden.

Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone.

Pope.

SLANDER.† n. s. [esclandre, old Fr. from the verb.]

1. False invective.

When slanders do not live in tongues;
When cut-purses come not to throngs.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Since that, we hear he is in arms,
We think not so;

Yet charge the consul with our harms,
That let him go;

So in our censure of the state
We still do wander,

And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander.

D. Jonson, Catiline.

We are not to be dejected by the slanders and calumnies of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgement. Nelson.

2. Disgrace; reproach.

Thou slanderer of thy mother's heavy womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

3. Disreputation; ill name.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Ill-ey'd unto you. Shakespeare.

SLANDERER. n. s. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.

In your servants suffer any offence against yourself, rather than against God: endure not that they should be railers or slanderers, tell-tales, or sowers of dissension. Ep. Taylor.

Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer. Dryden.

SLANDEROUS. † adj. [from slander.]

1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.

What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderosus tongue? Shakespeare.

To me belongs

The care to shun the blast of slanderosus tongues:
Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,
Thus with vile censure taint my spotless name. Pope.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.

I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors, with the certain knowledge of their slanderosus untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

We lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers slanderosus loads. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

As by flattery a man opens his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slanderosus misreport he shuts the same to his best friends. South.

3. Scandalous.

The vile and slanderosus death of the cross. Homilies.

SLANDEROUSLY. adv. [from slanderosus.] Calumniously; with false reproach.

I may the better satisfy them who object these doubts, and slanderosus bark at the courses which are held against that traitorous earl and his adherents. Spenser on Ireland.

They did slanderosus object,
How that they durst not hazard to present
In person their defences. Daniel, Civ. War.

Late the clouds

Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Tine the slant lightning; whose thwart flame driven down, Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton, P. L.

The sun round the globe describes th' æquator line,
By which wise means he can the whole survey
With a direct or with a slanting ray,
In the succession of a night and day. Blackmore.

To SLANT.* v. a. To turn aslant or aside. Fuller writes this word slent.

Nimbleness was very advantageous to break and slent the down-right rushings of a stronger vessel. Fuller, Holy War, p. 210.

SLANTING.* n. s. [from slant.] Oblique remark.

Bellarmino — wanted nothing but a good cause to defend; generally writing ingeniously, using sometimes slenting, seldom downright railing. Fuller, Holy State, p. 60.

SLANTINGLY.* adv. [from slanting.] With oblique remark.

Their first attempt was to prefer bills against the archbishop's chaplains and preachers, and slanting through their sides striking at the archbishop himself. Strype's Life of Abp. Cranmer, B. 1. ch. 26.

His willingness to serve such base things, is the great brand of his slavishness.

Fotherby, Aethem. p. 120.

To SLAY.† v. a. preter. slew; part. pass. slain. [slahan, Gothick; slahon, German; plæan, Saxon; slaen, Dutch; slaa, Dan. and Icel.] To kill; to butcher; to put to death.

Her father's brother
Would be her lord; or shall I say her uncle?
Or he that slew her brothers and her uncle?

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Tyrant, shew thy face:
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.

Shakspeare.

I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God. Rev. vi. 2.

Slay and make ready. Gen. xliii. 16.

Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth the silly one. Job, v. 2.

Of Trojan chiefs he view'd a numerous train;
All much lamented, all in battle slain. Dryd. Æn.

He must

By blood and battles power maintain,
And slay the monarchs, ere he rule the plain.

Prior.

SLAY.* See SLEY.

SLAY'ER. n. s. [from slay.] Killer; murderer; destroyer.

Witness the guiltless blood poured oft on ground;
The crowned often slain, the slayer crown'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

They slew those that were slayers of their countymen.

Abbot.

The slayer of himself yet saw I there;
The gore congeal'd was clotted in his hair;
With eyes half clos'd and gaping mouth he lay,
And grim as when he breath'd his sullen soul away.

Dryden.

SLEAVE.† n. s. [Of this word I know not well the meaning: slave-silk is explained by Gouldman, flocus sericus, a lock of silk; and the women still say, slave the silk for untwist it. Ainsworth calls a weaver's shuttle or reed a slaie, or sley. To sley is to part a twist into single fibres. Dr. Johnson.—Icel. stefa fila tenuia. Serenius.] The ravell'd knotty part of the silk, which gives great trouble to the knitter or weaver. Heath. Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd slave of care.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I on a fountain light,

Whose brim with pinks was platted;

The banks with daffadillies dight

With grass like slave was matted. Drayton, Cynth.

To SLEAVE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To separate into threads; to sleid. See To SLEID.

The more subtle, and more hard to slave a-two, silken thread of self-seeking, is that dominion over consciences.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1634), p. 360.

SLEAVED.* adj. [from slave.] Raw; not spun; unwrought.

Eight wild men all apparelled in green moss made with sleaved silk.

Holinshed, Hist. of Eng. p. 835.

SLEAZY.† adj. [often written sleazy. Dr. Johnson.—And also seazy.] Weak; wanting substance. This seems to be of the same race with slave, or from To sley. Dr. Johnson.—Sleazy holland is so called, because made in Silesia in Germany; which, from its slowness, occasions all thin, slight, ill-wrought hollands to be called sleazy. Chambers.

I cannot well away with such sleazy stuff, with such cobweb compositions.

Hovells, Lett. (dat. 1625), i. i. 1.

SLED.† n. s. [sled, Danish; slæde, Dutch.] A carriage drawn without wheels.

Upon an ivory sled

Thou shalt be drawn among the frozen poles.

Tambrurlaine, or the Scyth. Shepherd, (1590.)

Volgha—

Who slede doth suffer on his watery lea,

And horses trampling on his icy face.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. ii. 13.

The sled, the tumbrel, hurdles, and the frail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

SLEDDED. adj. [from sled.] Mounted on a sled.

So frown'd he once when in an angry parle,
He smote the sledded Polack on the ice. Shaks.

SLEDGE. n. s. [plecg, pleze, Saxon; sleggia, Icelandick.]

1. A large heavy hammer.

They him spying, both with greedy force

At once upon him ran, and him beset

With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,

And on his shield like iron sledges bet.

Spenser, F. Q.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,

The hardest iron soon doth mollify,

That with his heavy sledge he can it beat,

And fashion to what he it list apply. Spenser.

The uphand sledge is used by under-workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out: they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Mozon.

It would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy than any softer and more gentle striking of a great sledge.

Wilkins, Math. Mag.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels; properly a sled. See SLED.

In Lancashire they use a sort of sledge made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, and drawn with one horse. Mortimer, Husbandry.

SLEEK.† adj. [sleyck, and slicht, Teut. planus, from slechten, planare. This word was formerly written slick. See SLICK. And slick, or slicken, is still our northern word. See also the substantive SLEEK.]

1. Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,

Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights.

Shakespeare.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,

As if I fed ye; and how sleek and wanton

Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin.

Shakespeare.

What time the groves were clad in green,

The fields all dress in flowers,

And that the sleek-hair'd nymphs were seen,

To seek them summer bowers. Drayton.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd

His turret crest, and sleek-enamell'd neck,

Fawning.

Milton, P. L.

Thy head and hair are sleek,

And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek.

Dryden.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,

Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take

To see so fair a rival. Dryden.

2. Not rough; not harsh.

Those rough names to our like mouths grow sleek,

That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp.

Milton, Sonn.

SLEEK.* n. s. [from the adjective.] That which makes smooth; varnish. Not in use.

My face, which you behold so seeming red, is done over with ladies' licks, sticks, and other painting stuff of the Levant.

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626), p. 293.

To SLEEK. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.

Yet are the men more loose than they,

More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rub'd, and trim'd,

More sleek'd, more soft, and slacker limb'd.

B. Jonson.

By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,

And fair Ligea's golden comb,

Wherewith she sits on diamond rocks,

Sleeking her soft alluring locks. Milton, Comus.

2. To render soft, smooth, or glossy.

Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged locks;

Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night.

Shakespeare.

She does sleek

With crums of bread and milk, and lies a-nights

In her neat gloves. B. Jonson, Catiline.

The persuasive rhetoric

That sleek'd his tongue, and won so much on Eve,
So little here, nay lost. Milton, P. R.

A sheet of well sleeked marble paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall.

Boyle.

A cruise of fragrance, form'd of burnish'd gold,
Odour divine! whose soft refreshing streams
Sleek the smooth skin, and scent the snowy limbs.

Pope.

SLEEKLY. adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly; glossily.

Let their heads be sleekly combed, and their blue coats brushed. Shakespeare, Tam. of Shrew.

SLEEKNESS.* n. s. [from sleek.] Smoothness.

We may live to the spectacle and the bearing-staff, to the stooping back, to the snow or to the sleekness of the declining crown: but how few are there that can unfold you a diary of so many leaves! More die in the spring and summer of their years, than live till autumn or their gown'd winter. Feltham, Res. i. 32.

The horses—lost their sleekness and grace, and were soon purchased at half the value.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 138.

SLEEKSTONE. n. s. [sleek and stone.] A smoothing stone.

The purest pasteboard, with a sleek-stone rub smooth, and as even as you can. Peacham.

SLEEKY.* adj. [from sleek.] Of a sleek or smooth appearance.

Sweet, sleeky doctor, dear pacific soul!

Lay at the beef, and suck the vital bowl!

Thomson to the Soporif. Doctor.

To SLEEP.† v. n. [slepan, Gothic; slæpan, Sax. slæpan, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius deduces the word from the Su. Goth. slapp, remissus.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental and corporal powers.

I've watch'd and travel'd hard:

Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle.

Shakespeare.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you find a maid,

That, ere she sleep, hath thrice her prayers said,

Rein up the organs of her fantasy;

Sleep she as sound as careless infancy;

But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,

Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge. Deuteronomy.

Peace, good reader! do not weep;

Peace! the lovers are asleep;

They, sweet turtles! folded lie,

In the last knot that love could tie.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,

Till this stormy night be gone,

And the eternal morn'g dawn,

Then the curtains will be drawn,

And they waken with that light,

Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crashaw.

Those who at any time sleep without dreaming can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it. Locke.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burlyfown clown in chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sleath, I beseech Jove on my knees thou mayst be turned into hobnails.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank! Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music Creep in our ears. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,

Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,

Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots

amain,

Till counterbuff'd she stops, and sleeps again.

Dryden.

3. To live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness, and want to be roused into a quick thankful sense of it. Atterbury.

4. To be dead; death being a state from which man will some time awake.

If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so then also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 1 Thessal.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot raise from the grave; though he only sleeps unto God, who can raise from the chamber of death. Ayliffe, Paragon.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heaven will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold, bad man. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

6. To be unnoticed, or unattended: as, the matter sleeps. See SLEEPING.

SLEEP.† n. s. [from the verb; slep, Goth. slēp, Sax.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental and corporal powers; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry, sleep no more!
Macbeth doth murder sleep, the innocent sleep;
Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care;
The birth of each day's life, sear labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast. Shaks. Macbeth.

That sleeps might sweetly seal
His restless eyes, he enter'd, and in his bed
In silence took. Chapman.

Cold callest the spirits to succour; and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. And for the same cause, pain and noise hinder sleep; and darkness furthereth sleep. Bacon.

Beasts that sleep in winter, as wild bears, during their sleep wax very fat, though they eat nothing. Bacon.

His fasten'd hands the rudder keep,
And fix'd on heav'n, his eyes reel invading sleep. Dryden.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand the sleep-compelling rod. Dryden.

Infants spend the greatest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it. Locke.

SLEEPER.† n. s. [Sax. slæpepe.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.
Sound, music; come, my queen, take hand with me,

And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

What's the business,
That such an hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Shaks. Macbeth.

In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon, the inhabitants say is a plant that sleepeth. There be sleepers enow then; for almost all flowers do the like. Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a spy taken, and a sleeper slain. Dryden.

2. A lazy inactive drone.

He must be no great eater, drinker, nor sleeper,
that will discipline his senses, and exert his mind;
every worthy undertaking requires both. Grew.

3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

Let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long,
or if grown unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution. Bacon.

4. A fish. [exocætus.]

5. [In architecture.] A strip of solid timber (or some substantial substitute) which lies on the ground to support the joist of a floor. Mason.

The length of hips and sleepers.

Evelyn, B. i. ch. 6. § 19.
SLEEPFUL* adj. [sleep and full; Saxon, slæpful. See also SLEEPFULNESS.] Overpowered by desire to sleep.

Distrust will cure a lethargy; of a sleepy man it makes a wakeful one, and so keeps out poverty.

Scott, Essay of Drapery, (1635), p. 138.

SLEEPFULNESS* n. s. [slæpfullnæ, Saxon.]

Lye.] Strong desire to sleep.

SLEEPILY. adv. [from sleepy.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

2. Dully; lazily.

I rather chuse to endure the wounds of those darts, which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings. Ralegh.

3. Stupidly.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before. Atterbury.

SLEEPINESS. n. s. [from sleepy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleepiness, and is the most ill boding symptom of a fever. Arbutnot.

SLEEPING* n. s. [from sleep.]

1. The state of resting in sleep.

2. The state of not being disturbed, or noticed.

You ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business, never Desir'd it to be stirr'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

SLEEPLESS. adj. [from sleep.] Wanting sleep; always awake.

The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd, Though after sleepless night. Milton, P. L.

While pensive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless attempts to give their readers sleep. Pope.

SLEEPLESSNESS* n. s. [from sleepless.]

Want of sleep.

Lipsius — conceives an impossibility of an absolute sleeplessness. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

SLEEP'Y.† adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsy; disposed to sleep.

From his feet, even to his sleepy head,
She made her poison canker like to spread. Mir. for Mag. p. 792.

Here sleepy arms she spread. May, Lucan, B. 5.

2. Not awake.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there. Go carry them, and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood. Shaks. Macbeth.

She wak'd her sleepy crew,

And, rising hasty, took a short adieu. Dryden.

3. Soporiferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still. Milton, P. L.

I slept about eight hours, and no wonder;
for the physicians had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

4. Dull; lazy.

'Tis not sleepy business,
But must be look'd to speedily and strongly.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

SLEET.† n. s. [perhaps from the Danish slæt. Dr. Johnson. — Sleet is the past participle ple-e-b, pleeb, pleet, of plean, Sax.

projicere; and has no connexion with the Danish slæt, which means smooth, polished. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 334. — Serenius, however, notices the Dan. slud, which means sleet; and also the Icel. slætta, liquida dispergere. The Sax. slæt, I may add, is a shower.]

1. A kind of smooth small hail or snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midstmost battles hastening up behind,
Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleet,
And hear their thunder rattling in the wind. Dryden.

Perpetual sleet and driving snow
Obscure the skies, and hang on herds below.

Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wintry walls
Of snow congeal'd. Dryden.

Rains would have been poured down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleet, then snow, and ice. Cheyne.

2. Shower of any thing falling thick.

[They] flying, behind them, shot
Sharp sleet of arrowy showers against the face
Of their pursuers. Milton, P. R.

To SLEET. v. n. [from the noun.] To snow in small particles intermixed with rain.

SLEET'Y.† adj. [from the noun.] Bringing sleet.

The sleet storm returning still,
The morning hoar, and evening chill. Warton, Ode 10.

SLEEVE.† n. s. [slēf, Saxon; formerly called eapm slēp, that with which the arm is covered; the past participle of slēpan, induere. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 374.]

1. The part of a garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes esp'y'd my treasure,
With sleeves turn'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged,

Her father's corn, moving her fair limbs, measure. Sidney.

The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish; and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion: for in armor, the fashion of the Manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve. And knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms: sir Lancelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Asteloth in a tourney.

Your hose should be ungarter'd, your sleeve unbutton'd, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakspeare.

You would think a smock were a she-angel; he so chants to the sleeve-hand, and the work about the square on't. Shakspeare.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a cape. Bacon.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. Sleeve, in some provinces, signifies a knot or skein of silk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLEAVE.]

Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To laugh in the sleeve. This proverbial phrase Dr. Johnson ascribes to the Dutch sleeve, a cover, any thing spread over. It is more likely, as Mr. Bagshaw also observes, to be taken from the large sleeves which our countrymen formerly wore, by which they might easily conceal part of the countenance, and so laugh unperceived.

A brace of sharpers laugh at the whole roguery in their sleeves. L'Estrange.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South, Sermon.

John laughed heartily in his sleeve at the pride of the esquire. Arbutnot, J. Bull.

4. To hang on a sleeve; to make dependance; Probably from the custom noticed by Spenser, under the first definition, of wearing a lady's sleeve; which was in token of dependance on her love.

It is not for a man which doth know, or should know, what orders, and what peaceable government requireth, to ask why we should hang our judgement upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine. Hooker.

5. [Lolligo, Lat.] A fish. Ainsworth.
SLEEVED. adj. [from sleeve.] Having sleeves.

SLEEVELESS. † adj. [from sleeve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves.

No man under the said estates and degree shall wear any satyn—nor any velvet, saving in sleeveless jackets, doublets, coyses, &c.

Proclamation. (1565.) Strype App. Hist. Ref.
Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been

Velvet; but 'twas now, so much ground was seen, Become tuffaffaty. Donne.

They put on sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton. Sandys.

Behold you isle by palmers, pilgrims trod,
Grave mummings! sleeveless some, and shirtless others. Pope.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long possessed, I know not well how it obtained; Skinner thinks it properly liveless or lifeless: to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from sleeve, a knot, or skin, and so signify unconnected, hanging ill together? or from sleeve, a cover; and therefore means plainly absurd; foolish without palliation? Dr. Johnson.—Sleeveless means without a cover or pretence. Mr. H. Tooke.]

One morning timely he took to hand
To make to my house a sleeveless errand. Heywood, Works, (1566.) sign. B. 3. b.

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multipresence. Bp. Hall.

No more but no, a sleeveless reason. Milton, Econoclast. § 6.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it. Spectator.

TO SLEID.  v. a.* [from sley.] To prepare for use in the weaver's sley or slay. See TO SLEY. Percy.

She weav'd the sleided silk
With fingers long. Shakespeare, Pericles.

SLEIGHT.  n. s.* [slaegd, Icel. cunning, deceit. Dr. Johnson, and Serenius. It may rather be from the Sax. slō or plyð, deceitful, whence our sly. Milton, in his manuscript Mask of Comus, has used sleight for sly or deceitful.] Artful trick; cunning artifice; dexterous practice: as, sleight of hand; the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, slight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolite; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning sleights. Hooker.

Fair Una to the red cross knight
Betrothed is with joy;
Though false Duessa, it to bar,
Her false sleights do employ. Spenser, F. Q.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that, distill'd 'by magick sleights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Out stretch the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him,
Laertes' son,
That crafty one as huge in sleight. Chapman.

She could not so convey
The massy substance of that idol great,
What sleight had she the wardens to betray?
What strength to heave the goddess from her seat? Fairfax.

In the wily snake
Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit, and native subtilty,
Proceeding. Milton, P. L.
Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat;
As lookers on feel most delight,
That least perceive the juggler's sleight. Hudibras.

Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths. L'Estrange.

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us. Dryden.

While innocent he scorns ignoble flight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight. Swift.

SLEIGHT.  adj.* [plyð, Sax.] Deceitful; artful.

Thus I hurle
My powder'd spells into the spungie air,
Of power to cheat the eye with sleight illusion. Milton, MS. Mask of Com. Trin. Coll. Camb.

SLEIGHTFUL.  adj.* [sleight and full.] Artful; cunning.

SLEIGHTLY.  adv.* [from sleighty.] Craftily; cunningly. Huloet.

SLEIGHTY.  adj.* [from sleight.] Crafty; artful. Huloet.

Though it [truth] be darkened with mens sleighty juggling and counterfeit craftes, as it were with certain mists, for a while; yet at the time of God appointed, it bursteth out again, and sheweth itself clerely like the sunne. Tran. of Bp. Gardiner's De Ver. Ob. (1553.) fol. vi.

SLEIVE.  See SLEAVE.*

SLENDER. adj. [slinder, Dutch.]

1. Thin; small in circumference compared with the length; not thick.

So thick the roses bushing round
About her glow'd; half stooping to support
Each flower of slender stalk. Milton, P. L.

2. Small in the waist; having a fine shape.
What slender youth, bedew'd with liquid odours,
Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave? Milton, Trans.

Beauteous Helen shines among the rest,
Tall, slender, straight, with all the graces blest. Dryden.

3. Not bulky; slight; not strong.
Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains. Pope.

4. Small; inconsiderable; weak.
Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentence upon as many as refuse to embrace the same, must have especial regard, that their first foundations and grounds be more than slender probabilities. Hooker.

Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident. Shakespeare.

Positively to define that season, there is no slender difficulty. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It is very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction, between things being troublesome, and being evils; when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us. Tillotson.

5. Sparing; less than enough: as, a slender estate and slender parts.

At my lodging,
The worst is this, that, at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance. Shakespeare.

6. Not amply supplied.
The good Ostorius often deign'd
To grace my slender table with his presence. Philips.

In obstructions inflammatory, the aliment ought to be cool, slender, thin, diluting. Arbutnot.

SLENDERLY. adv. [from slender.]

1. Slightly; bulki.

2. Slightly; meanly.
If the debt be not just, we know not what may be deemed just, neither is it a sum to be slenderly regarded. Hayward.

If I have done well, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain to. 2 Mac. xv. 38.

SLENDERNESS. † n. s. [from slender.]

1. Thinness; smallness of circumference.
Small whistles give a sound because of their extreme slenderness, the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon.

Their colours arise from the thinness of the transparent parts of the feathers; that is from the slenderness of the very fine hairs or capillaments, which grow out of the sides of the grosser lateral branches or fibres of those feathers. Newton.

2. Want of bulk or strength.

It is preceded by a spitting of blood, occasioned by its acrimony, and too great a projectile motion, with slenderness and weakness of the vessels. Arbutnot on Diet.

3. Slightness; weakness; inconsiderableness.

The slenderness of your reasons against the book, together with the inconveniences that must of necessity follow, have procured a great credit unto it. Whitgift.

4. Want of plenty.

As the coarseness of the raiment, so the slenderness of the diet, is equally to pretend towards a rigid and austere condition of life.

Gregory, Notes on Script. (ed. 1684.) p. 133.

TO SLENT.  v. n.* To make an oblique remark; to sneer. See TO SLANT.

Shoot your arrows at me till your quiver be empty, but glance not with the least slenting insinuation at his majesty. Fuller's Truth Maintained, (1643.) p. 19.

SLEPT. The preterite of sleep.

Silence; coeval with eternity,
Thou wert ere nature first began to be,
'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slapt fast in thee. Pope.

He slew Hamet, a great commander among the Numidians, and chased Benchades and Amida, two of their greatest princes, out of the country. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

SLEY.  n. s.* [plæ, Sax.] A weaver's reed. See SLAIE.

Straight to their posts appointed both repair,
And fix their threaded looms with equal care:

Around the solid beam the web is ty'd,
While hollow canes the parting warp divide;
Through which with nimble flight the shuttles play,
And for the woof prepare a ready way;
The woof and warp unite press'd by the toothy slay.

Croall, On Met. 6.

TO SLEY.† v. n. [from the noun. See also TO SLEAVE. Dr. Johnson has cited a passage from Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida, as Mr. Mason also has observed, in illustration of to sley; but the true word there is slieve or sleave silk, not sley'd silk.] To separate; to part or twist into threads; to sleid.

Clad like a country swain.

May hypocrites,

That slyly speak one thing, another think,

Hateful as hell, pleas'd with the relish weak,

Drink on unwar'm'd, till by enchanting cups

Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose,

And through interpenance grow a while sincere.

Philips.

SLIM.† adj. [A cant word, as it seems, and therefore not to be used. Dr.

Johnson. — This is so far from being the case, that the word can boast excellent authority of serious usage, primarily in the sense of slight, or slender, or unsubstantial, to which meaning Dr.

Johnson was a stranger; and then to slender, or thin of shape, as applied to persons. Of an etymon Dr. Johnson evidently thought the word unworthy.

Serenity refers it to the Icel. slaemr, vilis et invalidus. See also slim, Teut.

in Kilian, which is described as an ancient word, and rendered vilis.]

1. Weak; slight; unsubstantial.

superficies lubrica, Sax. rlipe, lubricum.
Wachter.]

1. To slide; not to tread firm.

If a man walks over a narrow bridge when he is drunk, it is no wonder that he forgets his caution while he overlooks his danger; but he who is sober, and views that nice separation between himself and the devouring deep, so that, if he should slip, he sees his grave gaping under him, surely must needs take every step with horror and the utmost caution.

South.

A skilful dancer on the ropes slips willingly, and makes a seeming stumble that you may think him in great hazard, while he is only giving you a proof of his dexterity.

Dryden.

If after some distinguish'd leap
He drops his pole, and seems to slip,
Straight gathering all his active strength,
He rises higher half his length.

Prior.

The blessing of the Lord shall slip from thee without doing thee any good, if thou hast not ceased from doing evil.

Bp. Taylor.

Slipping from thy mother's eye, thou went'st
Alone into the temple; there was found
Among the gravest rabbies disputant,
On points and questions fitting Moses' chair.

Milton, P. R.

Thrice around his neck his arms he threw,
And thrice the flitting shadow slipp'd away,
Like winds or empty dreams that fly the day.

Dryden.

Though with pale cheeks, wet beard, and dropping hair,

None but my Ceyx could appear so fair,
I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace;
But through my arms he slipp'd, and vanish'd from the place.

Dryden.

When a corn slips out of their paws, they take hold of it again.

One ill man may not think of the mischief he could do, or slip the occasion.

L'Estrange.

To slip the market, when thus fairly offered, is great imprudence.

Collier.

For watching occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not to slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blam'd.

Locke.

Thus far my author has slipt his first design; not a letter of what has been yet said promoting any ways the trial.

Atterbury.

3. To part twigs from the main body by laceration.

The runners spread from the master-roots, and have little sprouts or roots to them, which, being

As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb,
Is certain falling; or so slippery, that
The fear 's as bad as falling. Shaks. Cymbeline.
His promise to trust to as slippery as ice.

Tusser.

Their ways shall be as slippery ways in the darkness. Jer. xxiii.

The slippery tops of human state,
The gilded pinnacles of fate. Cowley.

The higher they are raised, the giddier they are; the more slippery is their standing, and the deeper the fall. L'Estrange.

The highest hill is the most slippery place,
And fortune mocks us with a smiling face. Denham.

Beauty, like ice, our footing does betray;
Who can tread sure on the smooth slippery way? Dryden.

3. Hard to hold; hard to keep.

Thus surely bound, yet be not overbold,
The slippery god will try to loose his hold;
And various forms assume, to cheat thy sight,
And with vain images of beasts affright. Dryden, Georg.

4. Not standing firm.

When they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that lean'd on them, as slippery too,
Doth one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fast. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

5. Uncertain; changeable; mutable; instable.

Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise,
Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

He looking down
With scorn or pity on the slippery state
Of kings, will tread upon the neck of fate. Denham, Sophy.

The upper part of him, the blow

Had slit, as sure as that below.

Hudibras.

We slit the preternatural body open.

Wiseman, Surgery.

A liberty might be left to the judges to inflict death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks.

Temple.

If a tinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour.

Newton, Opt.

He took a freak

To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

2. To cut in general.

Comes the blind Fury, with the abhorred shears,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton, Lycidas.

SLIT. n. s. [rhic, Saxon.] A long cut, or narrow opening.

In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineth a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of stone; and in the brick conduit there is a window, and in the round house a slit or rift of some little breadth: if you cry out in the rift, it will make a fearful roaring at the window.

Bacon.

Where the tender rinds of trees disclose

Their shooting gems, a swelling knot there grows:

Just in that place a narrow slit we make;

Then other buds from bearing trees we take;

Inserted thus, the wounded rind we close.

Dryden.

I found, by looking through a slit or oblong hole, which was narrower than the pupil of my eyes, and held close to it parallel to the prisms, I could see the circles much distincter, and visible to a far greater number, than otherwise. Newton.

To SLITHER.* To slide. So to slidder is written and pronounced in some parts of the north.

SLITTER.* n. s. [from slit.] One who cuts or slashes. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shaks. Macbeth.

2. To cut or cleave in general.

To SLIVE.* v. n. [slæver, Dan. to creep.]

To sneak. Pegge calls a sliving fellow one who, in our northern dialect, loiters about with a bad intent. Sliverly and sliven thus denote crafty, idle, lazy, as applied to persons. See Ray and Grose.

SLIVER.† n. s. [from the verb.] A branch torn off. Sliver, in Scotland, still denotes a slice cut off: as, he took a large sliver of the beef, Dr. Johnson says; and he might have added, that the same expression is no uncommon English one; especially in the north. But it is confirmed as an old English word by Chaucer.

VOL. III.

He all whole, or of him slivere.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 1015.

There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clambring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy coronet and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Slobbery weather.

Swift, Lett.

To SLOCK.† v. n. [slockna, Su. Goth.

To SLOCKEN.† slockea, Icel.] To slake;

to quench. Slocken is our northern word.

Grose defines slockened by slackened, or choked; as the fire is choked, i. e. slockened, by throwing water upon it. Slocken is also an old word in the more general sense of choke.

The poor maid, crying miserably out for water, was almost slockened before she could get redress.

The Prophane Schisme of the Brownists, (1613,) p. 96.

SLOE.† n. s. [pla, Saxon; slee, Danish.]

The fruit of the blackthorn, a small wild plum; and the tree which bears it.

The fair pomegranate might adorn the pine,

The grape the bramble, and the sloe the vine.

Blackmore.

When you fell your underwoods, sow haws and sloes in them, and they will furnish you, without doing of your woods any hurt.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

SLOOM, or Sloun.* n. s. [Teut. sluzmen, levitèr dormire. Kilian. Sax. plumepan.]

A gentle sleep or slumber. North.

Grose.

SLOO'MY.* adj. [lome, Teut. tardus, piger.]

Sluggish; slow. Skinner.

SLOOP.† n. s. [chaloupe, French; slup, Su.

Goth.] A small ship, commonly (but not always) with only one mast.

To SLOOP.† v. a. [from lap, lop, slap.]

1. To drink grossly and greedily.

2. [perhaps from slip.] To soil by letting water or other liquor fall.

SLOP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Mean and vile liquor of any kind. Generally some nauseous or useless medicinal liquor.

The sick husband here wanted for neither slopes nor doctors.

But thou, whatever slopes she will have bought,
Be thankful. Dryden, Juv.

2. Soil or spot made by water or other liquors fallen upon the place.

SLOP.† n. s. [probably from the Saxon plopen, loose; to-plupen, relaxatus. Dr. Johnson has referred it to sloove, Dutch, a covering; mentioning at the same time plop, as a Saxon word, but without any interpretation. The word was formerly used in the singular number: as in Chaucer, "His overest sloppie is not worth a mite," Chan. Yem. Prol. And in Barret's Alv. 1580. "A slop or an over stock;" applied to female dress also; as slops had before been by Huiloet, and as that word is used in our Homilies.]

1. Trowsers; large and loose breeches; drawers.

So were the daughters of Sion — mincing as they went, &c. In that day shall the Lord take away the ornament of the slippers, and the cawles, and the round attires, and the sweet balls, and the bracelets, and the attires of the head, and the sloppes. Homily against Excess of Apparel.

What said master Dombledon about the satin for my short cloak and slops? Shaks. Hen. IV. P. II.

Six great slops,

Bigger than three Dutch hoys!

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

2. Ready-made clothes. See SLOP-SELLER.

SLOP-SELLER.* n. s. [slop and seller.] One who sells ready-made clothes.

The slop-seller is a person crept into the navy, I mean to monopolize the vending of clothing only, but since the restoration of king Charles the second; nor then, but by degrees, as he could make interest, and have interest in the affair.

Maydman, Naval Speculat. (1691,) p. 129.

SLOP-SHOP.* n. s. [slop and shop.] Place where ready-made clothes are sold.

SLOPE.† adj. [This word is not derived from any satisfactory original. Junius omits it: Skinner derives it from slap, lax, Dutch; and derives it from the curve of a loose rope. Perhaps its original may be latent in loopen, Dutch, to run, slope being easy to the runner. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Tooke calls it the past participle of the Sax. plpan, to slip. Serenius refers it to the Su. Goth. slæpa, "obliquè et indirectè ferri."] Oblique; not perpendicular. It is generally used of acclivity or declivity; forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon.

Where there is a greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a sloper rise and fall. Bacon.

Murmuring waters fall

Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams.

Milton, P. L.

SLOPE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. An oblique direction; any thing obliquely directed.

2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.

Growing upon slopes is caused for that moss, as it cometh of moisture, so the water must but slide, not be in a pool. Bacon.

My lord advances with majestic mien,
And when up ten steep slopes you've dragg'd your thighs,

Just at his study door he'll bless your eyes. Pope.

SLOPE. adv. Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Uriel

Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now rais'd

Bore him slope downward to the sun, now fall'n.

Milton, P. L.

TO SLOPE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To form to obliquity or declivity; to direct obliquely.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations. Shaks. Macbeth.

On each hand the flames,
Driv'n backward, slope their pointing spires, and rowl'd

In billows, leave i' the midst a horrid vale.

Milton, P. L.

The star, that rose at evening bright,
Toward heaven's descent had slop'd his westerling wheel.

Milton, P. L.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phœbus shin'd in vain:
Nor till oblique he slop'd his evening ray,
Had Somnus dry'd the balmy dews away.

Pope, Odys.

TO SLOPE. v. n. To take an oblique or declivous direction.

Betwixt the midst and these the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats for human kind;
And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway.

Dryden.

There is a handsome work of piles made sloping athwart the river, to stop the trees which are cut down, and cast into the river.

Brown, Trav.

Upstairs a palace, lo! the obedient base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides embrace.

Pope.

There is a straight hole in every ant's nest half an inch deep; and then it goes down sloping into a place where they have their magazine.

Addison, Spect.

On the south aspect of a sloping hill,
Whose skirts meand'ring Peneus washes still,
Our pious labourer pass'd his youthful days
In peace and charity, in pray'r and praise. Harte.

SLO'PENESS. n. s. [from slope.] Obliquity; declivity; not perpendicularly.

The Italians give the cover a graceful pence of sloppiness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest ridge.

Wotton on Architecture.

SLO'PEWISE. adj. [slope and wise.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

The Wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the Ose from the land to low-water mark, and having in it a bent or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the Ose. Carew.

SLO'PINGLY. adv. [from sloping.] Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

These atoms do not descend always perpendicularly, but sometimes slopingly. Digby on the Soul.

SLO'PPY. adj. [from slop.] Miry and wet; perhaps rather slabby. See SLAB.

TO SLO'T. v. a. [sluta, Swed. to shut, applied to a door; sluyten, Teut. the same, from slot, a bolt.] To strike or clash hard; to slam: as, to slot a door. A Lincolnshire word, according to Ray.

SLO'T. n. s. [slod, Iceland. vestigia ferarum in nive. Lye, and Serenius. Sax. plætunge, vestigia ferarum. Mr. Tooke pronounces slot the past participle of the Sax. plutan, to slit. As slot is the print of the hoof upon the ground, this derivation seems just. Drayton, in the following passage, explains slot in the margin by "the tract of the foot." The track of a deer. Milton uses it for track discoverable by the scent.

Often from his [the hart's] feed
The dogs of him do find, or thorough skill heed
The huntsman by his slot, or breaking earth, perceives,
Where he hath gone to lodge.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

He leaves the noisome stench of his rude slot behind him.

Milton, Colasterion.

SLOTH.† n. s. [slæpð, slepð, Saxon. It might therefore be not improperly written sloath, but that it seems better to regard the orthography of the primitive sloth, Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Tooke considers sloth as the third person singular of the verb plapian, to slow or make slow; i. e. that which sloweth. Our word was anciently written slouth, and also slouth.]

1. Slowness; tardiness.

These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth and tricks of Rome.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. Laziness; sluggishness; idleness.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand,
Hog in sloth, fox in stealth. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
They change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth. Milton.

Industry approach'd,
And rous'd him from his miserable sloth.

Thomson, Autumn.

3. An animal.

The sloth is an animal of so slow a motion, that he will be three or four days at least in climbing up and coming down a tree; and to go the length of fifty paces on plain ground, requires a whole day.

Grew.

TO SLOTH.* v. n. [See SLOTH.] To slug; to lie idle. Obsolete.

Prompt. Parv.

Some time he sloutheth on a daie,
That he never after gete maie.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

SLO'THFUL. adj. [sloth and full.] Idle; lazy; sluggish; inactive; indolent; dull of motion.

He that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster.

Prov. xviii. 9.

The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour.

Prov. xxi. 25.

To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful.

Milton, P. L.

Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease and loose delights,
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue.

Dryden.

The very soul of the slothful does effectually lie drowsing in his body, and the whole man is totally given up to his senses.

L'Estrange.

Another is deaf to all the motives to piety, by indulging an idle, slothful temper.

Law.

SLO'THFULLY. adv. [from slothful.] Idly; lazily; with sloth.

SLO'THFULNESS. n. s. [from slothful.] Idleness; laziness; sluggishness; inactivity.

To trust to labour without prayer, argueth impiety and prophaneness; it maketh light of the providence of God: and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion wanteth light of a mature judgement to direct it, when we join with our prayers slothfulness and neglect of convenient labour.

Hooker.

Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger.

Prov. xix. 15.

SLO'TTERY.* adj. [slodderen, Teut. faccescere.]

1. Squally; dirty; untrimmed. Mr. Tyrwhitt reads flotery in the following passage, and explains it by floating, as hair dishevelled may be said to float upon the air. Mr. Urry and Mr. Warton both read slotery. The Italian rabbuffata, which Mr. Tyrwhitt cites, certainly means dishevelled, but also shagged or rough.

Palamon

With slotery berde, and raggy ashy heres,
In clothes black.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. Foul; wet: as, slotery weather: a Cornish expression.

Pryce, Corn. Gramm.

SLOUCH.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson gives the Danish sloff, stupid, as the origin. Mr. Tooke calls it the Sax. past participle plæc, (meaning slack or slow), from pleacian, tardare. Serenius gives "slok, Sueth. homo vagus et negligens; sloka, propendere, caput demittere." This is in unison with our ancient usage of the word, viz. that of a lubber, a lazy fellow. See Sherwood in V. SLOUCH, and Cotgrave.]

1. An idle fellow; one who is stupid, heavy, or clownish.

No weather pleaseth — it is colde; therefore the slouch will not plow: it raineth; the land will be too heavy! Granger on Eccles. (1621,) p. 295.

A foul, great, stooping slouch with heavy eyes.

Moré, Life of the Soul, iii. 8.

Begin thy carols, then, thou vaunting slouch;
Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch. Gay.

2. A downcast look; a depression of the head; an ungainly, clownish gait or manner.

Our doctor has every quality which can make a man useful; but, alas! he hath a sort of slouch in his walk.

Swift.

TO SLOUCH.† v. n. [from the noun.] To have a downcast clownish look, gait, or manner.

The awkward, negligent, clumsy, and slouching manner of a booby.

Ld. Chesterfield.

TO SLOUCH.* v. a. To depress; to press down: as, to slouch the hat.

SLO'EN.† n. s. [sloef, Dutch; yslyun, Welsh, nasty, shabby. Dr. Johnson. — Slowen, slouen, sloven, the past participle of the Sax. plapian, to slow, make slow, or cause to be slow. Mr. H. Tooke.] A man indolently negligent of cleanliness; a man dirtily dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that himself did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slowens.

Hooker.

Affect in things about thee cleanliness,
That all may gladly board thee as a flower:

Slowens take up their stock of noisomeness

Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour. Herbert.

You laugh, half beau, half slowen if I stand;

My wig half powder, and all snuff my band. Pope.

Their methods various, but alike their aim:

The slowen and the fopling are the same. Young.

SLO'ENLINES.† n. s. [from slowenly.]

1. Indecent negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.

Slowliness is the worst sign of a hard student, and civility the best exercise of the remiss; yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy.

Wotton.

'Tis possible for Diogenes his cynical slovenliness to trample on Plato's splendid garments with more pride than Plato wore them.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 104.

2. Any negligence or carelessness.

Whether the multitudes of sects, and professed slovenliness in God's service, (in too many,) have not been guilty of the increase of profaneness amongst us.

Bp. Hall, Def. of the Humble Remonstr. § 16.

Vander Cabel seems to have been a careless artist; and discovers great slovenliness in many of his works; but in those which he has studied, and carefully executed, there is great beauty.

Gilpin, Ess. on Prints. p. 115.

SLO'VENLY.† adj. [from sloven.] Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat; not cleanly; coarse.

That slovenly cynick. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 256.

Our reverential fear of the God of heaven calls us to eschew all sordid incuriousness, and slovenly neglect, in his immediate services.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 258.

A slovenly wincer of a confutation.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

Æsop at last found out a slovenly lazy fellow, lolling at his ease, as if he had nothing to do.

L'Estrange.

SLO'VENLY. adv. [from sloven.] In a coarse inelegant manner.

As I hang my clothes on somewhat slovenly, I no sooner went in but he frowned upon me. Pope.

SLO'VERRY. n. s. [from sloven.] Dirtiness; want of neatness.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd With rainy marching in the painful field: There's not a piece of feather in our host, And time hath worn us into slovenry.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

SLOUGH.† n. s. [plog, Saxon; the past participle of pleacian, pleacian, to slow or cause to be slow; ch being changed into gh; plog, i. e. slow (water). Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A deep miry place; a hole full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereinto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a slough; in passing whereof many of the English horse were plunged, and some mired. Hayward.

The ways being foul, twenty to one, He 's here stuck in a slough, and overthrown.

Milton, Ep. on Hobson.

A carter had laid his waggon fast in a slough.

L'Estrange.

2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation. [perhaps from sleek. Neither Dr. Johnson, nor other lexicographers, give an etymon of this meaning.]

Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

When the mind is quicken'd,

The organs, though defunct and dead before, Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move.

With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shakspeare.

Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade

In open plains, or in the secret shade,

When he, renew'd in all the speckled pride

Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside;

And in his summer liv'ry rolls along,

Erect and brandishing his forked tongue. Dryden.

The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticula, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall: the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours.

Grew.

The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other. Grew, Cosmol.

3. It is used by Shakspeare simply for the skin.

As the snake, roll'd in a flowery bank, With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child, That for the beauty thinks it excellent.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. The part that separates from a foul sore.

At the next dressing I found a slough come away with the dressings, which was the sordes.

Wiseman on Ulcers.

TO SLOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To part from the sound flesh. A chirurgical term.

SLO'UGHY. adj. [from slough.] Miry; boggy; muddy.

That custom should not be allowed, of cutting scraws in low grounds sloughy underneath, which turn into bog. Swift.

SLOUM.* n. s. See SLOOM.

SLOW.† adj. [plog, plaep, Saxon, which Mr. Tooke considers as the past participle of pleacian. Dr. Johnson notices the ancient Frisick sleeuw: to which may be added the Swed. sloe, and Icel. sliour.]

1. Not swift; not quick of motion; not speedy; not having velocity; wanting celerity.

Me thou think'st not slow,

Who since the morning-hour set out from heaven, Where God resides, and on mid-day arriv'd In Eden, distance inexplicable. Milton, P. L.

Where the motion is so slow as not to supply a constant train of fresh ideas to the senses, the sense of motion is lost. Locke.

2. Late; not happening in a short time.

These changes in the heav'n, though slow, produc'd

Like changes on sea and land. Milton, P. L.

3. Not ready; not prompt; not quick.

I am slow of speech, and a slow tongue.

Exod. iv. 10.

Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut.

Milton, P. L.

The slow of speech make in dreams unpmeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung

High on the broken wave,

I knew thou wert not slow to hear,

Nor impotent to save. Addison.

4. Dull; inactive; tardy; sluggish.

Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow

To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryden.

5. Not hasty; acting with deliberation; not vehement.

The Lord is merciful, and slow to anger.

Common Prayer.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding. Prov.

The politick and wise

Are sly slow things with circumspect eyes. Pope.

6. Dull; heavy in wit.

The blockhead is a slow worm. Pope.

SLOW. in composition, is an adverb, slowly.

This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave

T' a body, and went but by the body's leave,

Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,

Dispatches in a minute all the way

'Twixt heaven and earth. Donne.

To the shame of slow-endeavouring art

Thy easy numbers flow. Milton, Ep. on Shakspeare.

This day's death denounc'd, if ought I see,

Will prove no sudden, but a slow-pac'd evil,

A long day's dying to augment our pain.

Milton, P. L.

For eight slow-circling years by tempests tost.

Pope.

Some demon urg'd

T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile, Slow-paced tracing round the insidious pile. Pope.
TO SLOW.† v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not now in use.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?

— I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.

Shakspeare.

Will you overflow

The fields, thereby my march to slow?

Sir A. Gorges, Transl. of Lucan, B. 2.

SLOW.* n. s. [plog, Saxon, tinea.] A moth.

Obsolete. "It is a slowe." Chaucer,

Rom. R. 4.751.

SLOWBACK.* n. s. [from slow.] A lubber;

an idle fellow. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

The slowbacks and lazle bones will none of this.

Favour, Antiq. Tr. over Noveltie, (1619), p. 63.

SLOWLY.† adv. [from slow; Sax. plaulice.]

1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.

The gnome rejoicing bears her gifts away,

Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day. Pope.

2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.

The poor remnant of human seed peopled their country again slowly by little and little. Bacon.

Our fathers bent their baneful industry

To check a monarchy that slowly grew;

But did not France or Holland's fate foresee,

Whose rising power to swift dominion flew. Dryden.

We oft our slowly growing warts impart,

While images reflect from art to art. Pope.

3. Not hastily; not rashly; as, he determines slowly.

4. Not promptly; not readily; as, he learns slowly.

5. Tardily; sluggishly.

The chapel of St. Laurence advances so very slowly, that 'tis not impossible but the family of Medicis may be extinct before their burial-place is finished. Addison on Italy.

SLOWNESS. n. s. [from slow.]

1. Smallness of motion; not speed; want of velocity; absence of celerity or swift-

ness.

Providence hath confined these human arts, that what any invention hath in the strength of its motion, is abated in the slowness of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required into it. Watkins, Math. Magick.

Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swiftness or slowness are relative ideas. Watts.

2. Length of time in which any thing acts or is brought to pass; not quickness.

Tyrants use what art they can to increase the slowness of death. Hooker.

3. Dulness to admit conviction or affection.

Christ would not heal their infirmities, because of the hardness and slowness of their hearts, in that they believed him not. Bentley, Serm.

4. Want of promptness; want of readiness.

5. Deliberation; cool delay.

6. Dilatoriness; procrastination.

SLOWWORM.† n. s. [plog-pypm, Saxon.]

The blind worm; a small kind of viper, not mortal, scarcely venomous.

Though we have found former snakes in the belly of the cæcilia, or slowworm, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO SLUBBER.† v. a. [Probably from lubber. Dr. Johnson. — Scano-Goth.

slobbert, homo sordidus et negligens. Exiguid vocalium mutazione ita fortè dictum à Sueth. slurfw, perfunctorie agere. Serenius. See also Widegren, Su. Lex. in V. SLURFVA: To slubber a thing over, &c.]

1. To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature shewed she doth not like men, who slubber up matters of mean account. Sidney.
Bassanio told him, he would make some speed Of his return: he answer'd, Do not so, Slubber not business for my sake.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

As they are slubbered over, the malignity that remains will shew itself in some chronic disease.

Wiseman, Surgery.

2. To stain; to daub. [This seems to be from slobber, slabber, or slaver.]

You must be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition. Shakespeare, Othello.

O love, how sweet thou look'st now, and how gentle!

I should have slubber'd thee, and stain'd thy beauty.

Beaumont and Fl. Mod. Lover.

Lady, I ask your pardon, whose virtue I have slubbered with my tongue.

Beaumont and Fl. Cup. Revenge.

3. To cover coarsely or carelessly. This is now not in use, otherwise than as a low colloquial word.

A man of secret ambitious ends of his own, and of proportionate counsels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbered over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity. Watson, Paralled.

- To SLUBBER.* v. n. To be in a hurry; to move with hurry.

The main danger is the making too much haste, or a slubbing speed.

More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 368.

Which answers are to do not in a budding or slubbing fashion.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 6.

- SLUBBERDEGULLION. n. s. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, sorry wretch.

Quoth she, although thou hast deserv'd, Base slubberdegullion, to be serv'd
As thou didst vow to deal with me,
If thou hadst got the victory. Hudibras.

- SLUBBERINGLY.* adv. [from slubber.] In an imperfect or slovenly manner.

And slubberingly patch up some slight and shallow rhyme. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 21.

- SLUDGE. n. s. [I suppose from plough, slough, Saxon.] Mire; dirt mixed with water. The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud.

Mortimer.

- SLUG.† n. s. [slug, Danish, and slock, Dutch, signify a glutton, and thence one that has the sloth of a glutton. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Tooke refers slug, the reptile, to plough, Sax. slow, the past participle of pleacgian, tardare, to slow, to make or cause to be slow; and it may thus be applied to the first and second definitions.]

1. An idler; a drone; a slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy wretch.

Fie, what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not!

Shakespeare.

Why stand'st thou peeping here? thou great slug, forward! Beaumont and Fl. Wild-Goose Chase.
As for all other sorts of the Turks, both foot and horse, they are but slugs.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 183.

2. An hinderance; an obstruction.

Usury dulls and damps all improvements, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug.

Bacon, Ess. 41.

3. A kind of slow creeping snail.

We must ascribe it to the brutes, not excepting the most stupid of them, the slug and the beetle.

Search, Freewill, &c. p. 47.

4. [Slecq, a hammerhead, Saxon.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

Shooting arrows dipt in poison, and discharging slugs against our neighbour's reputation.

Barrow, Serm. i. 356.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs, there the scalp and cranium are driven in together.

Wiseman, Surgery.

As forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly, And ponderous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.

Pope.

- To SLUG. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie idle; to play the drone; to move slowly.

All he did was to deceive good knights, And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame, To slug in sloth and sensual delights, And end their days with irrenowned shame.

Spenser, F. Q.

He lay not all night slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenser on Ireland.
One went sluggish on with a thousand cares.

L'Estrange.

- To SLUG.* v. a. To make sluggish.

It worsens and slugs the most learned.

Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

- SLUG-A-BED.* n. s. One who is fond of lying in bed; a drone. Sherwood.

Why, lady! fie, you slug-a-bed! —
What, not a word? Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

- SLUGGARD. n. s. [from slug.] An idler; a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

This mightier sound shall make
The dead to rise,
And open tombs and open eyes,
To the long sluggards of five thousand years.

Cowley.

Up, up, says Avarice; thou snor'st again,
Stretchest thy limbs, and yawn'st, but all in vain:
The tyrant Lucie no denial takes;
At his command the unwilling sluggard wakes.

Dryden.

- SLUGGARD.* adj. Lazy; sluggish.

Sprightly May commands our youth to keep
The vigils of her night, and breaks their sluggard sleep.

Dryden.

- To SLUGGARDIZE. v. a. [from sluggard.]

To make idle; to make dronish.
Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.

Shakespeare.

- SLUGGISH.† adj. [from slug. Dr. Johnson.—Our old adjective was slug, and sluggy. See Huloet. And also SLUGGY.] Dull; drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle; insipid; slow; inactive; inert.

Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin,
Upon a slothful ass he chose to ride.

Spenser, F. Q.

The dull billows, thick as troubled mire,
Whom neither wind out of their seat could force,
Nor tides did drive out of their sluggish source.

Spenser, F. Q.

One, bolder than the rest,
With his broad sword provok'd the sluggish beast.

Walter.

- Matter, being impotent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to stir or move itself. Woodward.
SLUGGISHLY.† adv. [from sluggish.] Dully; not nimbly; lazily; idly; slowly.

That they might not come sluggishly to possess what others had won for them.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 3.

- SLUGGISHNESS. n. s. [from sluggish.] Dulness; sloth; laziness; idleness; inertness.

The most of mankind are inclined by her thither, if they would take the pains; no less than birds to fly, and horses to run: which if they lose, it is through their own sluggishness, and by that means become her prodigies, not her children. B. Jonson.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off its sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what reason shall direct. Locke.

- SLUGGY.* adj. [from slug.] Sluggish. See the Prompt. Parv. It is once used by Chaucer.

- SLUICE.† n. s. [sluyse, Dutch; escluse, French; sclosa, Italian; from clausus, Latin, shut up: “slusa pro clausura, in lege Salica Francorum.” Kilian.] A watergate; a floodgate; a vent for water.

Two other precious drops that ready stood,
Each in their crystal sluice, he ere they fell
Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended.

Milton, P. L.

Divine Alpheus, who, by secret sluice,
Stole under seas to meet his Arethuse.

Milton, Arcades.

If we receive them all, they were more than seven; if only the natural sluices, they were fewer.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

As waters from her sluices, flow'd
Unbounded sorrow from her eyes. Prior.
Each sluice of affluent fortune open'd soon,
And wealth flow'd in at morning, night, and noon.

Harte.

- To SLUICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.

Like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out his inn-cent soul through streams of blood.

Shakespeare.

Veins of liquid ore sluic'd from the lake.

Milton, P. L.

You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop
Within these veins for pageants; but let honour
Call for my blood, I'll sluice it into streams;
Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
And let me hunt her through embattled foes
In dusty plains; there will I be the first.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

- SLUICK. adj. [from sluice.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.

And oft whole sheets descend of sluicy rain,
Suck'd by the spongy clouds from off the main:
The lofty skies at once come pouring down,
The promis'd crop and golden labours drown.

Dryden.

- To SLUMBER.† v. n. [plumepian, Saxon; slugmeren, Dutch; after which form our word was anciently written viz. “To slomeryn, dormito.” Prompt. Parv.]

1. To sleep lightly; to be not awake nor in profound sleep.

He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

Psalms.

Conscience wakes despair that slumber'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. To sleep; to repose. Sleep and slumber are often confounded.

Have ye chosen this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue, for the use you find
To slumber here?

Milton, P. L.

3. To be in a state of negligence and supineness.

Why slumbers Pope, who leads the tuneful train,
Nor hears that virtue which he loves complain?

Young.

To SLUMBER.† v. a.

1. To lay to sleep.

To slumber his conscience in the doing, he [Felton] studied other incentives.

Wotton, Life of D. of Buckingham.

When the tempest doth arise, which may disquiet us, throw us from our station, we may be ready and able, if not to becalme and slumber it, yet to becalme ourselves. Farrington, Sermon. (1647), p. 431.

2. To stupify; to stun.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse, And ere he could out of his swoon awake, Him to his castle brought. Spenser, F. Q.

To honest a deed after it was done, or to slumber his conscience in the doing, he studied other incentives. Wotton.

SLUMBER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.

And for his dreams, I wonder he's so fond To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

From carelessness it shall fall into slumber, and from a slumber it shall settle into a deep and long sleep; till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a lethargy, and that such an one that nothing but hell and judgment shall awaken it. South.

Labour and rest that equal periods keep; Obdient slumbers that can wake and weep. Pope.

2. Sleep; repose.

Boy! Lucius! fast asleep? It is no matter; Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Est'n lust and envy sleep, but love denies

Rest to my soul, and slumber to my eyes

Three days I promis'd to attend my doom,

And two long days and nights are yet to come.

Dryden.

SLUMBERER.* n. s. [from slumber; Sax. slumpepe.] One who slumbers.

A slumberer stretching on his bed.

Donne, Poems, p. 298.

SLUMBERING.* n. s. [from slumber.] State of repose.

God speaketh, yet man perceiveth it not; in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed.

Job, xxxiii. 15.

SLUMBEROUS. } adj. [from slumber.]

SLUMBERY.

1. Inviting to sleep; soporiferous; causing sleep.

The timely dew of sleep,

Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines

Our eyelids. Milton, P. L.

While pensive in the silent slumberous shade,

Sleep's gentle pow'rs her drooping eyes invade;

Minerva, life-like, on embodied air

Impress'd the form of Iphthema. Pope, Odys.

There every eye with slumberous chains she bound,

And dash'd the flowing goblets to the ground.

Pope.

2. Sleepy; not waking.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching: in this slumbery agitation, what have you heard her say?

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

SLUNG. The preterite and participle passive of sling.

SLUNK. The preterite and participle passive of slink.

Silence accompany'd; for beast, and bird,

They to their grassy couch, these to their nests,

Were slunk. Milton, P. L.

To SLUR.† v. a. [slorig, Teut. nasy; sloure, a slut. Dr. Johnson.—We had formerly the word slory, to make filthy, to sully, to which Kilian refers, and which Junius notices. It then became slurry, as in Sherwood's dictionary; and lastly, slur.]

1. To sully; to soil; to contaminate.

They impudently slur the gospel, in making it no better than a romanical legend.

Cudworth, Sermon, p. 73.

2. To pass lightly; to balk; to miss.

He [Christ] coming into the world on purpose to slight and slur that, which is of the greatest esteem and sweetest relish with the natural man.

More, Myst. of Godliness, B. 4. Ch. 1.

The athletes laugh in their sleeves, and not a little triumph to see the cause of Theism thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument slurred by them, and so their work done to their hands.

Cudworth.

Studious to please the genius of the times, With periods, points, and tropes, he slurs his crimes;

He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor,

And took but with intention to restore. Dryden.

3. To cheat; to trick.

What was the public faith found out for,

But to slur men of what they fought for?

Hudibras.

Come, seven 's the main,

Cries Ganymede; the usual trick:

Seven, slur a six; eleven a nick. Prior.

SLUR.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint reproach; slight disgrace.

Here's an ape made a king for shewing tricks; and the fox is then to put a slur upon him, in exposing him for sport to the scorn of the people.

L'Estrange.

No one can rely upon such an one, either with safety to his affairs, or without a slur to his reputation; since he that trusts a knave has no other recompence but to be accounted a fool for his pains.

South, Sermon.

2. Trick.

All the politicks of the great Are like the cunning of a cheat, That lets his false dice freely run, And trusts them to themselves alone; But never lets a true one stir Without some fling'ring trick or slur.

Butler, Rem.

3. [In music.] A mark denoting a connection of one note with another.

SLUSH, or SLOSH.* adj. [slask, Su. Goth.

Humor quicunque sordidus. Brockett.]

Applied to any thing in a melted, plashy

state; but generally to snow in a state of liquefaction. Both a northern and a Suffolk word. Craven Dial. Brockett, and Moor.

SLUT.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson refers to the Teut. slodde, sordida et inculca mulier;

Dr. Jamieson, to the same, and also to slet, in the same language, mulier ignava.

Mr. Tooke considers it as the past participle of slapan, to slow; slowed, slow'd, sloud, slout, slut; and observes that the word was formerly applied to males;

which seems to have continued long after the time in which he has noticed that usage: Hence in our Homilies,

"Men, when they intend to have their friends or neighbours to come to their houses to eat or drink with them,— will have their houses to be clean and fine, lest they should be counted sluttish, or little to regard their friends." Hom.

for repairing the Church.]

1. A dirty person; now confined to a dirty woman.

Among these other of sloudes kinde,

Whiche all labour set behinde,

And hateth all besiness, There is yet one, which Idleness

Is cleped: —

In wynter doth he nought for cold,

In summer maie he nought for hete!

Gower, Conf. Am. B. S.

He ran away disguised, some say in women's clothes, like a coward or a slut.

Favours, Antiq. Triumph over Nov. (1619), p. 391.

Cricket, to Windsor chimnies shalt thou leap:

Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry;

Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttish. Shaks.

The veal's all rags, the butter's turn'd to oil;

And thus I buy good meat for sluts to spoil.

King.

2. A word of slight contempt to a woman.

Hold up, you sluts,

Your aprons mountant; you're not oathable,

Although I know you'll swear. Shaks. Timon.

The frogs were ready to leap out of their skins for joy, till one crafty old slut in the company advised them to consider a little better on't.

L'Estrange.

SLUTTERY. n. s. [from slut.] The qualities or practice of a slut.

Sluttish, to such neat excellence oppos'd,

Should make desire vomit emptiness.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

These make our girls their sluttish ruy,

By pinching them both black and blue;

And put a penny in their shoe,

The house for cleanly sweeping. Dryden.

A man gave money for a black, upon an opinion that his swarthy colour was rather sluttish than nature, and the fault of his master that kept him

no cleaner. L'Estrange.

SLUTTISH. adj. [from slut.]

1. Nasty; not nice; not cleanly; dirty; indecently negligent of cleanliness.

All preparations both for food and lodging such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so sluttish a vice.

Sidney.

Albeit the mariners do covet store of cabins, yet indeed they are but sluttish dens that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with their splinters. Raleigh, Essays.

The nastiness of that nation, and sluttish course of life, hath much promoted the opinion; occasioned by their servile condition at first, and inferior ways of parsimony ever since.

Brown.

Slutful disorder fill'd his stable,

And sluttish plenty deck'd her table. Prior.

2. It is used sometimes for meretricious.

She got a legacy by sluttish tricks. Holiday.

SLUTTISHLY.† adv. [from sluttish.] In a sluttish manner; nastily; dirtily.

They have taken a toil, surely very laborious, out of infinite huge volumes to pick whatsoever may seem to be either absurd, or falsely, or fondly, or scandalously, or dishonestly, or passionately, or sluttishly, conceived or written.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

SLUTTISHNESS. n. s. [from sluttish.] The qualities or practice of a slut; nastiness; dirtiness.

That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in sluttishness.

Sidney.

I look on the instinct of this noisome and troublesome creature, the louse, of searching out foul and nasty clothes to harbour and breed in, as an effect of Divine Providence, designed to deter men and women from sluttishness and sordidness, and to provoke them to cleanliness and neatness.

Ray on the Creation.

SLY.† adj. [jhlð, Saxon, slippery, Icel. versutus; slug, Su. Goth. "sly, cunning,"

Spegel's Su. Goth. Gloss. Slygh was an ancient form of our word: "slygh as serpentis." Wicliffe, St. Matt. x. See also SLEIGHT.]

1. Meantly artful; secretly insidious; cunning.

For my sly wiles and subtle craftiness,
The title of the kingdom I possess.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

And for I doubt the Greekish monarch sly,
Will use with him some of his wonted craft.

Fairfax.

His proud step he scornful turn'd,
And with sly circumspection. Milton, P. L.
Envy is a cursed plant: some fibres of it are rooted almost in every man's nature, and it works in a sly and imperceptible manner. Watts.

It is odious in a man to look sly and leering at a woman. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. Slight; thin; fine. Not in use.
Lids devis'd of substance sly.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 46.

SLYLY.† adv. [from sly. This is the correct spelling.] With secret artifice; insidiously.
See SLILY.

Hypocrites,

That slyly speak one thing, another think. Philips.
SLYNESS.* n. s. See SLINESS. But sly- ness is to be preferred. Addison so writes it.

To SMACK.† v. n. [mæccan, Saxon; smaecken, Dutch.]

1. To have a taste; to be tinged with any particular taste. Huloet.
[It] smacketh like pepper. Barret, Alb. (1580.)

2. To have a tincture or quality infused.
All sects, all ages, smack of this vice, and he
To die for it! Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

He is but a bastard to the time,
That doth not smack of observation.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Ceremonies smacking of paganism or popery.

Fuller, Sermon of Reformat. (1643), p. 18.

3. To make a noise by separation of the lips strongly pressed together, as after a taste.

He that by a willing audience and attention doth readily suck it [slander] up, or who greedily swalloweth it down by credulous approbation and assent; he that pleasingly reliseth it, and smacketh at it; as he is a partner in the fact, so he is a sharer in the guilt. Barrow, vol. i. S. 17.

She kiss'd with smacking lip the smoring lout;
For such a kiss demands a pair of gloves. Gay.

4. To kiss with a close compression of the lips, so as to be heard when they separate.

He gives a smacking buss. Pope.

To SMACK. v. a.

1. To kiss.
So careless flowers, strow'd on the water's face,
The curled whirlpools suck, and embrace,
Yet drown them. Donne.

2. To make to emit any quick smart noise.
More than one steel must Delia's empire feel,
Who sits triumphant o'er the flying wheel;
And as she guides it through the admiring throng,
With what an air she smacks the silken thong!

Young.

SMACK.† n. s. [mæc, Sax. smaeck, Dutch;
from the verb.]

1. Taste; savour.

2. Tincture; quality from something mixed.
The child, that sucketh the milk of the nurse, learns his first speech of her; the which, being the first inured to his tongue, is ever after most pleasing unto him; inasmuch, that though he afterwards be taught English, yet the smack of the first will always abide with him. Spenser.

Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time, and have a care of your health. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It caused the neighbours to rue, that a petty smack only of popery opened a gap to the oppression of the whole. Carew.

As the Pythagorean soul
Runs through all beasts, and fish and fowl,
And has a smack of ev'ry one,
So love does, and has ever done. Hudibras.

3. A pleasing taste.
Stack pease upon hovel;
To cover it quickly let owner regard,
Lest dove and the cadow there finding a smack,
With ill stormy weather do perish thy stack. Tusser.

4. A small quantity; a taste.
Trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach,
H' essays the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack. Dryden, Pers.

5. The act of parting the lips audibly, as after a pleasing taste.

6. A loud kiss.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss'd her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shaks. Tam. of the Shrew.
I saw the lecherous citizen turn back
His head, and on his wife's lip steal a smack. Donne.

7. [Snacca, Saxon; sneckra, Icelandick.]
A small ship.

8. A blow, given with the flat of the hand: a vulgar word; as, a smack on the face.

SMALL.† adj. [mal, Sax. smal, Dutch;
small, S. Goth.]

1. Little in quantity; not great.
For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee. Isa. liv. 7.
Death only this mysterious truth unfolds,
The mighty soul how small a body holds. Dryden, Jew.

All numeration is but still the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole together a distinct name, whereby to distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Locke.

The ordinary smallest measure we have is looked on as an unit in number. Locke.

The danger is less when the quantity of the fluids is too small, than when it is too great; for a smaller quantity will pass where a larger cannot, but not contrariwise. Arbutnot.

Good cooks cannot abide fiddling work: such is the dressing of small birds, requiring a world of cookery. Swift.

2. Slender; exile; minute.
Your sin and calf I burnt, and ground it very small, till it was as small as dust. Deut. ix. 21.
Those wav'd their limber fans
For wings, and smallest lineaments exact. Milton, P. L.

Small-grained sand is esteemed the best for the tenant, and the large for the landlord and land. Mortimer, Husb.

3. Little in degree.
There arose no small stir about that way. Acts, xix. 23.

4. Little in importance; petty; minute.
Is it a small matter that thou hast taken my husband? Genesis.
Narrow man being fill'd with little shares,
Courts, city, church, are all shops of small wares;
All having blown to sparks their noble fire,
And drawn their sound gold ingot into wire. Donne.

Some men's behaviour is like a verse, wherein every syllable is measured: how can a man comprehend great matters that breaketh his mind too much to small observations? Bacon.

Knowing, by fame, small poets, small musicians,

Small painters, and still smaller politicians. Harte.
Small is the subject, but not so the praise. Pope.

5. Little in the principal quality: as, small beer; not strong; weak.
Go down to the cellar to draw ale or small beer. Suiff.

6. Gentle; soft; melodious.
The company answered all
With voices sweet untuned, and so small,
That mo thought it the sweetest melody,
That ever I heard in my life soothingly. Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

After the fire a still small voice, [still and soft voice, Transl. of 1578.] 1 Kings, xix. 12.

SMALL. n. s. [from the adjective.] The small or narrow part of any thing. It is particularly applied to the part of the leg below the calf.

Her garment was cut after such a fashion, that though the length of it reached to the ancles, yet in her going one might sometimes discern the small of her leg. Sidney.

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,
And all her calfs into a gouty small. Suckling.

His excellency, having mounted on the small of my leg, advanced forwards. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

To SMALL.* v. a. To make little or less.
Obsolete. Prompt. Parv.

SMALLAGE. n. s. [from small age, because it soon withers. Skinner. Elceselinon, Lat.] A plant. It is a species of parsley, and a common weed by the sides of ditches and brooks. Miller.

Smallage is raised by slips or seed, which is reddish, and pretty big, of a roundish oval figure;
a little more full and rising on one side than the other, and streaked from one end to the other. Mortimer, Husb.

SMALLCOAL. n. s. [small and coal.] Little wood coals used to light fires.

A smallcoal man, by waking one of these distressed gentlemen, saved him from ten years' imprisonment. Spectator.

When smallcoal murmurs in the hoarser throat,
From smutty dangers guard thy threaten'd coat. Gay.

SMALLCRAFT. n. s. [small and craft.] A little vessel below the denomination of ship.

Shall he before me sign, whom t' other day
A smallcraft vessel hither did convey;
Where stain'd with prunes and rotten figs he lay? Dryden.

SMALLISH.* adj. Somewhat small.
His shoulders of large brede;
And, smallish in the girdelstede,
He sowed like a purtreiture. Chaucer, Rom. R. 826.

SMALLPOX. n. s. [small and pox.] An eruptive distemper of great malignity;
variole.

He fell sick of the smallpox. Wiseman.

SMALLY.* adj. [smallig, Icel. smallig, Germ.] Little: still used in the north, in the sense of puny. See Brockett's N. C.
Words.

Reasons declared both by the bishop of Canterbury and me to make smallly or nothing to your purpose. K. Hen. VIII. Lett. Burnet's Ref. Rec. i. 366.

SMALLY. adv. [from small.] In a little quantity; with minuteness; in a little or low degree.

A child that is still, and somewhat hard of wit, is never chosen by the father to be made a scholar, or else, when he cometh to the school, is smallly regarded.

Ascham.

SMALNESS.† n. s. [from small.]

1. Littleness; not greatness.

The parts in glass are evenly spread, but are not so close as in gold; as we see by the easy admission of light, and by the smallness of the weight.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Littleness; want of bulk; minuteness; exility.

Whatsoever is invisible, in respect of the fineness of the body, or the smallness of the parts, or subtilty of the motion, is little enough.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The smallness of the rays of light may contribute very much to the power of the agent by which they are refracted.
Newton, Opt.

3. Want of strength; weakness.

4. Gentleness; softness: as, "the smallness of a woman's voice."
Barret.

SMALT.† n. s. [smalto, Ital. smaelta, smelta, to melt, Su. Goth.]

1. A beautiful blue substance, produced from two parts of zaffre being fused with three parts common salt, and one part potash.
Hill on Fossils.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water: and moreover turnsoil with lac mingled with smalt of bice.
Peacham.

2. Blue glass.

SMARAGD.* n. s. [smaragde, old Fr. smaragdus, Gr.] The emerald.

The fourth was of a smaragde or an emerald.
Bale on the Rev. P. III. (1550.) Hh. 6. b.
A table of gold richly adorned with carbuncles, smaragdes, and other precious stones.
Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 196.

SMARAGDINE.† adj. [smaragdin, French.] Made of emerald; resembling emerald.

SMART. n. s. [rmeopta, Saxon; smert, Dutch; smarta, Swedish.]

1. Quick, pungent, lively pain.

Then her mind, though too late, by the smart, was brought to think of the disease.
Sidney.

2. Pain; corporal or intellectual.

Mishaps are master'd by advice discreet, And counsel mitigates the greatest smart.
Spenser, F. Q.

It increased the smart of his present sufferings, to compare them with his former happiness.
Atterbury.

TO SMART. v. n. [rmeoptan, Sax. smerten, Dutch.]

1. To feel quick lively pain.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal.
South.

Human blood, when first let, is mild, and will not make the eye or a fresh wound smart.
Arbuthnot.

2. To feel pain of body or mind.

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it.
Proverbs.

No creature smarts so little as a fool.

Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee break, Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack.
Pope.

SMART. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Pungent; sharp; causing smart.

How smart a lash that speech doth give my conscience!
Shakespeare.

To the fair he fain would quarter show,
His tender heart recoils at every blow;
If unawares he gives too smart a stroke,
He means but to correct, and not provoke.
Granville.

2. Quick; vigorous; active.

That day was spent in smart skirmishes, in which many fell.
Clarendon.

This sound proceeded from the nimble and smart percussions of the ambient air, made by the swift and irregular motions of the particles of the liquors.
Boyle.

3. Producing any effect with force and vigour.

After showers,
The stars shine smarter, and the moon adorns,
As with unborrow'd beams, her sharpen'd horns.
Dryden.

4. Acute; witty.

It was a smart reply that Augustus made to one that ministered this comfort of the fatality of things: this was so far from giving any ease to his mind, that it was the very thing that troubled him.
Tillotson.

5. Brisk; vivacious; lively.

You may see a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, during the whole course of his harangue. A deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver.
Addison.

Who, for the poor renown of being smart,
Would leave a sting within a brother's heart?
Young.

SMART. n. s. A fellow affecting briskness and vivacity. A cant word.

TO SMARTEN.* v. a. [from smart.] To make smart or showy: a modern and unauthorized term.

TO SMARTLE.* v. n. [perhaps from smelta, smelta, Su. Goth. to melt.] To smartle away, is to waste or melt away.
North. See Ray, and Grose.

SMARTLY. adv. [from smart.] After a smart manner; sharply; briskly; vigorously; wittily.

The art, order, and gravity of those proceedings, where short, severe, constant rules were set, and smartly pursued, made them less taken notice of.
Clarendon.

SMARTNESS.† n. s. [from smart.]

1. The quality of being smart; quickness; vigour.

What interest such a smartness in striking the air hath in the production of sound, may in some measure appear by the motion of a bullet, and that of a switch or other wand, which produce no sound, if they do but slowly pass through the air; whereas if the one do smartly strike the air, and the other be shot out of a gun, the celerity of their percussions on the air puts it into an undulating motion, which, reaching the ear, produces an audible noise.
Boyle.

2. Liveliness; briskness; wittiness.

To those sharp, satirical, and popular invectives — your ladyship hath given as much (or more) edge and smartness, as ever I found from any.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 110.

It is not to be expected, that, in a paraphrase, I should preserve the smartness that is in many of these sentences.
Patrick on Proverbs, Arg.

I defy all the clubs to invent a new phrase, equal in wit, humour, smartness, or politeness, to my set.
Swift.

TO SMASH.* v. a. [smaccare, Ital. to crush; schmeissen, Germ. to throw, to cast down.] To break in pieces: rather a low word.

TO SMATCH.* v. n. [corrupted from smack.] To have a taste.

Allowing his description therein to retain and smatch of verities.

Banister, Hist. of Man, (1578,) fol. 22.

SMATCH. n. s. [corrupted from smack.]

1. Taste; tincture; twang.

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;
Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in't.
Shakespeare.

Some nations may be found to have a peculiar guttural or nasal smatch in their language.

Holder, Elem. of Speech, p. 59.
These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixt with a smatch of a vitriolic.
Grew.

2. [Cæruleo, Lat.] A bird.

TO SMATTER.† v. n. [It is supposed to be corrupted from smack or taste. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius refers it to the Icel. smædr, contemptus, diminutus, from smac, small; Dr. Jamieson adds the form of smatt, small, in the same language.]

1. To have a slight taste; to have a slight, superficial, and imperfect knowledge. See SMATTERING. Huloet.

2. To talk superficially or ignorantly.
In proper terms, such as men smatter,
When they throw out and miss the matter.
Hudibras.

Of state-affairs you cannot smatter;
Are awkward when you try to flatter.
Swift.

SMATTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Superficial or slight knowledge.

All other sciences were extinguished during this empire, excepting only a smatter of judicial astrology.
Temple.

SMATTERER.† n. s. [from smatter.] One who has a slight or superficial knowledge.
Huloet.

Smatterers in other men's matters, talebearers.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 364.
Every smatterer thinks all the circle of arts confined to the closet of his breast.

Bp. Hall, Fall of Pride.
There are certain sciolists or smatterers, that are busy in the skirts and outsides of learning, and have scarce any thing of solid literature to commend them.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

These few, who preserve any rudiments of learning, are, except one or two smatterers, the clergy's friends.
Swift.

SMATTERING.* n. s. [from smatter.] Superficial knowledge. The introduction of this substantive is, in the first example, a kind of parish-benefaction; as it will be a lasting caution against the dangerous character so well described.

A quarrelsome man in a parish, especially if he have gotten a little smattering of law, is like a colic in the guts, that tears, and wrings, and torments a whole township.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 70.

I got among those Venetians some smatterings of the Italian tongue.
Howell, Lett. i. i. 3.

A smattering in knowledge (which is the measure of a wit) disposes men to atheism; whereas a full proportion would carry them through to the sense of God and religion.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. I.
Such a practice gives a slight smattering of several sciences without any solid knowledge.

Watts.
Since by a little smattering in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion, may he find it again by harder study and an humble mind!
Bentley.

TO SMEAR.† v. a. [rmejan, Saxon; smeeren, Teut. Dr. Johnson. — From meap, Sax. marrow, merghe, Teut. merg, Su. Goth. the same; the Icel. smior, Germ. schmer, &c. omnis generis pinguedo, as butter, ointments, &c. being from the same root; as marrow, Dr. Jamieson well observes, would be the first fat substance known. See Dr. Jamieson in V. SMERGH, and Wachter in V. SCHMER.]

1. To overspread with something viscous and adhesive; to besmear.

If any such be here, that love this painting,
Wherein you see me smear'd,
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
Let him wave thus. Shakespeare, Othello.

Then from the mountain heaving timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk,

Smear'd as she was with black Gorgonian blood,
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood. Dryden.

2. To soil; to contaminate.
Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?
Who smear'd thus, and mir'd with infamy,
I might have said no part of it is mine. Shaks.

SMEAR. n. s. [from the verb.] An ointment; any fat liquor or juice.

SMEARY. adj. [from smear.] Dawby; adhesive.

A *smear*y foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my labouring frame. Rowe.

SMEATH. n. s. A sea-fowl.

To SMEETH, or Smutch.† v. a. [ʃmʊðe, Saxon.] To smoke; to blacken with smoke. Not in use. Dr. Johnson cites no authority for this word. In Sherwood's old dictionary, "To Smeech, or Smutch," occurs; but not To Smeech; and it is probable, that smeetch might have been a word used for smutch, though I know of no authority for it.

To SMEETH.* v. a. The Saxon form of smooth, and still used in some parts of the north. See To SMOOTH.

SMEGMATICK. adj. [σμήγμα.] Soapy; detensive. Dict.

To SMELL v. a. pret. and part. smelt. [Of this word the etymology is very obscure. Skinner, the most acute of all etymologists, derives it from smoel, warm, Dutch; because smells are increased by heat.]

1. To perceive by the nose.

Their neighbours hear the same musick, or smell the same perfumes with themselves: for here is enough. Collier.

2. To find out by mental sagacity.

The horse smelt him out, and presently a croquet came in his head how to countermine him. L'Estrange.

To SMELL. v. n.

1. To strike the nostrils.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it does to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

The faintest smells of flowers are out of those plants whose leaves smell not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To have any particular scent: with of.
Honey in Spain smelleth apparently of the rosemary or orange, from whence the bee gathereth it. Bacon.

A work of this nature is not to be performed upon one leg, and should smell of oil if duly handled. Brown.

If you have a silver saucepan, and the butter smells of smoky, lay the fault upon the coals. Swift.

3. To have a particular tincture or smack of any quality.

My unsold'd name, the austereness of my life, Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report,
And smell of calumny. Shakespeare.

A man so smelling of the people's lee,
The court receiv'd him first for charity. Dryden.

4. To practise the act of smelling.

Whosoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, shall be cut off. Exod. xxx. 38.

I had a mind to know whether they would find out the treasure, and whether smelling enabled them to know what is good for their nourishment. Addison, Spect.

5. To exercise sagacity.

Down with the nose, take the bridge quite away,
Of him that, his particular to forefind,
Smells from the general weal. Shakespeare.

SMELL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Power of smelling; the sense of which the nose is the organ.

Next, in the nostrils she doth use the smell,
As God the breath of life in them did give;
So makes he now this power in them to dwell,
To judge all airs, whereby we breathe and live. Davies.

2. Scent; power of affecting the nose.

The sweetest smell in the air is the white double violet, which comes twice a-year. Bacon.
All sweet smells have joined with them some earthy or crude odours. Bacon.

Pleasant smells are not confined upon vegetables, but found in divers animals. Brown, Vulg. Err.
There is a great variety of smells, though we have but a few names for them: the smell of a violet and of musk, both sweet, are as distinct as any two smells. Locke.

SMELLER.† n. s. [from smell.]

1. One who smells.

2. One who is smelled.

These left-handed rascals,
The very vomit, sir, of hospitals,
Bridewells, and spital-houses; such nasty smellers,
That if they'd been unfurnish'd of club-truncheons,
They might have cudgell'd me with their very stinks. Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

3. The organ of smelling.

SMELEFAST.† n. s. [smell and feast.] A parasite; one who haunts good tables.

Smellfast Vitellio
Smiles on his master for a meal or two. Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

Who has a stupid intellect, a broken memory, and a blasted wit, and (which is worse than all) a blind and benighted conscience, but the intemperate and luxurious, the epicure and the smellfast? South, Sermon. iii. 75.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten; whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smellfast that sponges upon other people's trenchers. L'Estrange.

SMELLING.* n. s. [from smell.] The sense by which smells are perceived.

If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? if the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? 1 Cor. xii. 17.

SMELT. The pret. and part. pass. of smell.

A cudgel he had felt,
And far enough on this occasion smelt. King.

SMELT.† n. s. [smelt, Saxon.]

1. A small sea fish.
Of round fish there are brit, sprat, barn, smells. Cervus.

2. A salmon in its first year: so called in the north of England.

To SMELT.† v. n. [smalta, Icelandic; smaelta, smelta, Su. Goth. smelten, Dutch.] To melt ore, so as to extract the metal.

A sort of earth, of a dusky red colour, found chiefly in iron mines. Some of this earth contains as much iron as to render it worth smelting. Woodward.

He [Ray] added the way of smelting and refining such metals and minerals as England doth produce. Derham, Life of Ray.

SMEALTER. n. s. [from smelt.] One who melts ore.

The smelters come up to the assayers.

Woodward on Fossils.

To SMERK.† v. n. [ʃmɛrcian, Saxon.]

Dr. Johnson also gives the word in the form of smirk; which is the usual way of writing it, though smerk is conformable to the etymology. This verb, as an English word, is more than a century older than the time of Swift and Young from whom here and under smirk Dr. Johnson's examples are taken. The proposition of the Sax. mupig, (merry), with s prefixed, as the origin of this word, by Dr. Jamieson, is ingenious, and probably will not be disputed.] To smile wantonly, or pertly; to seem highly pleased; to seem favourable; to fawn.

I have plainly laid before your view
That I have cause, as these, to plaine of Fortune's guile,
Which smirking though at first she seeme to smother and smile. Mir. for Mag. p. 477.

Certain gentlemen of the gown, whose awkward, spruce, prim, sneering, and smirking countenances have got good preferment by force of cringing. Swift.

SMERK, or Smirk.* n. s. [ʃmɛrc, Saxon, risus.] A kind of fawning smile.

The Pict stood before him in the utmost confusion, with the prettiest smirk imaginable on the finished side of her face, pale as ashes on the other. Spectator, No. 41.

A constant smirk upon the face, and a whiffing activity of the body, are strong indications of futility. Ld. Chesterfield.

SMERKY, or Smirk.† adj. Nice; smart; jaunty. The adjective smirk is noticed both by Cotgrave and Sherwood, "brisk, smug, tricky."

Seest, how brag yon bullocke bears,
So smirke, so smoothe, his pricked ears:
His horns been as broad as rainbow bent,
His dew-lap as lithe as lass of Kent. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

SMERLIN. n. s. [cobitis aculeata.] A fish. Ainsworth.

To SMICKER.* v. n. [smickra, Swed. blandire. Serenius.] To smirk; to look amorously or wantonly. Kersey.

SMICKERING.* n. s. [from smicker.] A look of amorous inclination.

We had a young doctour, who rode by our coach, and seemed to have a smickering to our young lady of Pilton. Dryden, Lett. (ed. Malone), p. 88.

SMICKET. n. s. [Diminutive of smock, smocket, smicket.] The under garment of a woman.

SMIDY.* n. s. [schmidt, German; smide, Sax. See SMITH.] The shop of a smith. This word is still used in the north of England.

His pate is his anvil, the forge his study; so as I may properly apply those antient verses, upon this occasion, to our truant chanterymen:

That scholar well deserves a widdie,
Who makes his study of a smiddie.
Comment on Chaucer, (1665), p. 50.

To SMIGHT. For smite.

As when a griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encountreth in his flight,
Through widest air making his idle way,
That would his rightful ravin rend away:
With hideous horror both together smight,
And souce so sore that they the heavens affray. Spenser, F. Q.

To SMILE.† v. n. [smuylen, Teut. smila, Dan. and Swed. subridere. Serenius.]

1. To contract the face with pleasure; to express kindness, love, or gladness, by the countenance: contrary to frown.
A fool lighth up his voice with laughter, but a wise man doth scarce smile a little.

Ecclesi. xxi. 20.

The goddess of the mountain smiled upon her votaries, and cheered them in their passage to her palace.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake. Pope.

She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain,
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again. Pope.

But when her anxious lord return'd,
Rais'd is her head; her eyes are dry'd:
She smiles, as William ne'er had mourn'd,
She looks, as Mary ne'er had died. Prior.

2. To express slight contempt by the look.

Our king replied, which some will smile at now, but according to the learning of that time.

Camden.

Should some more sober critick come abroad,
If wrong, I smile; if right, I kiss the rod. Pope.

'Twas what I said to Craggs and Child,
Who prais'd my modesty, and smil'd. Pope.

3. To look gay or joyous.

Let their heirs enrich their time
With smiling plenty and fair prosp'rous days.
Shakespeare.

For see the morn,
All unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosy progress smiling. Milton, P. L.

All things smil'd,
Birds on the branches warbling,
The river of bliss through midst of heaven
Rolls o'er Elysian flowers her amber stream;
With these, that never fade, the spirits elect Kind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams;

Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
Impurpled with celestial roses smil'd.
Milton, P. L.

The desert smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.

4. To be favourable; to be propitious.

Then let me not let pass Occasion which now smiles. Milton, P. L.
Me all too mean for such a task I ween,
Yet if the sov'reign lady deigns to smile,
I'll follow Horace with impetuous heat,
And clothe the verse in Spenser's native style.

Prior.

- To SMILE* v. a. To awe with a contemptuous smile.

The courtly Roman's smiling path to tread,
And sharply smile prevailing folly dead.

Young, Love of Fame, Sat. 1.

- SMILE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A slight contraction of the face; a look of pleasure, or kindness: opposed to frown.

I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.—
—Oh that your frowns would teach my smiles
such skill. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

No man marks the narrow space
'Twixt a prison and a smile. Wolton.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious titled then the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their flame
Ignobly, to the trains and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists. Milton, P. L.

Sweet intercourse
Of looks and smiles: for smiles from reason flow,
To brute denied, and are of love the food.
Milton, P. L.

2. Gay or joyous appearance.

Yet what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains and her sunny shores,
VOL. III.

With all the gifts that heav'n and earth impart,
The smiles of nature and the charms of art?

Addison.

- SMILER* n. s. [from smile.] One who smiles.

Know, smiler, at thy peril thou art pleas'd;
Thy pleasure is the promise of thy pain.

Young, Night Th. 1.

- SMILINGLY. adv. [from smiling.] With a look of pleasure.

His flaw'd heart,

'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief, Burst smilingly. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Carnades stopping him smilingly, told him,
we are not so forward to lose good company. Boyle.

- To SMILT. v. n. [corrupted from smelt, or melt.]

Having too much water, many corns will smilt, or have their pulp turned into a substance like thick cream. Mortimer.

- To SMIRCH. v. a. [from murk or murky.]

To cloud; to dusk; to soil.
I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face.

Shakespeare.

Like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worn-eaten tapestry. Shakespeare.

- To SMIRK. v. n. To look affectedly soft or kind.

Her grizzled locks assume a smirking grace,
And art has level'd her deep-furrow'd face.

Young.

- SMIT. The participle passive of smite.

Fir'd with the views this glittering scene displays,
And smit with passion for my country's praise,
My artless reed attempts this lofty theme,
Where sacred Iris rolls her ancient stream. Tickell.

- To SMITE.† v. a. pret. smote; part. pass. smit, smitten. [smitan, Saxon; smijten, Dutch.]

1. To strike; to reach with a blow; to pierce.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows.

Shakespeare.

The sun shall not smite thee by day. Ps. cxi. 6.
Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpiere'd shade

The sword of Satan with steep force to smite, Descending. Milton, P. L.

And the flax and the barley was smitten, but the wheat and the rye not. Exodus.

5. To affect with any passion.

I wander where the muses haunt,
Clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill,
Smit with the love of sacred song. Milton, P. L.
Tempt not the Lord thy God, he said, and stood;
But Satan smitten with amazement fell.

Milton, P. R.

See what the charms that smite the simple heart,
Not touch'd by nature, and not reached by art.

Pope.

Smit with the love of sister arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.

Pope.

To SMITE. v. n. To strike; to collide.
The heart melteth, and the knees smite together.

Nalam.

that a smock close girt unto them with a towel.
Sandys.

Though Artemisia talks by fits
Of councils, classicks, fathers, wits;
Reads Malbranche, Boyle, and Locke;
Yet in some things, methinks, she fails;
'Twere well if she would pare her nails,
And wear a cleaner smock. Pope.

2. Smock is used in a ludicrous kind of composition for any thing relating to women.

At smock-treason, matron, I believe you;
And if I were your husband; but when I Trust to your cob-wee bosoms any other,
Let me there die a fly, and feast your spider.
B. Jonson.

Plague on his smock loyalty!
I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey by love.
Dryden.

SMOCKFACED.† adj. [smock and face.] Pale-faced; maidenly; effeminate.

Your smock-faced boy. Dryden, Juv.

Looking so smoothly and innocently on it, and so deceiving them. More, Conf. Cobb. p. 226.

SMO'OTHNESS. n. s. [from smooth.]

1. Evenness on the surface; freedom from asperity.

A countryman feeding his flock by the sea-side, it was so delicate a fine day, that the smoothness of the water tempted him to set up for a merchant.
L' Estrange.

The nymph is all into a laurel gone,
The smoothness of her skin remains alone. Dryden.

2. Softness or mildness on the palate.

Fallacious drink! ye honest men beware,
Nor trust its smoothness; the third circling glass
Suffices virtue. Philips.

3. Sweetness and softness of numbers.

As French has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's age. Temple.

Virgil, though smooth, where smoothness is required, is so far from affecting it, that he rather disdains it; frequently using synalephas, and concluding his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

4. Blandness and gentleness of speech.

She is too subtle for thee; and her smoothness,
Her very silence, and her patience,
Speak to the people, and they pity her. Shakespeare.

SMOTE. The pret. of smite.

Death—with a trident smote. Milton, P. L.

To SMO'THER. v. a. [ŕmopan, Saxon.]

1. To suffocate with smoke, or by exclusion of the air.

She might give passage to her thoughts, and so as it were utter out some smoke of those flames, wherewith else she was not only burned but smothered.
Sidney.

We smother'd

The most replenished sweet work of nature,

That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd.
Shakespeare.

We are enow yet living in the field,

To smother up the English in our throngs.
Shakespeare, Hen. V.

The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,

Sees the dry desert all around him rise,

And smother'd in the dusty whirlwind dies.
Addison, Cato.

2. To suppress.

Lewd and wicked custom, beginning perhaps at the first amongst few, afterwards spreading into greater multitudes, and so continuing; from time may be of force, even in plain things, to smother the light of natural understanding. Hooker.

She was warmed with the graceful appearance of the hero: she smothered those sparkles out of decency, but conversation blew them up into a flame. Dryden, Æn. Ded.

To SMO'THER.† v. n.

1. To smoke without vent.

Hay and straw have a very low degree of heat;
but yet close and smothering, and which drieth not.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To be suppressed or kept close.

What, in to this grave? —

Yea, there shall ye consume. —

And what, sholde I smoder here? —

Yea, by my faith, and never more appeere.

Old Morality of Every Man.

The advantage of conversation is such, that, for want of company, a man had better talk to a post than let his thoughts lie smoking and smothering.

Collier on Friendship.

SMO'THER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A state of suppression. Not in use.

This unfortunate prince, after a long smother of discontent, and hatred of many of his nobility and people, breaking forth at times into seditions, was at last distressed by them. Bacon.

A man were better relate himself to a statue, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother. Bacon.

Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and therefore men should procure to know more, and not to keep their suspicions in smother. Bacon, Essays.

2. Smoke; thick dusk.

Thus must I from the smoke into the smother,

From tyrant duke into a tyrant brother. Shaks.

Where you disorder'd heap of ruin lies,
Stones rent from stones, where clouds of dust arise,
Amid that smother Neptune holds his place.

Dryden, Æn.

The greater part enter only like mutes to fill the stage, and spend their taper in smoke and smother.

Collier on Fame.

To SMOUCH.* v. a. [perhaps from smack.]

To salute; answering to our buss. North.

Pegee.

What bussing, what smouching and slabbering

one of another!

Stubbes, Anat. of Abuses, (1595.) p. 114.

SMO'ULDERING. } [This word seems a par-

SMO'ULDRY. } ticipate; but I know not whether the verb smoulder be in use:

[ŕmoxan, Saxon; to smother; smoel, Dutch,

hot.] Burning and smoking without vent.

None can breathe, nor see, nor hear at will,

Through smouldry cloud of dusky stinking smoke.

That the only breath him daunts who hath escap'd the stroke. Spenser, F. Q.

In some close pent room it crept along,

And, smouldering as it went, in silence fed;

Till the infant monster, with devouring strong,

Walk'd boldly upright with exalted head. Dryden.

SMUDGE.* n. s. A suffocating smoke. North of England. Grose. The verb is used in the same parts, in the sense of to burn without flame. Whether it be a corruption of smoke or smutch, or derived from the Welsh mwg, smoke, as the ingenious editor of the Craven Dialect states it, I leave to the decision of others.

SMUG.* adj. [smuck, dress; smucken, to dress. Teut. Dr. Johnson. — Smug is the past participle of the Sax. ŕmægan, ŕmeagan, deliberare, studere, considerare.

Applied to the person, or to dress, it means studied; that on which care and attention have been bestowed. Mr. H.

Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 342. — It appears to have been a common word in the northern languages. Icel. smackr; Norv.

et Sueth. olim smuck, pulcher, hilaris, according to Serenius; schmuck, German, elegans, venustus, politus; ŕmucepe, Sax.

elegans. See also Spegel's Su. Goth.

Gloss. "Smuck, Angl. smug; smuckia, to be smug, fine, &c."]

1. Nice; spruce; dressed with affectation of niceness, but without elegance.

Dost thou think I'm a sixpenny jug?

No, wis ye, Jack, I look a little more smug.

Preston, Trag. of Cambrises, (1561.)

There I have a bankrupt for a prodigal, who dares scarce shew his head on the Rialto; a beggar, that used to come so smug upon the mart.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

He who can make your visage less horrid, and your person more smug, is worthy some good reception.

Spectator.

2. Not applied to persons only.

That trim and smug saying, that seemed before to shoot up into the sky, flags now.

Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682.) p. 184.

To SMUG.† v. a. To adorn; to spruce.

My men,

In Circe's house, were all, in several baine studiously sweeten'd, smugg'd with oile, and deekt, With in and outweeds.

Chapman.

Socrates himself, when he went to a feast, was content to be smugg'd up and essenced in his pantouffles.

Feltham, Res. B. 2. R. 52.

To SMUGGLE.† v. a. [smokkelen, Dutch, Dr. Johnson; which Serenius refers to the Su. Goth. smuga, smeiga, furtim perreptare; and which Ihre traces to miugg, secretly; s, as usual with the Gothic languages, being prefixed; hence smuug, Dutch, secretly, underhand.]

1. To import or export goods without paying the customs.

2. To manage or convey secretly.

SMUGGLER.† n. s. [from smuggle.] A wretch, who, in defiance of justice and the laws, imports or exports goods either contraband or without payment of the customs.

Here, in cabal, a disputatious crew,
Each evening meet; the sot, the cheat, the shrew:
Snarers and smugglers here their gains divide,
Ensnares females here their victims hide.

Crabbe, Parish Register.

SMUGGLING.* n. s. [from smuggle.]

Smuggling, or the offence of importing goods without paying the duties imposed by the laws of the customs and excise, is restrained by a great variety of statutes.

Blackstone.

SMUGLY. adv. [from smug.] Neatly; sprucely.

Lilies and roses will quickly appear,
And her face will look wondrous smugly.

Gay.

SMUGNESS.† n. s. [from smug.] Spruceness; neatness without elegance.

Sherwood.

SMULY.* adj. [perhaps a corruption of smoolthy.] Looking smoolthy; demure; used in Cumberland.

SMUT. n. s. [smitta, Sax. smette, Dutch.]

1. A spot made with soot or coal.

2. Must or blackness gathered on corn; mildew.

Farmers have suffered by smutty wheat, when such will not sell for above five shillings a bushel; whereas that which is free from smut will sell for ten.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Obscenity.

To SMUT.† v. a. [smitten, Sax. See To SMITTLE.]

No man can like to be smutted and blatched in his face. Harmer, Trans. of Beza, (1587.) p. 195.

He is far from being smutted with the soil of atheism.

More.

A fuller had invitation from a collier to live with him: he gave him a thousand thanks; but, says he, as fast as I make any thing clean, you'll be smutting it again.

L'Estrange.

The inside is so smutted with dust and smoke, that neither the marble, silver, nor brass works shew themselves.

Addison.

I am wonderfully pleased to see my tenants play their innocent tricks, and smutting one another.

Addison.

2. To taint with mildew.

Mildew falleth upon corn, and smutteth it.

Bacon.

To SMUT. v. n. To gather must.

White red-eared wheat is good for clays, and bears a very good crop, and seldom smuts.

Mortimer.

To SMUTCH.† v. a. [from smut; or perhaps from the Su. Goth. smutsa.] To black with smoke; to mark with soot or coal.

What, hast smutch'd thy nose?

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Have you seen but a bright lily grow,

Before rude hands have touch'd it?

Ha' you mark'd but the fall o' the snow,

Before the soil hath smutch'd it?

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

SMUTTILY.† adv. [from smutty.]

1. Blackly; smokily.

2. Obscenely.

It is the same poverty which makes men speak or write smuttily, that forces them to talk vexingly.

Tatler, No. 269.

SMUTTINESS. n. s. [from smutty.]

1. Soil from smoke.

My vines and peaches, upon my best south walls, were apt to a soot or smuttiness upon their leaves and upon their fruits, which were good for nothing.

Temple.

2. Obsceneness.

SMUTTY.† adj. [from smut.]

1. Black with smoke or coal.

I leave the smutty air of London, and come hither to breathe sweeter.

Howell, Lett. (dat. 1625,) i. iv. 5.

The smutty grain,

With sudden blaze diffus'd, inflames the air.

Milton, P. L.

The smutty wainscot full of cracks.

Swift.

He was a smutty dog yesterday, and cost me near two hours to wash the ink off his face.

Pope.

2. Tainted with mildew.

Smutty corn will sell dearer at one time than the clean at another.

Locke.

3. Obscene; not modest.

I must forbear blurring out a witty saying if it be smutty or abusive.

Hornech, Fire of the Altar, p. 91.

The place is a censure of a profane and smutty passage in the Old Bachelor.

Collier.

SNACK.† n. s. [from snatch.]

1. A share; a part taken by compact.

If the master gets the better on't, they come in for their snack.

L'Estrange.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go snack.

Dryden.

All my demurs but double his attacks;
At last he whispers, "Do, and we go snacks."

Pope.

2. A slight, hasty repast: used in several parts of England.

SNACKET, or SNECKET.* n. s. [See SNECK.] The hasp of a casement.

Sherwood.

SNA'COT. n. s. [acus, Lat.] A fish.

Ainsworth.

SNA'FFLE. n. s. [snavel, Dutch, the nose.] A bridle which crosses the nose.

The third o' th' world is yours, which with a snaffle

You may pace easy; but not such a wife. Shaks.

Sooth him with praise;

This, from his weaning, let him well be taught,
And then betimes in a soft snaffle wrought.

Dryden, Georg.

To SNA'FFLE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To bridle; to hold in a bridle; to hold; to manage.

Master Bailey, I trow, and he be worth his ears,

Will snaffle these murderers.

Com. of Gamm. Gurton's Needle, (1551.)

Hitherto slye writers' wile wits,
Which have engrossed princes' chief affairs,
Have been like horses snaffled with the bits

Of fancie, feare, or doubts. Mir. for Mag. p. 395.

See him snaffled!

See him laugh'd at! see him baffled!

Fanshau, Tr. of Past. Fido, p. 81.

SNAG.† n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology or original. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius derives it from the Swedish nagg, a sharp pointed instrument, having s prefixed; as Skinner had before from the Teut. nagel a spike, a nail. But it may be referred to the Sax. pnæcce, ðpæo-pnæcce, trisulcus, three-pointed or three-forked; schnecken, Germ. to cut, under which word Wachter refers to the Sax. term, and to the Icel. snauugg-klæde, vestes lace-rate. To snag is, in some parts of the north of England, to hew roughly with an axe.]

1. A jag, or sharp protuberance.

The one her other leg had lame,
Which with a staff, all full of little snags,
She did disport, and Impotence her name.

Spenser, F. Q.

The coat of arms,

Now on a naked snag in triumph borne,
Was hung on high.

Dryden, Æn.

Hailstones—pellucid throughout, like great pieces of ice, many of them having several long snags issuing out of the body of them.

Ray, Rem. p. 54.

2. A tooth left by itself, or standing beyond the rest; a tooth, in contempt.

In China none hold women sweet,
Except their snags are black as jet:
King Chihu put nine queens to death,
Convict on statute, iv'ry teeth.

Prior.

To SNAG.* v. a. See the etymology of SNAG. To hew roughly with an axe. A northern word.

SNA'GGED.† } adj. [from snag.]

SNA'GGY. }

1. Full of snags; full of sharp protuberances; shooting into sharp points.

His stalking steps are stay'd
Upon a snaggy oak, which he had torn
Out of his mother's bowels, and it made
His mortal mace, wherewith his fœmen he dis-may'd.

Spenser.

Naked men belabouring one another with snag-ged sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at fusty-cuffs.

Mare.

2. Snaggy is a northern word for testy, peevish. See Grose. [Snacken, Teut. to bark as a dog.]

SNAIL. n. s. [snæg, Sax. snegel, Dutch.]

1. A slimy animal which creeps on plants, some with shells on their backs; the emblem of slowness.

I can tell why a snail has a house. — Why? — Why, to put 's head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Fearful commenting

Is leaden servitor to dull delay;

Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder:

Snail-slow in profit, but he sleeps by day

More than the wild cat. Shakspeare.

Seeing the snail, which every where doth roam,

Carrying his own house still, still is at home,

Follow, for he is easy-pac'd, this snail

Be thine own palace, or the world 's thy goal.

Donne.

There may be as many ranks of beings in the invisible world superior to us, as we ourselves are superior to all the ranks of being beneath us in this visible world, even though we descend below the snail and the oyster.

Watts.

2. A name given to a drone from the slow motion of a snail.

Why pratt'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not? Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!

Shakspeare.

SNAIL-CLAVER, or Snail-trefoil. n. s. [trifolium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SNAIL-LIKE. adv.* [snail and like.] In a way resembling the slowness of a snail.

A pox upon referring to commissioners,

I had rather hear that it were past the seas,

You courtiers move so snail-like in your business.

B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

SNAKE.† n. s. [rnaca, Saxon; snake, Dutch; from the verb snacan, to creep. Serenius.] A serpent of the oviparous kind, distinguished from a viper. The snake's bite is harmless. Snake in poetry is a general name for a serpent.

Gloster's shew beguiles him;

As the snake, rolled in a flowery bank;

With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,

That for the beauty thinks it excellent.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it: it

Shel'l close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice

Remains in danger of her former teeth.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling the gilding of a snake upon the ground: they must be smooth and even.

Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

Nor chalk, nor crumbling stones, the food of snakes,

That work in hollow earth their winding tracks.

Dryden.

SNAKEROOT. n. s. [snake and root.] A species of birthwort growing in Virginia and Carolina.

SNAKESHEAD Iris. n. s. [hermodactylus, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it hath a lily-shaped flower, of one leaf, shaped exactly like an iris; but has a tuberoso root, divided into two or three dugs, like oblong bulbs.

Miller.

SNAKEWEED, or Bistort. n. s. [bistorta, Latin.] A plant.

SNAKEWOOD. n. s. [from snake and wood.]

What we call snakewood is properly the smaller branches of the root of a tall straight tree growing in the island of Timor, and other parts of the East. It has no remarkable mell; but is of an intensely bitter taste. The Indians are of opinion, that it is a certain remedy for the bite of the hooded serpent, and from thence its name of lignum colubrinum, or snakewood. We very seldom use it.

Hill, Mat. Med.

SNAKY. adj. [from snake.]

1. Serpentine; belonging to a snake; resembling a snake.

Venomous tongue, tip't with vile adder's sting,

Of that self kind with which the furies fell

Their snaky heads do comb. Spenser.

The crooked arms Meander bow'd with his so snaky flood,

Resign'd for conduct the choice youth of all their mortal brood. Chapman.

The true lover's knot had its original from nodus Herculeanus, or Hercules's knot, resembling the snaky complication in the caduceus, or rod of Hermes.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs

His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles.

Milton, P. R.

2. Having serpents.

Look, look, into this snaky rod,

And stop your ears against the charming god.

B. Jonson.

In his hand

He took caduceus, his snaky wand.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield

That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,

Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone?

Milton, Comus.

His flying hat was fasten'd on his head;

Wings on his heels were hung, and in his hand

He holds the virtue of the snaky wand. Dryden.

To SNAP.† v. a. [The same with knap. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Jamieson notices this assertion, and denies it. If we duly consider, however, the etymology of snap, there will be found no difference in the origin of both. The Su. Goth.

nef, naeb, Germ. schnebbe, the beak of a bird has been considered as the root,

"quâ parte," says Wachter, "aves escam et prædam arripiunt; postea de omnibus animalibus, quibus os aut rictus pro rostris est." See also Serenius. Hence the verbs nappa, snappa, Su. Gothick; schnappen, German, to snatch. Hence too, Serenius adds, knaepa, to break, as birds do with the beak; and thus the connection of knapp and snapp.]

1. To break at once; to break short.

If the chain of necessity be no stronger, but that it may be snapped so easily in sunder: if his will was no otherwise determined from without himself, but only by the signification of your desire, and my modest entreaty, then we may conclude, human affairs are not always governed by absolute necessity.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

Light is broken like a body, as when 'tis snapped in pieces by a tougher body. Digby.

Dauntless as death, away he walks;

Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks;

Searches the parlour, chamber, study,

Nor stops till he has culprit's body. Prior.

2. To strike with a knocking noise, or sharp sound.

The bowzy sire

First shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire,

Then snapt his box. Pope, Dunciad.

3. To bite.

All mungrel curs bawl, snarl, and snapp, where the foe flies before him. L'Estrange.

A gentleman passing by a coach, one of the horses snapt off the end of his finger. Wiseman, Surgery.

A notion generally received, that a lion is dangerous to all women who are not virgins, may have given occasion to a foolish report, that my lion's jaws are so contrived as to snap the hands of any of the female sex, who are not thus qualified.

Addison, Spect.

He snaps deceitful air with empty jaws, The subtle hare darts swift beneath his paws.

Gay.

4. To catch suddenly and unexpectedly.

Sir Richard Graham tells the marquis he would snap one of the kids, and make some shift to carry him close to their lodgings. Watton.

Some with a noise and greasy light

Are snapt, as men catch larks at night. Butler.

You should have thought of this before you was taken; for now you are in no danger to be snapt

singing again. L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!

When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?

Dryden.

Belated seem on watch to lie,

And snapp some cully passing by. Swift.

5. [Sneipa, Icel. contumelia afflicere.] To treat with sharp language.

Capoc'h'd your rabbins of the synod,

And snapp'd their canons with a why not. Hudibras.

A surly ill-bred lord

That chides and snaps her up at every word. Granville.

TO SNAP.† v. n.

1. To break short; to fall asunder; to break without bending.

Note the ship's sicknesses, the mast

Shak'd with an ague, and the hold and waist

With a salt dropsy clogg'd; and our tacklings

Snapping, like to too high stretch'd treble strings.

Donne.

The backbone is divided into so many vertebrae for commodious bending, and not one intire rigid bone, which, being of that length, would have been often in danger of snapping in sunder.

Ray on the Creation.

If your steel be too hard, that is, too brittle, if it be a spring, it will not bow; but with the least bending it will snap asunder. Mason, Mech. Ex.

The makers of these needles should give them a due temper: for if they are too soft, they will bend; and if they are too brittle, they snapp.

Sharpy, Surgery.

2. To make an effort to bite with eagerness.

If the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason but I may snapp at him.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

We snapp at the bait without ever dreaming of the hook that goes along with it. L'Estrange.

Towzer snaps

At people's heels with frothy chaps. Swift.

3. To express sharp language.

With the peremptory Jewish wives, we have snapt

at God's ministers, as they did at the prophet Jeremiah in Egypt, and told them in plain terms, Let them say what they would, we would do as we list.

Bp. Prideaux, Euchol. (1656,) p. 225.

SNAP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of breaking with a quick motion.

2. A greedy fellow.

He had no sooner said out his say, but up rises

a cunning snap, then at the board. L'Estrange.

3. A quick eager bite.

With their bills, thwarted crosswise at the end,

they would cut an apple in two at one snapp.

Carew.

4. A catch; a theft.

SNAPEDRAGON, or Calf's snout.† n. s.

1. A plant. [antirrhinum, Lat.]

2. A kind of play, in which brandy is set on fire, and raisins thrown into it, which those who are unused to the sport are afraid to take out; but which may be safely snatched by a quick motion, and put blazing into the mouth, which being closed, the fire is at once extinguished. See also FLAPDRAGON.

We got into a dark corner with a porringer of brandy, and threw raisins into it; then set it on fire. My chamber-fellow and I diverted ourselves with the sport of venturing our fingers for the raisins; and the wantonness of the thing was, to see each other look like a demon, as we burnt ourselves, and snatched out the fruit. This fantastical mirth was called snapdragon. Tatler, No. 85.

3. The thing eaten at snapdragon.

He bore a strange kind of appetite to snapdragon, and to the livid snuffs of a burning candle, which he would catch and swallow with an agility wonderful to conceive; and by this procedure maintained a perpetual flame in his belly!

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 11.

To SNAPE.* See To SNEAP.

SNA'PHANCE.* n. s. [schnaphan, Germ. clavus bombardæ; snaphaan, Belg. ipsa bombardia portatilis. Wachter.] A kind of firelock. Not now in use.

There arrived four horsemen,—very well appointed, having snaphances hanging at the pommel of their saddles. Shelton, Ty. of Don Quixote, iv. 16.

SNA'PPER. n. s. [from snap.] One who snaps.

My father named me Autolious, being letter'd under Mercury; who, as I am, was likewise a snapper up of uncon sider'd trifles.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

SNA'PPISH.† adj. [from snap.]

1. Eager to bite.

The snappish cur, the passenger's annoy,
Close at my heel with yelping treble flies. Swift.
They lived in the temple; but were such snappish curs, that they frightened away most of the votaries. Spectator.

2. Peevish; sharp in reply.

I spoke to my lord chief justice about lord Forbes's bail:—the lord chief justice was very snappish, and said, he would take none, whom Mr. Smith did not approve of.

Henry, Earl of Clarendon's Diary, (in 1690.)

SNA'PPISHLY. adv. [from snappish.]

Peevishly; tartly.

SNA'PPISHNESS.† n. s. [from snappish.]
Peevishness; tartness.

He threatened, with great snappishness, to flog me. Wakefield, Mem. p. 23.

SNA'PSACK.† n. s. [snappsack, Swedish. Dr. Johnson.—This is the true word, from snap, morsus; “hinc snapsack, pera militaris in quâ cibis conditur.” Wachter.] A soldier's bag; more usually knapsack, Dr. Johnson says; and so leaves this without an example.

We should look upon him as a strange soldier, that when he is upon his march, and to go upon service, instead of his sword should take his snapsack. South, Serm. viii. 233.

To SNAR.* v. n. [snarren, Teut.] To snarl.

Tygres that did seeme to grin,
And snar at all that ever passed by, Spenser, F. Q.

SNARE. n. s. [snara, Swedish and Icel. snare, Danish; snoor, Dutch.]

1. Any thing set to catch an animal; a gin; a net; a noose.

O poor hapless nightingale, thought I,
How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare! Milton, Comus.

2. Any thing by which one is intrapped or entangled.

This I speak for your own profit, not that I may cast a snare upon you. 1 Cor. vii. 35.

A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul. Prov. xviii. 7.

Propound to thyself a constant rule of living, which, though it may not be fit to observe scrupulously, lest it become a snare to thy conscience, or endanger thy health, yet let not thy rule be broken.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

For thee ordain'd a help, became thy snare.

Milton, P. L.

Beauty, wealth, and wit,
And prowess, to the power of love submit;
The spreading snare for all mankind is laid,
And lovers all betray, or are betray'd. Dryden.

To SNARE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entrap; to entangle; to catch in a noose.

Glo'ster's shew
Beguiles me, as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow *snar*s relenting passengers.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. Ps. ix.

Warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth, lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton, P. L.

SNA'RER.* n. s. [from snare.] One who lays snares.

Never prate on't; nor, like a cunning snarer,
Make thy clipp'd name the bird to call in others.

Middleton's Witch, (before 1620.)

Snarers and smugglers here their gains divide.

Crabbe, Parish Register.

To SNARL. v. n. [snarren, Teut.]

1. To growl as an angry animal; to gnar.

What! were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me?

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

He is born with teeth!
And so I was; which plainly signify'd
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And *snarl*eth in the gentle eyes of peace.

Shakespeare, K. John.

The shes even of the savage herd are safe:
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return
But courtship from the male. Dryden, Don Seb.

An angry cur

Snarls while he feeds. Dryden and Lee, Ædipus.

2. To speak roughly; to talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little lapses of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted. Dryden.

The honest farmer and his wife,
Two years declin'd from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage-noose,
As almost every couple does.

Sometimes my plague; sometimes my darling!
Kissing to-day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.

Where hast thou been snarling odious truths,
and entertaining company with discourse of their diseases? Congreve.

To SNARL.† v. a. To entangle; to embarrass; to twist. I know not that this sense is well authorized. Dr. Johnson.—It is excellently authorized; by archbishop Crammer, one of the finest writers of his time; by Spenser; and by our old lexicography. See the Prompt. Parv. “To snaryn or snarlyn, illaqueo;” where we see it is but another form of snare.

You snarle yourself into so many and heynouse absurdities, as you shall never be able to wynde yourself oute.

Abp. Crammer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 163.
From her back her garments she did tear,
And from her head oft rent her snarled hair.

Spenser, F. Q.

Confused snarled consciences render it difficult to pull out thread by thread. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SNA'RLER. n. s. [from snarl.] One who snarls; a growling; surly, quarrelsome, insulting fellow.

Should stupid libels grieve your mind,
You soon a remedy may find;
Lie down obscure like other folks,
Below the lash of snarlers' jokes. Swift.

SNA'RY. adj. [from snare.] Entangling; insidious.

Spiders in the vault their snary webs have spread. Dryden.

SNAST. n. s. The snuff of a candle.

It first burned fair, till some part of the candle was consumed, and the sawdust gathering about the snast; but then it made the snast big and long, and burn dushily, and the candle wasted in half the time of the wax pure. Bacon.

To SNATCH. v. a. [snacken, Teut.]

1. To seize any thing hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth. Hooker.

Death,

So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain.

Milton, P. L.

Life's stream hurries all too fast:
In vain sedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take. Pope.

She snatch'd a sheet of Thule from her bed:
Sudden she flies, and whirls it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames. Pope, Dunciad.

They, sailing down the stream,
Are snatch'd immediate by the quick-ey'd trout
Or darting salmon. Thomson, Summer.

2. To transport or carry suddenly.

He had scarce performed any part of the office of a bishop in the diocese of London, when he was snatched from thence, and promoted to Canterbury. Clarendon.

Oh nature!

Enrich me with the knowledge of thy works,
Snatch me to heaven. Thomson, Autumn.

To SNATCH. v. n. To bite, or catch eagerly at something.

Lords will not let me: if I had a monopoly of fool, they would have part on't; nay, the ladies too will be snatching. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry. Is. ix. 20.

Lycus, swifter of his feet,
Runs, doubles, winds and turns, amidst the war;
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden, Æn.

SNATCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A hasty catch.

2. A short fit of vigorous action.

After a shower to weeding a snatch;
More easily weed with the root to dispatch. Tusser.

3. A small part of any thing; a broken part.

She chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacations would permit. Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. A broken or interrupted action; a short fit.

The snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his. Shakespeare, Cymb.

They move by fits and snatches; so that it is not conceivable how they conduce unto a motion, which, by reason of its perpetuity, must be regular and equal. Wilkins, Dædalus.

We have often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year. Spectator.

5. A quip; a shuffling answer.

Come, leave your snatches, yield me a direct answer. Shakespeare.

SNATCHER.† n. s. [from snatch.] One that snatches, or takes any thing in haste.

They of those marches
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

— We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.
So catchers and snatchers do toille both night and day,

Not needie but greedie, still polling for their pray.
Mir. for Mag. p. 278.

SNATCHINGLY. adv. [from snatching.]
Hastily; with interruption.

To SNATHE.* v. a. [Bailey (and from him Ash) calls this merely a local word: it is certainly the Saxon, snāthan, to cut.] To prune; to lop. Used in the north of England. Sned is also used in some places, Sax. sniban.

SNATCHER.* n. s. [from snathe.] A chip; a slice; a cutting. It is probable that this word was once common, though I find it not in our dictionaries; for the buffoon-author of the following passage often uses it.

Snatchers of that very cross; of cedar some, some of juniper. Gayton, on D. Quix. p. 275.

To SNEAK.† v. n. [snican, to creep, Sax. sniger, Dan. to sneak away. Callander pronounces the Gael. snaghim, the same as the Sax. snican.]

1. To creep slyly; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.

Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weazel, Scot,
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs.

Shakespeare.
Sneak not away, sir, for the friar and you Must have a word anon: lay hold on him. Saks.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away.

Dryden.
I ought not to turn my back, and to sneak off,
In silence, and leave the truth to lie baffled, bleeding, and slain. Watts.

He sneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave.

Pope, Dunciad.
Are you all ready? Here's your music; here:
Author, sneak off, we'll tickle you, my dear.

Moore.
2. To behave with meanness and servility;
to crouch; to cruckle.

I need salute no great man's threshold, sneak to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my conscience. South.

Nothing can support minds drooping and sneak- ing, and inwardly reproaching them, from a sense of their own guilt, but to see others as bad. South.

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all the oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,

When the last lingering friend has bid farewell.

Pope.
Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will sneaks a scrivener, an exceeding knave.

Pope.
To SNEAK.* v. a. To hide; to conceal.

Some sins dare the world in open defiance, yet this [slander] lurks, and sneaks its head.

Wake, Ration. (1701), p. 222.

SNEAK.* n. s. [from the verb.] A sneaking fellow.

A set of simpletons and superstitious sneaks.
Glanville, Sermon. (1681), p. 212.

SNEAK-CUP.* See SNEAKUP.

SNEAKER.† n. s. A small vessel of drink.
A sneaker of punch is a term still used in several places for a small bowl.

I have just left the right worshipful and his myrmidons about a sneaker of five gallons!

Spectator.
SNEAKING. part. adj. [from sneak.]

1. Servile; mean; low.

When the smart dialogue grows rich,
With sneaking dog, and ugly bitch. Rowe.

2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parsimonious.

SNEAKINGLY. adj. [from sneaking.]

1. Meanly; servilely.

Do all things like a man, not sneakingly:
Think the king sees thee still. Herbert.

While you sneakingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourag'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudibras.

2. In a covetous manner.

SNEAKINGNESS.† n. s. [from sneaking.]

1. Niggardiness.

2. Meanness; pitifulness.

A sneakingness which so implies a guilt.
Boyle against Custom. Swearings, p. 78.

SNEAKSBY.* n. s. [from sneak.] A paltry fellow; a cowardly, sneaking fellow.

A demure sneaksty, a clownish singularity.

Barrow, vol. iii. S. 34.

SNEAKUP.† n. s. [from sneak.] A cowardly, creeeping, insidious scoundrel. Obsolete.

Sneak-cup is the word as given by the modern editors of Shakspeare, with the explanation of "one who takes his glass in a sneaking manner." Notes on Twelfth Night.

The prince is a jack, a sneakup; and if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To SNEAP.† v. a. [not a corruption of snub, or snap, to reprimand, as Dr. Johnson suggests; but from the Icel. snæipa, contumeliā afficere. So sneb. See also To SNIIB. Snape is our northern form of sneap.]

1. To reprimand; to check.

Life that's here,
When into it the soul doth closely wind,
Is often sneap'd by anguish and by fear.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. iii. 18.

2. To nip.

What may
Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No sneaping winds at home. Shakspeare.

Herbs and fruits sneaped with cold weather.

Ray.
SNEAP. n. s. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.

My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply: you call honourable boldness impudent sauciness: if a man will make courtesy and say nothing, he is virtuous. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To SNEB. v. a. [See To SNEAP.] To check;
to chide; to reprimand.

Which made this foolish here were xeso so bold,
That on a time he cast him to scold
And snebbe the good oak, for he was old.

Spensery, Shep. Cal.

SNECK.* n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

The latch or bolt of a door. Prompt.

Parv. Retained in the north; where,

to sneek the door also, is to latch it.
See Ray, and Grose. It is sometimes called snick. See also SNACKET.

To SNEED.* See To SNATHE.

SNEED.* n. s. [ɲæb, Sax.] The handle of a sithe. Ash, and Mason.

This is fixed on a long sneed, or straight handle.
 Evelyn, B. ii. ch. 6. § 2.

To SNEER.† v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snore and snort. Thus to sneer, or sneue, is our northern word for to turn up the nose (nasus, Lat.) with contempt. Grose, and Craven Dial. See also To SNORT.]

1. To show contempt by looks: naso suspendere adunco.

2. To insinuate contempt by covert expressions.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a sneering way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. L'Estrange.

If there has been any thing expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those sneering or daring writers of the age against religion, who have left reason and decency. Watts.

3. To utter with grimace.

I have not been sneering fulsome lies, and nauseous flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve.

4. To show awkward mirth.

I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they sneered at every word spoken by each other. Taitler.

To SNEER.* v. a. To treat with a kind of contempt.

I could be content to be a little sneered at in a line for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Pope.

I cannot help thinking but Milton brought the word sect in P. L. vi. 147, in order to sneer the loyalists of his time. Thyer, Notes on Milton.

SNEER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.

Did not the sneer of more impartial men
At sense and virtue, balance all agen? Pope.

2. An expression of ludicrous scorn.

Socrates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one nor the majesty of the other, could secure them from a sneer. Watts.

SNEERER.† n. s. [from sneer.] One that sneers or shows contempt.

The buffoon and sneerer are still on the wrong side of the charter. Warburton on Prod. p. 36.

SNEERINGLY.* adv. [from sneer.] With a look or with expression of ludicrous scorn.

The father sneeringly adds, he was obliged to maintain this maxim.

Mather, Vindic. of the Bible, (1723), p. 281.

SNEERFUL.* adj. [sneer and full.] Given to sneering; a bad word.

The sneerful maid
Will not fatigue her hand. Shenstone, Econ. P. iii.

To SNEEZE.† v. n. [niejan, Saxon;
niesen, Dutch; sneysa, Icel. from næje, Sax. nasus, Lat. the nose. See Ihre and Serenius.] To emit wind audibly by the nose.

If one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes.

Bacon.

If the pain be more intense and deeper within amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing.

Wiseman, Surgery.

To thee Cupid sneez'd aloud;
And every lucky omen sent before,
To meet the landing on the Spartan shore.

Dryden.

If any thing oppress the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray on the Creation.

Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration: so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce headach, universal convulsions, fever, and death.

Arbutnot.

An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently. Swift.

SNEEZE. n. s. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rack

As earth and sky would mingle; but
These flaws, though mortals fear them
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heaven,
Are to the main as wholesome as a sneeze
To man's less universe, and soon are gone.

Milton, P. R.

We read in Godignus, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there passed acclamations successively through the city. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SNEEZING.  n. s.* [from sneeze.]

1. Act of sneezing; stertutation.
2. Medicine to promote sneezing.

Sneezings, masticatories, and nasals are generally received. Montalut gives several receipts of all three. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 363.

SNEEZEWORD. n. s. [ptarmica, Latin.] A plant.

SNELL.  adj.* [rnel, Saxon.] Nimble; active; lively. Obsolete. Lye.

SNET. n. s. [among hunters.] The fat of a deer. Dict.

SNEW. † The old pret. of To snow. Dict.—Dr. Johnson.—It is indeed old, but likewise still a word used in some parts of the north of England for snowed: as, it snew all day.

It snewed in his house, &c. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
It snewed an artificial kind of snow.

Holinshed, Chron. (in 1583.)

To SNEW.  v. n.* See To SNEER.

To SNIB. † v. a. [Su. Goth. snýfba, verbis increpare. See also To SNEAP. This is a very ancient form of our word. "To snýbbyn, reprehendo." Prompt. Parv.] To check; to nip; to reprimand.

Him wolde he snibben sharply for the nones.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snib.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Through the principles of synteresis, the seeds of piety and virtue, scattered and disseminated in the soul, to bring forth the fruit of virtue and felicity, may be trampled on and kept under, cropped and snibbed, by the bestial part; yet they will sometimes be starting out, sprouting, and putting forth themselves.

Bp. Ward, Serm. 30th Jan. 1674, p. 13.

SNICK.  n. s.*

1. A small cut or mark.
2. A latch. See SNECK.

SNICK and Snee. † n. s. [snee, Dutch, a cut, a gash. Sewel. Perhaps snick is a cant expression for a knife.] A combat with knives.

Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snee was in fashion, a boatswain with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome; one of our men beat him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sticking in his sash, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth.

Wiseman, Surgery.

To SNICKER, or Snigger. † v. n. [another form of sneer.] To laugh slyly, wantonly, or contemptuously; to laugh in one's sleeve. Dict.

To SNIFF. † v. n. [snýfsta, Su. Goth. See To SNUFF.] To draw breath audibly up the nose.

So then you look'd scornful, and snift at the dean,

As, who should say, now am I skinny and lean? Swift.

To SNIFF.  v. a.* To draw in with the breath.

SNIFF.  n. s.* [from the verb.] Perception by the nose.

O, could I but have had one single sup,

One single sniff, at Charlotte's candle-cup!

Warton, Newsm. Verses, (1767.)

To SNIFF.  v. n.* [snýfsta, Su. Goth.] To snort: "to snift in contempt." See To SNUFF.

Resentment expressed by snifing.

Johnson, in V. Snuff.

SNIFF.  n. s.* A moment. See the View of the Lancashire Dialect. Gloss.

SNIG.  n. s.* A kind of eel. Grose confines this word to Hampshire, but it is used in some parts of the north.

To SNIGGLE. v. n. To fish for eels.

Snigging is thus performed: in a warm day, when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait leisurely, and, as far as you may conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees.

Walton, Angler.

To SNIGGLE.  v. a.* To catch; to snare.

Have you remembered what we thought of?—Yes, sir, I have sniggled him.

Beaum. and Fl. The. and Theodoret.

To SNIP. † v. a. [snippen, Teut.] To cut at once with scissors.

Take measure of your worth, sir, and because I will not afflict you with any large bill of circumstances, I will snip off particulars.

Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

The sinus should be laid open, which was snipt up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissors, and the incised lips dressed. Wiseman, Surgery.

When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, sir Roger used to bargain to cut off a quarter of a yard: he wore a pair of scissors for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbutnot.

Putting one blade of the scissors up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Sharp.

SNIP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A single cut with scissors.

What! this a sleeve?

Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slish and slash, Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open; therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Wiseman.

2. A small shred.

Those we keep within compass by small snips of emplast, hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wiseman, Surgery.

3. A share; a snack. A low word.

He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend.

L'Estrange.

SNIFE. † n. s. [schneppe, German; snip, Dutch; from schnebbe, the beak. Wachter, Serenius, and Lye. The Saxon word is snite; the Welsh ysnit; and we have also snite, which is of similar origin, viz. the snout; Swed. snüte, Teut. snuyte, the same.]

1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.

The external evident causes of the atra bilis are a high fermenting diet; as old cheese, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and swans. Floyer.

2. A fool; a blockhead.

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. Shakespeare, Othello.

SNIPPER. † n. s. [from snip.] One that snips.

Dryden complained, that "our snippers (tailors) go over once a year into France, to bring back the newest mode, and to learn to cut and shape it."

Noble's Granger, i. 385.

SNIPPET. n. s. [from snip.] A small part; a share.

Witches simpling, and on gibbets

Cutting from malefactors snippets;
Or from the pill'ry tips of ears. Hudibras.

SNIPSNAP. n. s. [A cant word formed by reduplication of snap.] Tart dialogue; with quick replies.

Dennis and dissonance, and captious art.

And snipsnap short, and interruption smart.

Pope, Dunciad.

SNITE. n. s. [snita, Saxon.] A snipe. This is perhaps the true name; but snipe prevails.

Of tame birds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood-dove.

Carew.

To SNITE. † v. a. [snýtan, Saxon; snuyten, Teut. from snuyte, the nose.] To blow the nose. Dr. Johnson.—This word is used in Scotland, Dr. Jamieson says, not only in relation to the nose, as in English; but also as to a candle; "snite the candle, snuff it." It may be proper to add, that this also is old English; "To snýtyn a nose or candell." Prompt. Parv. And in Wodroephe's Fr. Gramm. 1623, p. 307. "Snut that candle; where be the smutters?"

Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze; in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Grew, Cosmol.

SNITHE, or SNÍTHY.  adj.* [sníðan, Sax. to cut.] Sharp; piercing; cutting: applied to the wind, in some of the northern parts of England.

SNIVEL. † n. s. [snýfling, snofel, Saxon, mucus. See To SNUFF.] Snot; the running of the nose.

To SNIVEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run at the nose.

2. To cry as children.

Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks; and whether we go to our graves snivelling or singing, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange.

Away goes he snivelling and yelping, that he had dropt his ax into the water. L'Estrange.

SNIVELLER. n. s. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamenter.

He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.

SNIVELY.* adj. [from snivel.]

1. Running at the nose.

2. Pitiful; whining.

SNOD.* n. s. [noob, Sax. vitta.] A fillet; a riband. One of our western words, as snod; but in the north, snood, or snude. See also Cowel.

SNOD.* adj. [perhaps from snidan, Sax. to cut.] Trimmed; smooth: applied, in some parts of the north, both to persons and to grass; in the former meaning well dressed, in the latter even. It is also pronounced snog. See SNUG.

To SNOOK.* v. n. [snoka, Swed. insidiosè scrutari. Serenius.] To lurk; to lie in ambush. Scott.

To SNORE.* v. n. [snorcken, Teut. schnarchen, Germ. snarka, Suec. a stridore, quem stertentes per nasum edunt, adeoque vel à Lat. naris, vel ab Heb. naehar, præposito sibilo. Ita Græcis à βῆ, naris, fit βῆγξ et βῆγξ sterto. Wachter.—Our word formerly had the Teutonic form: "At the cocke-crowing before daye thou shalt not heare there the servaunt snorke, thou shalt not finde the dores shut." Stapleton, Forr. of the Faith, 1565, fol. 121. b.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep. I did unreverently blame the gods, Who wake for thee, though thou shouldst for thyself. B. Jonson.

Whose railing heroes, and whose wounded gods, Makes some suspect he snores as well as nods. Roscommon.

He may lie in his shades, and snore on to doomsday for me; unless I see farther reason of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.

Is not yonder Proteus' cave?
It is; and in it lies the god asleep;
And snoring by
We may decry
The monsters of the deep. Dryden, Albion.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd. Addison.

SNORE. n. s. [snopa, Saxon, from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

The surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I've drugg'd their posssets. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

SNORER.* n. s. [from snore.] One who snores. Prompt. Parv.

To SNORT.* v. n. [snorcken, Teut.]

1. To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep. This sense is overpassed by Dr. Johnson, and later lexicographers.

He found a country fellow dead-drunk, snorting on a bulk. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 274.

We could tell you of an age, wherein men not only slept, but also snorted. Alp. Usher, Answer to the Jes. Malone, p. 5.

The spark of divinity that dwells within is quenched, and the mind snorts, dead with sleep and fulness in the fouler regions of the belly. Ep. Taylor, Sermon. (1653), p. 208.

No more able to direct thy course, than a pilot who snorts, when a ship is tossed in the midst of the sea. Patrick on Prov. xxiii. 34.

2. To blow through the nose as a high-mettled horse. The fiery war-horse paws the ground, And snorts and trembles at the trumpet's sound. Addison.

From their full racks the gen'rous steeds retire,
Dropping ambrosial foams, and snorting fire. Addison.

He with wide nostrils, snorting, skims the wave. Thomson.

To SNORT.* v. a. To turn up in anger, scorn, or derision; applied to the nose.

Yfrouned foule was hir visage,
And grinning for dispiteous rage;
Her nose ysnorted up for tene. Chaucer, Rom. R. 157.

SNORTER.* n. s. [from snort.] A snorer; one who snorts. Sherwood.

SNORTING.* n. s. [from snort.]

1. Act of snoring.

2. Act of blowing through the nose as a high-mettled horse.

The snorting of his horses was heard. Jer. viii. 16.

SNOT.* n. s. [note, Saxon; snot, Teut. from nytan and snuyten. See To SNITE.] The mucus of the nose.

Thus when a greedy sloven once has thrown
His snot into the mess, 'tis all his own. Swift.

To SNOT.* v. a. [nytan, Sax.] To snite or blow the nose. Sherwood.

To SNOUTTER.* v. n. [from snout.] To snivel; to sob or cry. North. Grose.

SNOUTTY.* adj. [from snout.] Full of snout. This squire South my husband took in a dirty snouty-nosed boy. Arbuthnot.

SNOUT.* n. s. [snuyt, Teut. snute, Sax. inf. schnautze, Germ. snute, Swed. nasus, et rostrum animalium. See Wachter and Serenius. Wachter refers it to the Lat. nasus, "præposito sibilo: s et t sunt literæ convertibiles in omnibus linguis."] 1. The nose of a beast.

His nose in the air, his snout in the skies. Tusser.

In shape a beagle's whelp throughout,
With broader forehead, and a sharper snout. Dryden.

2. The nose of a man, in contempt.

Her subtle snout
Did quickly wind his meaning out. Hudibras.

But when the date of Nock was out,
Off dropt the sympathetic snout. Hudibras.

What Æthiop lips he has,
How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryden, Juv.

Charm'd with his eyes, and chin, and snout,
Her pocket-glass drew slyly out;
And grew enamour'd with her phiz,
As just the counterpart of his. Swift.

3. The nosel or end of any hollow pipe.

To SNOUT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with a nosel or point.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long. Camden, Rem.
Boots and shoes are so long snouted, that one can hardly kneel. Howell, Lett. iii. 2.

SNOUTED.* adj. [from snout.] Having a snout.

Their dogs snouted like foxes, but deprived of that property which the logicians call proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark. Heylin.

Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grev.

SNOUTY.* adj. [from snout.] Resembling a beast's snout.

The nose was ugly, long, and big,
Broad and snouty like a pig. Otway, Vile.

SNOW.* n. s. [snawus, M. Goth. sneuw, Teut. [nap, Sax. snior, Icel. snio, Swed. snee, Germ.]

1. The small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops. Locke.

Drought and heat consume snow waters. Job, xxiv. 19.

He gives the winter's snow her airy birth,
And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth. Sandys.

Soft as the fleeces of descending snows. Pope.

2. A ship with two masts: generally the largest of all two-masted vessels employed by Europeans, and the most convenient for navigation. Falconer.

To SNOW. v. n. [snapan, Saxon; sneeuwen, Dutch.] To fall in snow.

The hills being high about them, it snows at the tops of them oftener than it rains. Brown, Trav.

To SNOW. v. a. To scatter like snow. If thou be'st born to see strange sights,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,
Till age snow white hairs on thee. Donne.

SNOWBALL. n. s. [snow and ball.] A round lump of congealed snow.

They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling. Hayward.

His bulky folly gathers as it goes,
And, rolling o'er you, like a snowball grows. Dryden.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities; and as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas. Locke.

SNOWBROTH. n. s. [snow and broth.] Very cold liquor.

Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense. Shakspeare.

SNOWCROWNED.* adj. [snow and crown.] Having the top covered with snow.

From snow-crown'd Skiddow's lofty cliffs.
Dryden, Bar. Wars, B. 6. st. 65.

SNOWDEEP. n. s. [viola bulbosa, Lat.] An herb.

SNOWDROP. n. s. [narcissoleucoium, Lat.] An early flower.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle on Colours.

The little shape, by magic power,
Grew less and less, contracted to a flower;
A flower, that first in this sweet garden smil'd,
To virgins sacred, and the snowdrop styl'd. Trickell.

SNOWLIKE.* adj. [nap-hc, Saxon.] Resembling snow.

SNOW-WHITE.* adj. [nap-hpice, Saxon.] White as snow.

Whit—as is a snow-white swan. Chaucer, Manop. Tale.

Let fair humanity abhor the deed,
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white weed. Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

A snow-white bull shall on your shore be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main. Dryden, Æn.

SNOWY.* adj. [from snow.] 1. White like snow.

So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shews. Shakspeare.

Now I see thy jolly train:
Snowy-headed Winter leads;
Spring and Summer next succeeds;
Yellow Autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year. Rowe.

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast,
Render'd its panting whiteness more confest. Prior.

2. Abounding with snow.

He slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day.

1 Chron. xi. 22.

These first in Crete

And Ida known; thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air.

Milton, P. L.

As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,

By Astracan, over the snowy plains,
Retires.

Milton, P. L.

3. Pure; white; unblemished.

There did he lose his snowy innocence,
His undepraved will.

J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 95.

SNUB. n. s. [from snebbe, Dutch, a nose, or knubel, a joint of the finger.] A jag; a snag; a knot in wood.

Lifting up his dreadful clod on high,
All arm'd with ragged snubs and knotty grain,
Him thought at first encounter to have slain.

Spenser, F. Q.

To SNUB.† v. a. [rather to snib. See SNEAP, SNEB, SNIB. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Swedish snubba, to huff, to check; Icel. the same, or rather to correct sharply or roughly. See Lye, and Serenius.]

1. To check; to reprimand.

We frequently see the child, in spite of being neglected, snubbed, and thwarted at home, acquire a behaviour which makes him agreeable to all the rest of the world.

Tatler, No. 235.

2. To nip.

Near the sea-shores the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; but toward the sea are so snubbed by the winds, as if their boughs had been pared or shaven off.

Ray on the Creation.

To SNUB.† v. n. [schnauben, Germ.] To sob with convulsion.

SNUBNOSED.* adj. Having a flat or short nose: a cant word; and a corruption of snut-nosed, which is in the dictionaries of Coles and Kersey; and, I suppose, is from snout.

To SNUDGE.† v. n. [sniger, Danish; snican, Sax. snatighim, Gael. See To SNEAK.] To lie idle, close, or snug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;

Now eat his bread in peace,

And snudge in quiet; now he scorns increase;

Now all day spares.

Herbert.

SNUDGE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A miser; a curmudgeon; a niggardly or sneaking fellow. See Cotgrave, in V. TENANT; and Coles, who defines the snudge, "one who hides himself in a house to do mischief." It is probably still a provincial word.

To SNUC.* v. n. See To SNEER.

SNUFF.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson has given only the Teut. word snuff, which he renders snot, as the etymon; to which might be referred that English meaning, if in snuff we possessed it. But Dr. Johnson admits that in this sense it is not used. The word is to be referred to snuffen, Teut. naribus spirare; snuffa, Su. Goth. snuffwa, Swed. all from the ancient word nef, the nose.]

1. Smell.

In some this light goes out with an ill-savoured stench; but others have a save-all to preserve it from making any snuff at all. Howell, Lett. iv. 21.

The Immortal, the Eternal, wants not the snuff of mortal incense for his, but for our sakes.

Stukeley, Palaeogr. Sacra. p. 93.

2. The useless excrescence of a candle: whence moucher la chandelle.

My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!

Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:

Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;

For even at first life's taper is a snuff.

Donne.

If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks.

Wilkins.

3. A candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!

To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace

I' the dungeon by a snuff.

Shaks. Cymbeline.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.

A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped into the vapour.

Addison on Italy.

5. Resentment expressed by snifing; perverse resentment. Not used unless in low language. Dr. Johnson. — This is a word borrowed from the Sax. þroffa, nausea; and is not a word of low language. It is thus learnedly illustrated by Bishop Andrews: "The Pharisees derided Christ; which is elegant in the original, ἐξημυῶντο, naso suspendebant, they took it in SNUFF; and, expressing their derision by drawing together the nose, they made noses at him." Bp. Andrews on the Decalogue, ed. 1650, p. 394. And another learned commentator on Scripture has thought proper to employ this phrase. See Patrick on 2 Sam. xx. 2.

What hath been seen

Either in snuff, or packings of the duke's,

Or the hard rein which both of them have borne

Against the old kind king.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again.

L'Estrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose. [Our word was also snush; as in Kersey's Dict. "Snush or sneezing-powder." This carries us to sneeze, as the origin of that expression; and snus, Swedish, is also snuff. Snuff probably was made soon after the introduction of tobacco into this country.]

He administer'd a dose

Of snuff mundungus to his nose. Hudibras, iii. ii.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,

A charge of snuff the vily virgin threw;

The gnomes direct, to every atom just,

The pungent grains of titillating dust.

Pope.

To SNUFF. v. a. [snuffen, Teut.]

1. To draw in with the breath.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air against rain.

Bacon.

With delight he snuff'd the smell

Of mortal change on earth.

Milton, P. L.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite;

But when he stands collected in his might,

He roars and promises a more successful fight.

Dryden.

The youth,

Who holds the nearest station to the light,

Already seems to snuff the vital air,

And leans just forward on a shining spear.

Dryden, Æneid.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds

Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert.

Addison.

My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brackendstown, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in.

Swift.

2. To scent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heaven, and snuffs it in the wind.

Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves.

Dryden.

O'er all the blood-bound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms reject with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn:
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the sly felyn through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd he, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues.

Tickell.

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman!

To be her mistress's mistress!

This candle burns not clear; 'tis I must snuff it,

And out it goes.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Against a communion-day our lamps should be dressed, our lights snuffed, and our religion more active.

Bp. Taylor.

You have got

An office for your talents fit,

To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,

And get a dinner for your hire.

Swift.

To SNUFF.† v. n.

1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.

The fury fires the pack, they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent.

Dryden, Æn.

Says Humpus, sir, my master bad me pray

Your company to dine with him to-day:

He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;

Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes. King.

2. To snit in contempt.

Ye said, what a weariness is it, and ye have snuffed at it.

Mal. ii. 13.

Do the enemies of the church rage and snuffe,
and breathe nothing but threats and death?

Bp. Hall, Thanksgiv. Sermon. (1625.)

SNUFFBOX. n. s. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a snuffbox on the table, and goeth away, lock it up as part of your rails.

Swift.

Sir Plume, of amber snuffbox justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane.

Pope.

SNUFFER. n. s. [from snuff.] One that snuffs.

SNUFFERS. n. s. [from snuff.] The instrument with which the candle is clipped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuffers open.

Swift, Dir. to the Butler.

To SNUFFLE. v. n. [snuffelen, Teut.] To speak through the nose; to breathe hard through the nose.

A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffling grace, disdaining that his smelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could espy the duck's getting up again.

Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,

Whose blasts of air, in pockets shut,

Sound filthier than from the gut.

Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who smelt and snuffled, and considered on't.

L'Estrange.

One clad in purple

Eats, and recites some lamentable rhyme;

Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffing at nose, and croaking in his throat.

Dryden.

SNUFFLER. n. s. [from snuffle.] One that speaks through the nose.

SNUFFTAKER. n. s. [snuff and take.] One who takes snuff.

The whetter is obliged to refresh himself every morning with a liquor, as the snuff-taker with a powder.

Tatler, No. 141.

SNUFFY.  adj.* [from snuff.] Grimed with snuff.

To SNUG. † v. n. [sniger, Dan. See To SNUDGE.] To lie close; to snudge.

There snugging well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amiss, so to be shent.

Sidney.

As the loving couple lay snugging together,
Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber.

L' Estrange.

SNUG. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience, yet not splendid.

They spy'd a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind.

Prior.

2. Close; out of notice.

At Will's

Lie snug, and hear what critics say.

Swift.

3. Slyly or insidiously close.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!

When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?

Dryden.

To SNUGGLE. v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.

SNUGLY.  adv.* [from snug.] Safely;

Bullockar.

SNUGNESS.  n. s.* [from snug.] Retiredness.

O'er me soft snugness spreads her wings;
And innocence reflects her ray
To gild my calm sequester'd way.

Warton, Phaeton and One-Horse Chari.

SO. † adv. [spa, Saxon; soo, Dutch; so, German. Dr. Johnson.—The German so, and the English so, (though in one language it is called an adverb or conjunction, and in the other an article or pronoun,) are both of them derived from the Goth. article sa, so; and have in both languages retained the original meaning, viz. it, or that. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 247.]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.

As whom the fables feign a monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn that war'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch-fiend lay.

Milton, P. L.

Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks,
In Valombrosa, where the Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embower, so thick bestrewn Abject and lost lay these.

Milton, P. L.

Tir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky.

Pope.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
And sep'rate from their kindred traces below,
So flew her soul to its congenial place.

Pope.

2. To such a degree.

Why is his chariot so long in coming?

Judg. v. 28.

Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, but its own weight

Will ruin it? Or is't blind chance
That still desires new states t' advance?

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Amoret, my lovely foe,

Tell me where thy strength does lie;

Where the pow'r that charms us so,

In thy soul, or in thy eye?

Wallar.

I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world.

Burnet, Theory.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,

Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed?

Dryden.

Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are.

Addison, Spect.

We think our fathers fools, so wise we're grown:

Our wise sons, no doubt, will think us so.

Pope.

3. In such a manner.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,

It is meer cosenage all;

For though some long ago

Lik'd certain colours mingled so and so,

That doth not tie me now from chusing new.

Suckling.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so.

Locke.

I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice.

Locke.

This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependant.

Addison.

4. It is regularly answered by as or that, but they are sometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell

Grew darker at their frown.

Milton, P. L.

There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our soil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here.

Temple.

5. In the same manner.

Of such examples add me to the roll;

Me easily indeed mine may neglect,

But God's propos'd deliverance not so.

Milton, S. A.

To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too.

Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being.

Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.

Not far from thence the mournful fields appear,

So call'd from lovers that inhabit there.

Dryden.

Does this deserve to be rewarded so?

Did you come here a stranger or a foe?

Dryden.

It concerns every man with the greatest seriousness to enquire into those matters whether they be so or not.

Tillotson.

No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers: they understand better than so, how to value those inestimable gifts of nature.

Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,

High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain.

Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution, by some more unaccountable way, this is certain, that so it is.

Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was constrain'd t'

obey;

For longer time than that, no living wight,

Below the earth, might suffer'd be to stay:
So back again him brought to living light.

Spenser, F. Q.

Trafficks, or rove ye, and like thieves oppress
Poore strange adventurers; exposing so
Your soules to danger, and your lives to woe!

Chapman.

If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him, and so all that he hath to do is to endeavour by prayer and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

It leaves instruction, and so instructors, to the sobriety of the settled articles and rule of the church.

Holyday.

Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;

And so from heaven to deepest hell.

Milton, P. L.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion.

Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition: answered by as.

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray,
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion.

Dryden, Kn. Tale.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness:

So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten;

As here my soul acquits thee of my death,

As here I part without an angry thought.

Rowe.

So may kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field.

Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that; modo.

Be not sad:

Evil into the mind of God or man

May come and go, so unapprov'd, and leave

No spot or blame behind.

Milton, P. L.

So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked.

Atterbury.

Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,

Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;

May the remaining few know only friendship:

So thou, my dearest, truest, best Alicia,

Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,

A partner there; I will give up mankind.

Rowe.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another, answering to as.

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it.

Swift.

11. So sometimes returns the sense of a word or sentence going before, and is used to avoid repetition; as, the two brothers were valiant, but the eldest was more so; that is, more valiant. The French article le is often used in the same manner. This mode of expression is not to be used but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended.

The fat with plenty fills my heart,

The lean with love makes me too so.

Cowley.

Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,

Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know.

Denham.

Not to admire is all the art I know

To make men happy, and to keep them so.

Creech, Hor.

One may as well say, that the conflagration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so.

Burnet.

However soft within themselves they are,

To you they will be valiant by despair;

For having once been guilty, well they know

To a revengeful price they still are so.

Dryden.

He was great ere fortune made him so. Dryden.
I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher; then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens. Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in that noble language peculiar to that great poet. Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so.
Swift.

As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so. Pope.

The blest day to us as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.
How sorrow shakes him!
So, now the tempest tears him up by the roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.
When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,
And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you. Shaks.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning.
Well.
O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your speaker,
Madam? B. Jonson, Catiline.

15. It sometimes is little more than an ex-pletive, though it implies some latent or surd comparison. In French, si.
An astringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary. Arbutnot.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.
There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shakspeare.
I will never bear a base mind: if it be my destiny, so; if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince. Shakspeare.

17. A form of petition.
Ready are the appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shakspeare.

18. So forth. Denoting more of the like kind.

Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, and so forth, the spice and salt that season a man? Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

19. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.
So much as you admire the beauty of his verse,
his prose is full as good. Pope.

20. So so. An exclamation after something done or known. Corrupted, I think, from cesssez.
I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So so. Shakspeare, Othello.

So, so; it works: now mistress, sit you fast.
Dryden.

21. So so. [così, così, Ital.] Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.

He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so, so; and yet 'tis well. Shakspeare.

Deliver us from the nauseous repetition of As and So, which some so so writers, I may call them so, are continually sounding in our ears.
Felton on the Classics.

22. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.

So then the Volscians stand but as at first Ready, when time shall prompt them to, to make road Upon 's again. Shakspeare, Coriol.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs: so then, I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound designs. Bacon.

To SOAK. v. a. [rocian, Sax.]

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood:
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
Their land shall be soaked with blood.

Isa. xxxiv. 7.
There deep Galesus soaks the yellow sands.

Dryden.
Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To draw in through the pores.

Thou whose life's a dream of lazy pleasure:
'Tis all thy business, business how to shun,
To bask thy naked body in the sun;
Suppling thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden.

3. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term, perhaps used erroneously for suck.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.

A greater sparer than a savor; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garrisons, and his feasting, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer.
Wolton.

To SOAK. v. n.

1. To lie steeped in moisture.
For thy conceit in soaking will draw in
More than the common blocks. Shakspeare.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.

Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow vessel, putting a canvass between, and pour water upon it so as to soak through: it will make a harder ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve than ordinarily. Bacon.

Rain soaking into the strata, which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.

3. To drink gluttonously and intemperately.
This is a low term.

Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health and plenty; the least of which he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club. Locke.

SOAKER.† n. s. [from soak.]

1. ONE that macerates in any moisture.

2. A great drinker. In low language.

A good fellow! a painful, able, and laborious soaker; — who owes all his good-nature to the pot and the pipe. South, Sermon vi. 111.

You may have taken notice of a maudlin kind of soakers, who commonly relent when they are well moistened, as if they shrunk in the wetting.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. I.

SOAL* n. s. See SOLE.

SOAP. n. s. [sapo, Saxon; sapo, Lat.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil; its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenu-ating, and resolving; and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap.

Arbutnot on Aliments.
He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap.
Malachi.

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours.

Newton, Opt.
Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna. Woodward.

Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap-boilers have done with them, for cold or sour lands.

Mortimer.
As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-lee or soap-suds adds thereto. Mortimer.

SO'APBOILER. n. s. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap.

A soapboiler condescends with me on the duties on castle-soap. Addison, Spect.

SO'APWORT. n. s. [japonaria, Latin.] A species of campion. Miller.

SO'APY* adj. [from soap.] Resembling soap; having the quality of soap.

Tar-water, — as a soapy medicine, dissolves the grumous concretions of the fibrous part.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 96.
To SOAR. v. n. [sorare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings. Milton uses it actively.

'Tis but a base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shaks.

Feather'd soon and fleg'd,
They sum'd their pens, and soaring the air sublime,

With clang despis'd the ground. Milton, P. L.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shaks.

Valour soars above
What the world calls misfortune and afflictions. Addison.

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low
As high he soar'd. Milton, P. L.

Flames rise and sink by fits; at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more.

Dryden.

When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

SOAR. n. s. [from the verb] Towering flight.

Within soar

Of towering eagles, to all the fowls he seems

A phoenix. Milton, P. L.

SOAR* adj. See SORE.

SOARING* n. s. [from soar.]

1. The act of mounting aloft.

2. The act of elevating the mind.

Proverbs were ambitiously seized by the lyric and by the epic muse in their most rapid career, and their sublimest soarings.

Parr on Education, p. 2.

To SOB.† v. n. [reobgenb, complaining, Saxon. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopoia copied from the sound. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the verb reopan, to grieve, to lament. See Lyc, and Sere-nius. Wachter mentions the Hebrew saphad, planxit, luit, as having been considered as the etymon.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep.

Shakspeare.
As if her life and death lay on his saying,
Some tears she shed, with sighs and sobbings mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying.

Fairfax.

She sigh'd, she sobb'd, and furious with despair,
She rent her garments, and she tore her hair.

Dryden.

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke on Education.

I sobb'd; — and with faint eyes

Look'd upwards, to the Ruler of the skies. Harte.

Sob. n. s. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break heart, or choke with sobs my hated breath;
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryd.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall.

Pope.

A word'nrous bag with both her hands she binds:
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.

Pope.

To Sob. v. a. To soak. A cant word.

The tree being sobbed and wet, swells.

Mortimer.

Sob'bing.* n. s. [from sob.] Act of lamenting.

The hoarse sobbing of the widow'd dove.

Drummond, Sonnet.

Sob'ER. adj. [sobrius, Lat. sobre, Fr.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

Live a sober, righteous, and godly life.

Common Prayer.

The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Bp. Taylor, Worlthy Common.

No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour.

South, Sermon.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author; that he which being overcome with drink did then strike any man, should suffer punishment double as much as if he had done the same being sober.

Hooker.

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raging mad: there was not a sober person to be had; all was tempestuous and blustering.

Dryden.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck.

Dryden.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

This same young sober-blooded boy, a man cannot make him laugh.

Shakspeare.

Cicero travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writer.

Abbot, Desc. of the World.

Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded.

Tit. ii. 6.

The governour of Scotland being of great courage, and sober judgement, amply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field.

Hayward.

These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace.

Clarendon.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it.

Clarendon.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives

Religious, titled them the sons of God,

Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame

Ignobly to the trains and to the smiles

Of these fair atheists.

Milton, P. L.

Be your designs ever so good, your intentions ever so sober, and your searches directed in the fear of God.

Waterland.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.

Petruchio

Shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,

To old Baptista as a schoolmaster.

Shaks.

Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shaks.

Twilight grey

Had in her sober livery all things clad.

Milton, P. L.

What parts gay France from sober Spain?

A little rising rocky chain:

Of men born south or north o' the hill,

Those seldom move, these ne'er stand still. Prior.

For Swift and him despis'd the force of state,

The sober follies of the wise and great. Pope.

See her sober over a sampler, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.

To Sob'ER.† v. a. [from the adjective.]

To make sober; to cure of intoxication.

Dr. Johnson. — This is a very old English verb: it occurs in the Prompt.

Parvulorum.

A little learning is a dangerous thing;

Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;

There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,

And drinking largely sobers us again. Pope.

Sob'ERLY. adv. [from sober.]

1. Without intemperance.

2. Without madness.

3. Temperately; moderately.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers. Bacon.

4. Coolly; calmly.

Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly, laying on the blows slowly. Locke.

Sob'ERMI'NEDNESS.* n. s. [from sober-minded; which see in the fourth sense of Sob'ER.] Calmness; regularity; freedom from inordinate passion.

To induce habits of modesty, humility, temperance, frugality; obedience; in one word, sober-mindedness.

Bp. Porteus, Sermon, before the Univ. of Camb.

Sob'ERNNESS.† n. s. [from sober.]

1. Temperance; especially in drink.

Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Common Prayer.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm; coolness.

I am not mad, most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of soberness and truth.

Acts, xxvi. 25.

A person noted for his soberness and skill in spagyrical preparations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well.

Boyle.

The soberness of Virgil might have shewn the difference. Dryden.

Sob'RI'ETY.† n. s. [from sobriété, French; sobrius, Lat. Not frequent in the plural number; nor has Dr. Johnson furnished an example of that kind. Bishop Taylor and South use it. See the fifth meaning.]

1. Temperance in drink; soberness.

Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in Scripture is more declaimed against than gluttony; and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking.

Bp. Taylor.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister, more than that he which describeth the manner how to pitch a field, should speak of moderation and sobriety in diet. Hooker.

4. Freedom from inordinate passion.

The libertine could not prevail on men of virtue, sobriety to give up their religion, Rogers.

5. Calmness; coolness.

Enquire, with all sobriety and severity, whether there be in the footsteps of nature any such transmission of immaterial virtues, and what the force of imagination is. Bacon.

The sobrieties of a holy life.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1651.) p. 121.

The sobrieties of virtue. South, Sermon. vi. 157.

Sobriety in our ripier years is the effect of a well concocted warmth: but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and old infancy? Dryden.

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staydness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

A report without truth; and I had almost said, without any sobriety, or modesty. Waterland.

Mirth makes them not mad;

Nor sobriety sad. Denham.

SOC.* n. s. [roc, Saxon. In hoc differentiant inter se sac et soc; quod istud, nempe sac, privilegium erat, sive potestas, cognoscendi causas et lites dirimendi; hæc autem, nempe soc, territorium, sive præcinctus, in quo saca et cetera privilegia exercebantur: Soc, curia: Sac, causarium in ipsa curia cognitio. Hickes.]

1. Jurisdiction; circuit, or place, where a lord has the power or liberty of holding a court of his tenants, and administering justice.

The said Robert le Fitz-Walter — hath a sok [soc] in the city of London: — if any thief shall be taken in his sok, he ought to have his stocks and imprisonment in his sok.

Blount, Anc. Tenures, p. 118.

2. Liberty or privilege of tenants excused from customary burthens. Cowel.

3. An exclusive privilege claimed by millers of grinding all the corn which is used within the manor, or township, wherein their mill stands. Some trials at law relative to this ancient privilege have lately taken place; but the millers have generally been cast. Marshall's Yorkshire. Grose in V. Soke.

Soc'cAGE. n. s. [soc, French, a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Latin.] In law, is a tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee. All services due for land being knight's service, or soccage; so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This soccage is of three kinds; a soccage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a year for all manner of services. Soccage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Soccage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt; and such socmen hold not by certain service. Cowel.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

Soc'cAGER. n. s. [from soccage.] A tenant by soccage.

SOCIABILITY.* n. s. [from sociable.] Sociableness.

He introduceth the system of human sociability, by showing it to be the dictate of the Creator.

Warburton.

SO'CIABLE. adj. [sociable, Fr. sociabilis, Latin.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them as they are sociable parts united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular.

Hooker.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild, and sociable to man; To cultivate the wild licentious savage With wisdom, discipline.

Addison, Cato.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.

Then thus employ'd, he beheld With pity heaven's high King, and to him call'd Raphael, the sociable spirit, that deign'd To travel with Tobias.

Milton, P. L.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, or any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and exposed age.

Wotton.

SO'CIABLE.* n. s. [from the adj.] A kind of less exalted phæton, with two seats facing each other, and a box for the driver.

Mason.

SO'CIABLENESS. n. s. [from sociable.]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would call their friendship love, and feign To sociableness a name profane.

Donne.

The two main properties of man are contemplation and sociableness, or love of converse.

More.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none; sometimes sociableness and fellowship well liked by many.

Hayward.

SO'CIABLY. adv. [from sociable.] Conversely; as a companion.

Yet not terrible,

That I should fear; nor sociably mild, As Raphael, that I should much offend; But solemn and sublime.

Milton, P. L.

SO'CIAL. adj. [socialis, Lat.]

1. Relating to a general or publick interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality.

Locke.

2. Easy to mix in friendly gaiety; companionable.

Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove Thy martial spirit or thy social love.

Pope.

3. Consisting in union or converse with another.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone, Best with thyself a company'd, seek'st not Social communication.

Milton, P. L.

SOCIALITY.* n. s. [from social.] Socialness.

The progress of sociology.

Sterne.

A scene of perfectly easy sociology.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

SO'CIALLY.* adv. [from social.] In a social way.

SO'CIALNESS. n. s. [from social.] The quality of being social.

To SO'CIATE.* v. n. [socio, Lat.] To associate; to mix in company.

One sort will not sociate with the rest of their neighbours, Shelford's Learned Disc. (1635), p. 58.

SOCIETY. n. s. [société, Fr. societas, Lat.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of laws for another society, as if the church could make laws for the state in temporals; or the state make laws binding the church, relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other.

Leslie.

2. Numbers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and publick societies.

Tillotson.

3. Company; converse.

To make society

The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself

Till supper-time alone.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,

Who having seen me in my worster state,

Shunn'd my abhor'd society.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Solitude sometimes is best society,

And short retirement urges sweet return.

Milton, P. L.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can sort?

Milton, P. L.

Heaven's greatness no society can bear;

Servants be made, and those thou want'st not here.

Dryden.

SOCI'NIAN.* n. s. One who follows the opinions of L. and F. Socinus, who denied the proper divinity and atonement of Christ.

The Socinians, who allow Christ nothing but an human nature, affirm, that he is said to descend from heaven, only in respect of the divinity of his original and production; as it is elsewhere said, that every good and perfect gift descends from above, namely, because it is derived from a divine principle.

South, Sermon vii. 6.

SOCI'NIAN.* adj. Of or belonging to Socinianism.

Next to infidels professed, there was no set of writers he treated with less ceremony than the Socinian; in whom he saw an immoderate presumption; and suspected not a little ill faith.

Hurd, Life of Bp. Warburton.

SOCI'NIANISM.* n. s. The tenets first propagated by the two persons of the name of Socinus, uncle and nephew, in the sixteenth century.

We see one tainted with popery, another with Socinianism, another with Antinomianism, another with Familism; and all these run a madding after their own fancies.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 5.

SOCK.† n. s. [soccus, Latin; jock, Saxon; socket, Teut. sockr, Icel. vox plurimis linguæ communis, antiquissima et Phrygica. See Wachter and Serenius.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether socks, and mend them, and foot them too.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A physician, that would be mystical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile adj.; meaning he should put camomile within his socks.

Bacon.

2. The shoe of the ancient comic actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,

If Jonson's learned sock be on, Or sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child, Warble his native wood-notes wild.

Milton, L'Al.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,

Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear;

But gentle Simkin just reception finds

Amidst the monument of vanish'd minds.

Dryd.

On two figures of actors in the villa Mathei at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva.

Addison.

3. A ploughshare, or plough-sock. [soc d'une charruë, Fr. the coulter or share of a plough, Cotgrave; perhaps from the Lat. seco, to cut.] A northern word. See Ray and Grose.

SO'CKET. n. s. [souchette, Fr.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two goodly beacons, set in watches stead, Therein gave light, and flam'd continually; For they of living fire most subtilly Were made, and set in silver sockets bright.

Spenser, F. Q.

She at your flames would soon take fire,

And like a candle in the socket

Dissolve.

Hudibras.

The nightly virgin sees

When sparkling lamps their sputtering light advance,

And in the sockets oily bubbles dance.

Dryden.

The stars amaz'd ran backward from the sight,

And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light.

Dryden.

Two dire comets

In their own place and fire have breath'd their last,

Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown.

Dryden.

To nurse up the vital flame, as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry; it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume.

Collier.

2. The receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink; Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink; He withers at his heart, and looks as wan As the pale spectre of a murder'd man.

Dryden.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured, as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers.

Bacon.

Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket.

Wiseman.

As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some inaptitude and resistency to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue.

Wilkins.

On either side the head produce an ear,

And sink a socket for the shining share.

Dryden.

SO'CKETCHISEL. n. s. A stronger sort of chisels.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels; their shank made with a hollow socket a-top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket.

Mason.

SO'CLE. n. s. [With architects.] A flat square member, under the bases of pedestals of statues and vases: it serves as a foot or stand.

Bailey.

SO'CKLESS.* adj. [sock and less.] Wanting socks or shoes.

You shall behold one pair of legs, the feet of which were in times past sockless, but are now, through the change of time that alters all things, very strangely become the legs of a knight and courtier.

Beaumont and Fl. Wom. Hater.

SO'CMAN, or SO'CCAGER. n. s. [jocapman, Sax.] A sort of tenant that holds lands and tenements by soccage tenure, of which there are three kinds. See Soc-cage.

Cowel.

SO'CMANRY.* n. s. [from socman; low

Latin, sokemanria.] Free tenure by socage. Cowel.

It shall be lawful for the sokeman of the sokemanry of the said Robert le Fitz-Walter to demand the court of the said Robert.

Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 119.

SOCOME.† n. s. [In the old law.] A custom of tenants to grind corn at their lord's mill.

There is bond-socome, where tenants are bound to grind at the lord's mill; and love-socome, where they do it freely out of love to their lord.

Cowel.

SOCRATICAL.* adj. After the manner or SOCRATICK. † doctrine of the philosopher Socrates.

He winked at that with a socratical and philosophical patience.

Sir J. Harrington, Br. View of the Ch. p. 63.

The induction [or kind of syllogism] which proceeds by interrogation, and concludes probably, or with verisimilitude, is that which Socrates ordinarily made use of; and therefore called the Socratic induction.

Chambers, in V. Induction.

SOCRATICALLY.* adv. With the Socratical mode of disputation.

Is it such a pleasure to be non-plus'd in mood and figure, that you had rather be snapped in the mouse-trap of a syllogism, than treated socratically and genteelly? Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

SOCRATISM.* n. s. The philosophy of Socrates.

SOCRATIST.* n. s. A disciple of Socrates. There arose a great question between Pythagoras' disciples and the scholars of Socrates, for that the socratists said it was better and more commodious that all things should be in common.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554), I. i. b.

SOD. n. s. [sod, Dutch.] A turf; a clod. The sexton shall green sods on thee bestow; Alas! the sexton is thy banker now.

Swift.

Here fame shall dress a sweeter sod, Than fancy's feet have ever trod.

Collins.

2. The participle passive.

Wine and water, in which are sod southernwood, mellilot, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 406.

He believed his soul was either sod or roasted through the vehemency of love's fire.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 521.

SODA.* n. s. A fixed alkali; sometimes found native, but most generally obtained by burning maritime plants.

SODA Water.* A medicated drink, prepared by dissolving salt of soda in certain proportions of water.

SODALITY.† n. s. [sodalité, old French; sodalitas, Latin.] A fellowship; a fraternity.

Sodalities of all sorts and conditions whatsoever, either secular or ecclesiastical.

Parth. Sacra, (1633), p. 180.

A new confraternity was instituted in Spain, of the slaves of the Blessed Virgin, and this sodality established with large indulgencies. Stillingfleet.

SODDEN.† [from seethe; sieden, Germ. See TO SEETHE. It is written sodny or sothyn in the Prompt. Parv.]

1. Used in the past tense active, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed; boiled.

The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children; they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people.

Lament. iv. 10.

2. The participle passive of seethe; boiled; seethed.

Can sodden water their barley-broth, Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?

Shakspeare.

Sodden business! there's a stew'd phrase indeed!

Shakspeare.

Thou sodden-witted lord; thou hast no more brain than I have in my elbows.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Try it with milk sodden, and with cream. Bacon. Mix it with sodden wines and raisins.

Dryden.

3. Applied, in some places, to bread not well baked; doughy.

SODDY.* adj. [from sod.] Turfy; full of sods.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TO SODDER.† v. a. [souder, Fr. souderen, Dutch. It is generally written solder, from soldare, Ital. solidare, Latin; and sometimes, improperly, sodder.] To cement with some metallick matter.

He that smootheth with the hammer, encourageth him that smote the anvil, saying, It is ready for soddering.

Isaiah, xli.

Let him bethink—how he will sodder up the shifting flaws of his ungirt permissions.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. Pref.

SODDER. n. s. Metallick cement.

Still the difficulty returns, how these hooks were made: what is it that fastens this soder, and links these first principles of bodies into a chain?

Collier on Pride.

SOE.† n. s. [written also so and soa; Scottish, sae; Su. Goth. saa; old Fr. seau, a bucket or water-pail.] A large wooden vessel with hoops, for holding water; a cowl.

A pump grown dry will yield no water; but pouring a little into it at first, for one bason-full you may fetch up as many soe-fulls.

More.

SOE'VER. adv. [so and ever.] A word properly joined with a pronoun or adverb, as whosoever, whatsoever, howsoever.

What great thing soever a man proposed to do in his life, he should think of achieving it by fifty.

Temple.

What love soever by an heir is shown, Or you could ne'er suspect my loyal love, Dryd.

SO'FA. n. s. [I believe an eastern word.] A splendid seat covered with carpets.

The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat, and cried out, 'Tis my Abdallah! Guardian.

SOFT.† adj. [roft, Saxon; saft, Teut. which Junius refers to saft, Su. Goth. succus; and Serenius to the Icel. sefa, sedare.]

1. Not hard.

Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitution of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch.

Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft; the hardness is caused by the jejuneness of the spirits, which, if in a greater degree, make them not only hard, but fragil.

Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt, And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings' houses. St. Matthew.

3. Ductile; not unchangeable of form.

Spirits can either so assume; so soft And uncompounded is their essence pure.

Milton, P. L.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.

A few divines of so soft and servile tempers as disposed them to so sudden acting and compliance,

King Charles.

One king is too soft and easy, another too fiery. L'Estrange.

5. Tender; timorous.

What he hath done famously, he did it to that end, though soft-conscienced men can be content to say it was for his country. Shakspeare, Coriol.

However soft within themselves they are, To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow, That tends to make one worthy man my foe;

Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,

Or from the soft-ey'd virgin steal a tear. Pope.

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.

Would my heart were flint like Edward's; Or Edward's soft and pitiful like mine. Shaks.

Our torments may become

As soft as now severe. Milton, P. L.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay, His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.

7. Meek; civil; complaisant.

Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils, Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess

Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim

In asking their good loves. Shakspeare, Coriol.

8. Placid; still; easy.

On her soft axle while she paces even, She bears these softs, with the smooth air along.

Milton, P. L.

9. Effeminate; viciously nice.

This sense is also mistress of an art Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;

Though this dear art doth little good impart,

Since they smell best, that do of nothing smell. Davies.

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Broome.

10. Delicate; elegantly tender.

Her form more soft and feminine.

Milton, P. L.

Less winning soft, less amiably mild. Milton, P. L.

11. Weak; simple.

He made soft fellows stark noddies, and such as were foolish quite mad.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 149.

What cannot such scoffers do, especially if they find a soft creature on whom they may work.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 150.

The deceiver soon found this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him.

Glanville.

12. Gentle; not loud; not rough.

Her voice was ever soft, Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in women.

Shakspeare.

The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders, Milton, P. L.

When some great and gracious monarch dies, Soft whispers first, and mournful murmurs rise,

Among the sad attendants; then the sound Soon gathers voice. Dryden.

13. Smooth; flowing; not vehement; not rapid.

The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays, Milton, P. L.

Soft were my numbers; who could take offence, When smooth description held the place of sense?

Pope.

Hark! the numbers soft and clear
Gently steal upon the ear. Pope.
14. Not forcible; not violent.
Sleep falls with soft slumberous vigour.
Milton, P. L.

15. Mild; not glaring.
The sun shining upon the upper part of the clouds, made them appear like fine down or wool, and made the softest sweetest lights imaginable.
Brown, Travels.

SOFT.* adv. Softly; gently; quietly.
Then pausing soft, and trembling every joynt,
Her fearfull feet toward the bowres she mov'd.
Spenser, F. Q.

He— with voice
Mild, as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes,
Her hand softly touching, whisper'd thus.
Milton, P. L.

Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,
His head reclin'd, young Ithacus began. Pope.
There soft extended, to the murmuring sound
Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.

SOFT. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.
But soft, I pray you, let king Richard then Proclaim my brother? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Oh! come in, Amilia;
Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shaks.
But soft, my muse, the world is wide,
And all at once was not deserv'd. Suckling.

To SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]
1. To make soft; to make less hard.

Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,
And sounding hammers break its barbed frame.
Gay.

2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.

I will soften stony hearts. Milton, P. L.
Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them,
or soften them by their representation. Addison.
I would correct the harsh expressions of one party by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire,
Bid her be all that cheeks or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife.
Pope.

Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;
Musick can soften pain to ease,
And make despair and madness please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh; less vehement;
less violent.

He bore his great commission in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke.
Dryden.

5. To make less glaring.

6. To make tender; to enervate.

To SOFTEN. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.

Many bodies that will hardly melt, will soften;
as iron in the forge. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To grow less obdurate; cruel; or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child;
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails. Shakespeare.

SOFTENER.* See SOFTNER.

SOFTENING.* n. s. [from soften.] The act of making less hard, less vehement, or less violent.

I allow that elevations and softenings of the voice, judiciously managed, are both ornamental and useful; but those sudden starts and explosions are most ungraceful and unbecoming the gravity of the pulpit.

Alp. Hort, Charge to the Clergy, (1742.)

SOFTHEARTED.* adj. [soft and heart.]
Kind-hearted; gentle; meek.

Thou art some prating fellow;
One that hath studied out a trick to talk,
And move soft-hearted people.

Beaumont and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.
A right reasonable, innocent, and soft-hearted petition. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

SOFTLING.* n. s. [from soft.] An effeminate or viciously nice person.

We receive fashions of our companions:— The drunkard leadeth his guests into drunkenness.
Effeminate men and softlings cause the stout man to wax tender.

Woolton, Christ. Manual, (1576,) L. 6. b.

SOFTLY. adv. [from soft.]
1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently; not forcibly.
Solid bodies, if very softly percussed, give no sound; as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.
Ahab rent his clothes, and went softly.
1 Kings, xxi. 27.

In this dark silence softly leave the town,
And to the general's tent direct your steps.
Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.
Death will dismiss me,
And lay me softly in my native dust,
To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust. Dryden.
She with a wreath of myrtle crowns his head,
And softly lays him on a flowery bed. Dryd. Æn.

5. Mildly; tenderly.
The king must die;
Though pity softly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great.
Dryden.

SOFTNER. n. s. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.

Those softners, and expedient-mongers, shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

SOFTNESS.† n. s. [from soft; Saxon, softnysse.]

1. The quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Their hearts are enlarged, they know how to gather the down and softnesses from the sharpest thistles. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 143.

2. Mildness; kindness.

A wise man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness;
or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity.

Watts, Logic.

3. Civility; gentleness.

They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the teeth. Holyday.

Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vicious delicacy.
So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy, are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Bp. Taylor.

He was not delighted with the softnesses of the court. Clarendon.

5. Timorousness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active.

Bacon, Hen. VII.
Saving a man's self, or suffering, if with reason,
is virtue: if without it, is softness, or obstinacy.

6. Quality contrary to harshness.

Softness of sounds is distinct from the exility of sounds. Bacon.

7. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be effected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit, which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they whose words were even as oracles amongst men, seemed evermore loth to give sentence against any thing publicly received in the church of God.
Hooker.

8. Contrariety to energetick vehemence.
Who but thyself the mind and ear can please,
With strength and softness, energy and ease?
Harte.

9. Mildness; meekness.

For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness she and sweet attractive grace.
Milton, P. L.

Her stubborn look
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

10. Weakness; simplicity.

SOGGY.* adj. [soggy, Icel. moist; soegen, Welsh, wet, soaked.] Moist; damp; steaming with damp. A recent editor of Ben Jonson's Works observes, that "he has heard the word applied (with what propriety he knows not) to hay that has been cut too early, and sweats as it lies in heaps." The propriety of the usage will now, from the etymology, be obvious.
The warping condition of this green and soggy multitude.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

SOHO.† interj. A form of calling from a distant place; a sportsman's halloo.

Laurel. So-ho! so-ho!
Prot. What seest thou?
Laurel. Him we go to find.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

To SOIL.† v. a. [Syllan, Sax. sülen, Germ.
soüllen, Fr. saulhan, bisaulhan, Goth.]

1. To foul; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to sully.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And soil'd with dust of the long dried way.

Spenser, F. Q.
Although some hereticks have abused this text,
yet the sun is not soiled in passage.

Bacon, Holy War.

If I soil
Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould.

Milton, Comus.
Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd.

Milton, P. L.
One, who could not for a taste o' th' flesh come in,
Licks the soil'd earth, —
While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood.

Tate.
If the eye-glass be tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible, and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point.

Newton.
An absent hero's bed they sought to soil,
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil.

Pope.

2. To dung; to manure.

Men now present, just as they soil their ground;
not that they loved the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

3. To soil a horse; to purge him by giving him grass in the spring. [Dr. Johnson refers this meaning to the Fr. saouler, to glut.]

The soiled horse. Shakspeare.

SOIL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways

I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head :

To thee it shall descend with better quiet;

For all the soil of the achievement goes

With me into the earth. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

That would be a great soil in the new gloss of your marriage. Shakspeare.

Vexed I am with passions,

Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,

Which, nice as ermines, will not bear a soil.

2. [Sol, French; solum, Lat.] Ground; earth, considered with relation to its vegetative qualities.

Judgement may be made of waters by the soil whereupon they run. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Her spots thou see'st

As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruits in her soften'd soil. Milton, P. L.

The first cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the soil, to produce the necessities and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Swift.

3. Land; country.

Dorset, that with fearful soul

Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,

This fair alliance shall call home

To high promotions. Shakspeare.

O unexpected stroke, worse than of death!

Must I thus leave thee, paradise! thus leave

Thee, native soil! these happy walks and shades,

Fit haunts of gods. Milton, P. L.

4. Dung; compost.

The haven has been stopped up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it; for all the soil on that side of Ravenna has been left there insensibly by the sea. Addison.

Improve land by dung, and other sort of soils.

Mortimer.

5. To take SOIL. To run into the water, as a deer when closely pursued.

O sir, have you ta'en soil here? It's well a man may reach you after three hours running yet!

B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

SOILINESS. n. s. [from soil.] Stain; foulness.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin, whether it yield no soiliness more than silver.

Bacon.

SOILURE. n. s. [from soil.] Stain; pollution.

He merits well to have her,

Not making any scruple of her soilure. Shaks.

To SOJOURN. v. n. [sejourner, French; segiornare, Italian.] To dwell any where for a time; to live as not at home;

to inhabit as not in a settled habitation.

Almost out of use.

If, till the expiration of your month,

You will return and sojourn with my sister,

Dismissing half your train, come then to me.

Shakspeare.

Th' advantage of his absence took the king's,

And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's.

Shakspeare.

How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how creeps acquaintance?

Shakspeare.

Here dwells he; though he sojourn every where

In progress, yet his standing house is here. Donne.

The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourned three days. Hayward.

To sojourn in that land

He comes invited. Milton, P. L.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees abroad to the state of things at home.

Atterbury.

SO'JOURN. n. s. [sejour, French; from the verb.] A temporary residence; a casual and no settled habitation. This word was anciently accented on the last syllable: Milton accents it indifferently.

The princes, France and Burgundy,
Long in our court have made their am'rous jour. Shakspeare.

Thee I revisit now,
Escap'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
In that obscure sojourn. Milton, P. L.

Scarce view'd the Galilean towns,

And once a-year Jerusalem, few days

Short sojourn. Milton, P. R.

SO'JOURNER. n. s. [from sojourn.] A temporary dweller.

We are strangers and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow.

1 Chron. xxix. 16.

Waves o'erthrew
Busiris, and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursu'd
The sojourners of Goshen. Milton, P. L.

Not for a night, or quick revolving year,

Welcome an owner, not a sojourner. Dryden.

SO'JOURNING.* n. s. [from sojourn.] The act of dwelling any where but for a time.

The *sojourn*ing of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. Ezod. xii. 40.

SOL.* n. s. The name of one of the musical notes in *sol-fa*ing. See To SOL-FA.

*To SOL-FA. v. n. To pronounce the several notes of a song by the terms of the gamut, ut, re, mi, fa, sol; and in learning to sing.

Yet can I neither sol-fe, ne sing, ne saints' lives read.

Langland, as cited by Selden, Drayton's Pol. S. 11.

I'll try how you can sol-fa.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Those words might not, and probably would not, for a long time have any meaning, but might resemble the syllables which we make use of in *sol-fa*ing.

A. Smith, on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

To SOLACE. v. a. [solaciar, old French; solazzare, Italian; solatium, Latin.] To comfort; to cheer; to amuse.

We will with some strange pastime solace them.

Shakspeare.

The birds with song

To SOLACE. v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. Obsolete.

One poor and loving child,

But one thing to rejoice and solace in,

And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight.

Shakspeare.

Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,

This sickly land might solace as before.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

SOL'ACE.† n. s. [solas, old Fr.] Comfort; pleasure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleasure; recreation; amusement.

Therein sat a lady fresh and fair,

Making sweet solace to herself alone;

Sometimes she sung as loud as lark in air,

Sometimes she laugh'd, that night her breath was gone.

Spenser, F. Q.

If we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we are not to envy them this solace; we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every such thing their tormentors.

Hooker.

Give me leave to go;

Sorrow would solace, and my age would ease.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new solace in her return. Milton, P. L.

If I would delight my private hours

With music or with poem, where so soon

As in our native language can I find

That solace? Milton, P. R.

Though sight be lost,

Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd

Where other senses want their delights,

At home in leisure and domestic ease,

Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad. Milton, S. A.

Through waters and through flames I'll go,

Suff'r her and solace of thy woe. Prior.

SOL'ACIOUS.* adj. [solacieux, old French.]

Affording comfort, recreation, or amusement.

This is an old English word, which Cotgrave and Sherwood also have noticed.

It is a solacious voyce when it raiseth, relieveth, and quickeneth the desolate conscience with comfortable promises.

Bale on the Rev. P. i. (1550.) D. s. b.

Solacious pastimes, ydelness, and crudelty.

Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. ii. C. i. b.

SOL'AND-GOOSE.* See SOLUND-GOOSE.

SOL'ANDER. n. s. [soulandres, French.] A disease in horses.

Dict.

SOL'AR.† adj. [solaire, Fr. solaris, Lat.]

SOL'ARY.† adj. [solaire, Fr. solaris, Lat.]

1. Being of the sun.

The corpuscles that make up the beams of light be solar effluvioms, or minute particles of some ethereal substance, thrusting on one another from the lucid body. Boyle.

Instead of golden fruits,

By genial show'r's and solar heat supply'd,

Unsusferable winter hath defac'd

Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste.

Blackmore.

2. Belonging to the sun.

They denominate some herbs solar, and some lunar. Bacon.

Scripture hath been punctual in other records, concerning solar miracles. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Born under or in the predominant influence of the sun.

The cock was pleas'd to hear him speak so fair,

And proud beside, as solar people are. Dryden.

4. Measured by the sun.

The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months. Holder on Time.

SOL'AR.* n. s. See SOLLAR.

SOLD. The preterite and participle passive of sell.

SOLD. n. s. [sould, old Fr. Trevoux.]

Military pay; warlike entertainment.

But were your will her sold to entertain,

And number'd be amongst knights of maidenhead,

Great guerdon, well I wot, should you remain,

And in her favour high be reckoned. Spenser, F. Q.

SOL'DAN.† n. s. [soldano, Ital. souldan, old Fr.

from the Arab. "Sultan, souldan, souldan, and with the article assultan [is] the name of supreme honour amongst the Arabians, and seemeth to be as much as imperator was amongst the Romans."

See the Arabian Trudgman in Bedwell's

Mohamm. Impost. 1615, p. 103. See also SULTAN.] The emperor of the Turks.

To SOLDER. v. a. [souder, Fr. soldare, Ital. solidare, Lat. See SODER.]

1. To unite or fasten with any kind of metallic cement.

A concave sphere of gold, filled with water, and soldered up, has, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton, Opt.

2. To mend ; to unite any thing broken.

It booteth them not thus to solder up a broken cause, whereof their first and last discourses will fall asunder. Hooker.

Wars 'twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men Should solder up the rift. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.
Thou visible god,
That solderest close impossibilities,
And mak'st them Kiss! Shakespeare, Timon.

Learn'd he was in med'cinal lore;
For by his side a pouch he wore,
Replete with strange hermetic powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder.
Hudibras.

The naked cynick's jar ne'er flames ; if broken,
'Tis quickly solder'd, or a new bespoken. Dryden, Jun. Juv.

At the Restoration the Presbyterians, and other sects, did all unite and solder up their several schemes, to join against the church. Swift.

So'LDER. n. s. [from the verb.] Metallic cement. A metallic body that will melt with less heat than the body to be soldered.

Goldsmiths say, the coarsest stuff
Will serve for solder well enough. Swift.

So'LDERER. n. s. [from solder.] One that solders or mends.

So'LDIER. † n. s. [soldat, Fr. from solidarius, low Latin ; of solidus, a piece of money, the pay of a soldier, as Dr. Johnson has observed ; but our word seems to be immediately from the old Fr. soldoier, soudoyer, soldier. See Lacombe. Sowdgyowre is also our old word in the Prompt. Parv. and rendered "stipendarius;" and we retain it in the vulgar pronunciation, sojer. We had formerly another term for soldier from the Ital. soldato, viz. soldado :

"Those, that are soldados in thy state,

"Do beare the badge of base, effeminate,

"Ev'n on their plumie crests."

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599), iii. 8. So the German soldat, (as well as the French,) from sold, pay ; solden, to make payment of wages ; solidare, low Lat. the same.]

1. A fighting man ; a warrior. Originally one who served for pay.

Your sister is the better soldier. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Good Siward,
An older and a better soldier none. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A soldier
Full of strange oaths, and bearded like a pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Ev'n in the cannon's mouth. Shakespeare.

A hateful service that dissolv'd the knees
Of many a soldier. Chapman.

I have not yet forgot I am a king :
If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face ;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier. Dryden, Don Seb.

2. It is generally used of the common men, as distinct from the commanders.

It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier. Spenser on Ireland.

So'LDIERESS.* n. s. [from soldier.] A female warrior.

Honour'd Hippolita,
Most dreaded Amazonian ; — Soldieress
That equally canst pose sternness with pity.
Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

So'LDIERLIKE. } adj. [soldier and like.]
So'LDIERLY. } Martial ; warlike ; military ; becoming a soldier.

Although at the first they had fought with beastly fury rather than any soldierly discipline, practice had now made them comparable to the best. Sidney.

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldierlike word, and a word of good command. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

They, according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the words of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place. Hayward.

Enemies as well as friends confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side. Clarendon.

So'LDIERSHIP. n. s. [from soldier.] Military character ; martial qualities ; behaviour becoming a soldier ; martial skill.

Thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership : he did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciplined of the brav'st. Shakespeare, All's Well.

By sea you throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land,
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen. Shakespeare.

So'LDIERY. n. s. [from soldier.]

1. Body of military men ; soldiers collectively.

The Memphian soldiery,
That swell'd the Erythrean wave, when wall'd,
The unfroze waters marvellously stood. Philips.
I charge not the soldiery with ignorance and contempt of learning, without allowing exceptions. Swift.

2. Soldiership ; military service.

Offering him, if he would exercise his courage in soldiery, he would commit some charge unto him under his lieutenant Philanax. Sidney.

SOLE. † n. s. [solum, Lat.]

1. The bottom of the foot.

I will only be bold with Benedict for his company ; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot he is all mirth. Shakespeare, Much Ado.
Tickling is most in the soles of the feet : the cause is the rareness of being touched there. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The soles of the feet have great affinity with the head and the mouth of the stomach ; as going wetshod, to those that use it not, affecteth both. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Such resting found the sole of unblest feet. Milton, Nat. Hist.

In the make of the camel's foot, the sole is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick, soft, and somewhat callous skin, fit to travel in sandy places. Ray.

2. The foot.

To redeem thy woeful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever-dying dread,
Hast wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet ceasest not thy weary soles to lead. Spenser, F. Q.

3. [Solea, Lat. sol, Sax. sulja, Goth.] The bottom of the shoe.

Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.
— Not I, believe me : you have dancing shoes,
With nimble soles. Shakespeare.

On fortune's cap we are not the very button. —
Nor the soles of her shoe. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The caliga was a military shoe, with a very thick sole, tied above the instep with leather thongs. Arbutnot on Coins.

4. The part of any thing that touches the ground.

The strike-block is a plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the shooting of a short joint. Mozon, Mech. Ex.

Elm is proper for mills, soles of wheels, and pipes. Mortimer.

5. A kind of sea-fish. [sometimes written soal, by way of distinction, which, as Mr. Bagshaw and Mr. Nares also observe, is improper ; the fish being originally called solea from its shape, resembling the sole of a shoe or sandal.]

Of flat fish, rays, thornbacks, soles, and flounders. Carew.

To SOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with soles : as, to sole a pair of shoes.

His feet were soled with a treble tuft of a close short tawny down. Grew, Mus.

SOLE. adj. [sol, old French ; solus, Lat.]

1. Single ; only.

Take not upon thee to be judge alone : there is no sole judge but only one : say not to others, Receive my sentence, when their authority is above thine. Hooker.

Orpheus every where expressed the infinite and sole power of one God, though he used the name of Jupiter. Raleigh.

To me shall be the glory sole among

The infernal powers. Milton, P. L.
A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stripp'd them bare, and one sole way they rent. Dryden.

He, sole in power, at the beginning said,
Let sea, and air, and earth, and heaven be made :
And it was so : and, when he shall ordain
In other sort, has but to speak again,
And they shall be no more. Prior.

2. [In law.] Not married.

Some others are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be sole and unmarried. Ayliffe.

SOLECISM. † n. s. [σολοκισμός, Gr. from Σολοκ, Soloeci, coloni Attici, qui Solis, Ciliciae urbe, habitantes, Atticā puritate relicta, linguam ex Atticā et Soloecā mixtam loquebantur. Hederici Lex. Gr. The Greek word (σολοκισμός) signified also any thing incorrect or out of order ; which Dr. Johnson has overpassed. The French have solecisme.]

1. Unfitness of one word to another ; impropriety in language. A barbarism may be in one word, a solecism must be of more.

There is scarce a solecism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript. Addison.

2. Any unfitness or impropriety.

To have one fair gentlewoman thus be made
The unkind instrument to wrong another,
And one she knows not, ay, and to persevere,
In my poor judgement is not warranted,
From being a solecism in our sex,
If not in manners. B. Jonson, Fox.

There is no decorum in it; nothing but solecism and absurdity. Farindon, Sermon. (1647.) p. 20.

SO'LEICIST.* n. s. [σολοικιστής, Gr.] One who is guilty of impropriety in language. Shall a noble writer, and an inspired noble writer, be called a solecist, and barbarian, for giving a new turn to a word so agreeable to the analogy and genius of the Greek tongue?

Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 159.

SOLECI'STICAL.* adj. [from solecist.] Not correct; barbarous.

He thought it made the language solecistical and absurd. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 157.

They solecize in saying that works do justify.

Dr. Clarke's Sermon. (1637.) p. 470.

This being too loose a principle — to fancy the holy writers to solecize in their language, when we do not like the sense.

More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) B. 1. Ch. 9.

SO'LELY.* adv. [from sole.] Singly; only.

You knew my father well, and in him me,

Left solely heir to all his lands.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

This night's great business
Shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Shakespeare.

That the intemperate heat of the climate solely occasions this complexion, experience admits not.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety.

Atterbury.

They all choose rather to rest the cause solely on logical disputation, than upon the testimonies of the ancients.

Waterland.

SOLEMN.* adj. [solemnel, Fr. solemnis, Latin.]

His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd.

Milton, P. L.

3. Formal; ritual; religiously regular.

The necessary business of a man's calling, with some, will not afford much time for set and solemn prayer.

Wh. Duty of Man.

4. Striking with seriousness; sober; serious.

Then can he loudly through the house to call,
But no one care to answer to his cry;
There reign'd a solemn silence over all.

Spenser, F. Q.

To swage with solemn touches troubled thoughts.

Milton, P. L.

Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling.

Milton, P. L.

5. Grave; affectively serious.

When Steele reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succession of laws and oaths, he thinks all fear vanisheth: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing; because though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn corcomb, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn barrier.

Swift.

SO'LEMNESS.† n. s. [solemnité, Fr. from SOLEMNITY.] solemn.

1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.

Were these annual solemnities only practised in the church?

Nelson.

Though the days of solemnity, which are but few, must quickly finish that outward exercise of devotion which appertains to such times; yet they increase men's inward dispositions to virtue for the present, and, by their frequent returns, bring the same at length to perfection.

Nelson.

Great was the cause; our old solemnities From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay These grateful honours to the god of day.

Pope.

2. Religious ceremony.

Honest men's words are Stygian oaths, and promises inviolable. These are not the men for whom the fetters of law were first forged; they needed not the solemnness of oaths; by keeping their faith they swear, and evacuate such confirmations.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 19.

3. Awful ceremony or procession.

The lady Constance,
Some speedy messenger bid repair
To our solemnity.
The moon, like to a silver bow,
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

Shakespeare.

There may be greater danger in using such compositions in churches, at arraignments, plays, and solemnities.

Bacon.

What fun'ral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity!

Dryden.

Though the forms and solemnities of the last judgement may bear some resemblance to those we are acquainted with here, yet the rule of proceeding shall be very different.

Atterbury.

4. Manner of acting awfully serious.

With much more skillful cruelty, and horrible solemnity, he caused each thing to be prepared for his triumph of tyranny.

Sidney.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

TO SO'LEMNIZE. v. a. [solemniser, French; from solemn.]

1. To dignify by particular formalities; to celebrate.

Dorilus in a great battle was deprived of life; his obsequies being no more solemnized by the tears of his partakers than the blood of his enemies.

Sidney.

Baptism to be administered in one place, and marriage solemnized in another.

Hooker.

Then can they sprinkle all the parts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day.

Spenser, F. Q.

The multitude of the celestial host were heard to solemnize his miraculous birth.

Boyle, Seraph. Love.

Their choice nobility and flower
Met from all parts to solemnize this feast.

Milton, S. A.

2. To perform religiously once a year.

What commandment the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication, is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized even by our Saviour himself.

Hooker.

SO'LEMNIZER.* n. s. [from solemnize.] One who performs a solemn rite or ceremony.

The second regard is of the solemnizer.

SO'LEMNLY. adv. [from solemn.]

1. With annual religious ceremonies.

2. With formal gravity and stateliness; with affected gravity.

There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly.

Bacon, Ess.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners, with selected friends, withdraw;
There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise,
Whisp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes arise.

Dryden.

3. With formal state.

Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

4. With religious seriousness.

To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader, that he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection.

Swift.

SO'LEMNESS.* n. s. [from sole.] State of SO'LESHIP. } being not connected or implicated with others; single state.

This ambition of a sole power — this dangerous soleship is a fault in our church indeed.

Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 134.

France has an advantage, over and above its abilities in the cabinet and the skill of its negotiators; which is (if I may use the expression) its soleness, continuity of riches and power within itself, and the nature of its government.

Ld. Chesterfield.

TO SOLI'CIT. v. a. [solicito, Lat. soliciter, Fr.]

1. To importune; to intreat.

If you bethink yourself of any crime,
Unreconcil'd as yet to heaven and grace,
Solicit for it straight.

Shakespeare, Othello.

We heartily solicit

Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

How he solicits heaven

Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures.

Shaks.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay,
To mould me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me?

Milton, P. L.

The guardian of my faith so false did prove,
As to solicit me with lawless love.

Dryden, Aurengz.

2. To call to action; to summon; to awake; to excite.

Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise;
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount
Her natural graces, that extinguish art.

So'LIDNESS. n. s. [from solid.] Solidity; firmness; density.

It beareth misselope: the cause may be the closeness and solidness of the wood and pith of the oak. Bacon.

It is built with that unusual solidness, that it seems he intended to make a sacrifice to perpetuity, and to contest with the iron teeth of time. Howell, Voc. For.

SOLIDUNGULOUS. adj. [solidus and ungula, Lat.] Whole-hoofed.

It is set down by Aristotle and Pliny, that an horse and all solidungulous or whole-hoofed animals have no gall, which we find repugnant unto reason. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SOLIFIDIAN. n. s. [solus and fides, Lat.] One who supposes only faith, not works necessary to justification.

It may be justly feared, that the title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church of God, at which so many myriads of solifidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving hence a reward of true opinions. Hammond.

SOLIFIDIAN.* adj. Professing the tenets of a solifidian.

A solifidian Christian is a nullifidian pagan, and confutes his tongue with his hand. Feltham, Res. ii. 47.

SOLIFIDIANISM.* n. s. The tenets of solifidians.

Such is his discourse of justification by faith without works, which runs throughout the epistle; which was abused, even in the apostolic age, to a dangerous kind of solifidianism by the Gnostick heretics. Bp. Bull, Works, iii. 386.

To SOLYLOQUIZE.* v. n. [from soliology.]
To utter a soliology.

SOLILOQUY. n. s. [soliologie, Fr. solus and loquor, Lat.] A discourse made by one in solitude to himself.

The whole poem is a soliology: Solomon is the person that speaks: he is at once the hero and the author; but he tells us very often what others say to him. Prior.

He finds no respite from his anxious grief,
Then seeks from his soliology relief.

If I should own myself in love, you know lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliology. Spectator.

SOLIPÉDE. n. s. [solus and pedes, Latin.]
An animal whose feet are not cloven.

Solipedes, or firm-footed animals, as horses, asses, and mules, are in mighty number. Brown, Vulg. Err.

SOLITAIRE.† n. s. [solitaire, Fr.]

1. A recluse; a hermit.

Often have I been going to take possession of tranquillity, when your conversation has spoiled me for a solitaire. Pope.

2. An ornament for the neck.

Before a solitaire, behind
A twisted ribbon. Shenstone, Progr. of Taste, P. i.
She sees him now in sash and solitaire
March in review with Milo's strut and stare. Neville, Imit. of Juv. p. 70.

SOLITARIAN. n. s.* [from solitary.] A hermit; a solitary.

This man gathered together all the dispersed monks and other solitarians of Italy, so that in a short time he had no less than twelve monasteries about him. Sir R. Twisslen, Monast. Life, p. 8.

SOLITARILY. adv. [from solitary.] In solitude; with loneliness; without company.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it? Hooker.
Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage, which dwell solitarily in the wood. Mic. vii. 14.

SOLITARINESS. n. s. [from solitary.] Solitude; forbearance of company; habitual retirement.

There is no cause to blame the prince for sometimes hearing them: the blame-worthiness is, that to hear them he rather goes to solitariness than makes them come to company. Sidney.

You subject yourself to solitariness, the sly enemy that doth most separate a man from well-doing. Sidney.

At home in wholesome solitariness,
My piteous soul began the wretchedness
Of suitors at the court to mourn. Donne.

SOLITARY. adj. [solitaire, Fr. solitarius, Lat.]

1. Living alone; not having company.

Those rare and solitary, these in flocks. Milton, P. L.

2. Retired; remote from company: done or passed without company.

In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well;
but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life.
Shakespeare.

Satan explores his solitary flight. Milton, P. L.
Him fair Lavinia

Shall breed in groves to lead a solitary life. Dryden, Æn.

3. Gloomy; dismal.

Let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein. Job.

4. Single.

Nor did a solitary vengeance serve: the cutting off one head is not enough; the eldest son must be involved. King Charles.

Relations alternately relieve each other, their mutual concurrences supporting their solitary instabilities. Brown.

SOLITARY. n. s. [from the adjective.]
One that lives alone; a hermit.

You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave, with a spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary. Pope, Lett.

SOLITUDE. n. s. [solitude, Fr. solitudo,
Latin.]

1. Lonely life; state of being alone.

It had been hard to have put more truth and untruth together, in few words, than in that speech; whosoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a god. Bacon.

What call'st thou solitude? Is not the earth
With various living creatures, and the air,
Replenish'd, and all these at thy command

To come, and play before thee? Milton, P. L.
Such only can enjoy the country who are capable of thinking when they are there: then they are prepared for solitude, and in that solitude is prepared for them. Dryden.

2. Loneliness; remoteness from company.

The solitude of his little parish is become matter of great comfort to him, because he hopes that God has placed him and his flock there, to make it their way to heaven. Law.

3. A lonely place; a desert.

In these deep solitudes, and awful cells,
Where heav'nly-pensive contemplation dwells. Pope.

SOLIVAGANT. adj.* [solvagans, Latin.]
Wandering about alone.

A description of the impure drudge;—that is to say, a solvagant or solitary vagrant.

Granger on Eccl. (1621), p. 99.

SOLLAR.† n. s. [solarium, low Latin;
sollier, old French.] An upper room;
a loft; a garret. Formerly also an open gallery, at the top of the house. See Tyrwhitt, Gloss. Chauc. in V. SOLER-HALL. It is a Cornish term for a ground-room, an entry, a gallery, a stage of boards in a mine. See Pryce's Corn.
Grammar.

Some skillfully drieth their hops on a kcl,
And some on a sollar, oft turning them well. Tusser.

Stone steps that led to the solar or chamber.
A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. an. 1298.

SOLMISATION. n. s.* [from the musical terms sol, mi.] A kind of solfaiing. See TO SOL-FA.

Shakespeare shows by the context, that he was well acquainted with the property of these syllables [fa, sol, la, mi, in] in solmisation, which imply a series of sounds so unnatural, that ancient musicians prohibited their use.

Dr. Burney, Note on Shakespeare's K. Lear.

SOLO.† n. s. [Italian.] A tune played by a single instrument; an air sung by a single voice.

There is not a labourer or handicraftman that in the cool of the evening, does not relieve himself with solos and sonatas! Tatler, No. 222.

It were to be wished, that in our established church extempore playing were as much discountenanced as extempore praying; and that the organist was as closely obliged, in this solo and separate part of his office, to keep to set forms, as the officiating minister. Mason on Church Mus. p. 68.

SO'LOMON'S Loaf. n. s. A plant.

SO'LOMON'S Seal. n. s. [polygonatum, Lat.]
A plant.

SOLSTICE. n. s. [solstice, Fr. solstitium,
Latin.]

1. The point beyond which the sun does not go; the tropical point; the point at which the day is longest in summer, or shortest in winter.

2. It is taken of itself commonly for the summer solstice.

The sun, ascending unto the northern signs, begetteth first a temperate heat in the air, which by his approach unto the solstice he intendeth, and by continuation increaseth the same even upon declination. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Let the plowmen's prayer

Be for moist solstices, and winters fair. May, Virg.

SOLSTICIAL. adj. [solstitial, French, from solstice.]

1. Belonging to the solstice.

Observing the dog-days ten days before and after the equinoctial and solstitial points, by this observation alone, are exempted a hundred days.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Happening at the solstice, or at Midsummer.

From the north to call

Decrepit Winter; from the south to bring Solstitial Summer's heat. Milton, P. L.

The fields labour'd with thirst; Aquarius had not shed

His wonted showers, and Sirius parch'd with heat Solstitial the green herbs. Philips.

SOLVABLE. adj.* [solvable, Fr. Cotgrave.] Possible to be cleared by inquiry or reason; capable of being paid. The latter is the French meaning. Solvable seems a more correct spelling than solvable; so, resolvable.

For solvable and colourable we might say solvent and apparent. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 493.

SOLUBLE. adj. [solubilis, Lat.]

1. Capable of dissolution or separation of parts.

Sugar is a sal oleosum, being soluble in water and fusible in fire. Arbuthnot.

2. Producing laxity; relaxing.

SOLUBILITY. n. s. [from soluble.] Susceptiveness of separation of parts.

This cannot account for the indissoluble coherence of some bodies, and the fragility and solubility of others. Glanville.

To SOLVE. v. a. [solvo, Lat.] To clear; to explain; to untie an intellectual knot.

He would solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses. Milton, P. L.

The limiting of the regale only to christian princes, did rather involve and perplex the cause, than any way solve it. Lestie.

Do thou, my soul, the destin'd period wait,
When God shall solvo the dark decrees of fate;
His now unequal dispensations clear,
And make all wise and beautiful appear. Tickell.

It is mere trifling to raise objections, merely for the sake of answering and solving them. Watts.

SOLVENCY.† n. s. [from solvent.] Ability to pay.

They see the debtor prescribing at the point of the bayonet the medium of his solvency to the creditor. Burke.

SOLVENT.† adj. [solvens, Lat.]

1. Having the power to cause dissolution.
When dissolved in water, it is not by the eye distinguishable from the solvent body, and appears as fluid. Boyle.

2. Able to pay debts contracted.
The man died in the King's Bench, and was not solvent. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, (1693), p. 207.

SO'LVER.* n. s. [from solve.] Whoever or whatever explains or clears.

SO'LUBLE. adj. [from solvo.] Possible to be cleared by reason or inquiry.

Intellective memory I call an act of the intellective faculty, because it is wrought by it, though I do not inquire how or where, because it is not solvable.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

SOLUND-GOOSE.† n. s. A fowl. I know not whether solund or soland. Dr. Johnson.—Soland-goose is the usual name: sule or sula is believed to be the true one. See Pennant and Dr. Jamieson.

A solund-goose is in bigness and feather very like a tame goose, but his bill longer, and somewhat pointed; his wings also much longer, being two yards over.

Greuv.

A Scot, when from the gallow-tree let loose, Drops into Styx, and turns a soland-goose.

Cleveland.

SOLUTION.† n. s. [solution, Fr. solutio, Lat.]

1. Disruption; breach; disjunction; separation.

In all bodies there is an appetite of union, and evitiation of solution of continuity.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Matter dissolved; that which contains any thing dissolved.

Aræteus, to procure sleep, recommends a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead.

Arbutnot on Coins.

When salt of tartar per deliquium, poured into the solution of any metal, precipitates the metal, and makes it fall down to the bottom of the liquor in the form of mud, does not this argue that the acid particles are attracted more strongly by the salt of tartar than by the metal, and by the stronger attraction go from the metal to the salt of tartar?

Newton, Opt.

3. Resolution of a doubt; removal of an intellectual difficulty.

Something yet of doubt remains, Which only thy solution can resolve. Milton, P. L.
They give the reins to wandering thoughts,
Till, by their own perplexities involv'd,
They travel more, still less resolv'd,
But never find self-satisfying solution.

Milton, S. A.

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear;
The man diffides in his own augury,
And doubts.

Dryden.

This will instruct you to give a plainer solution of any difficulties that may attend the theme, and refute objections.

Watts.

4. Release; deliverance; discharge.

A deliverance out of any state or power is called solution.

Barrow on the Power of the Keys.

SOLUTIVE.† adj. [solutiv, Fr. Cotgrave; from solvo, Lat.] Laxative; causing relaxation.

Though it would not be so abstersive, opening, and solutive as mead, yet it will be more lenient in sharp diseases.

Bacon.

With bloodshed eyes and sombre mien.

Grangers, Ode to Solitude.

A sombrous rankness of expression.

Warburton, Doct. of Grace, i. 74.

A certain uniform strain of sombrous gravity.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 171.

SOME.† A termination of many adjectives, which denote quality or property of any thing. It is generally joined with a substantive: as gamesome. [saam, Dutch.] "Sum is also, among the Saxons, used as a termination, signifying something less than the termination pul; and denotes a subject that has somewhat of a peculiar quality in it, but not in the full extent of that quality; as from the word lang, long, is formed langsum, langsomes, or longsome; which does not signify very long, but what has something of length in it, and is not short, but a medium between short and long, for which we have no modern English word. From thence come our English words, delightsome, wholesome, toilsome, fulsome, lonesome, and such like. This word sum comes from the Gothick sums and suma, which signify some, or one." Difference between an Absolute and Limited Monarchy, by Sir J. Fortescue, published with Notes by J. Fortescue-Aland, Esq. 8vo. 1714, p. 20.

Gen. xxxiii.

First go with me some few of you, and see the place, and how it may be made convenient for you; and then send for your sick.

Bacon.

3. Certain persons. Some is often used absolutely for some people; part.

Some to the shores do fly,

But running from, all to destruction hye.

Daniel.

Not in the neighbouring moon, as some have dream'd.

Milton, P. L.

Your edicts some reclaim from sins,
But most your life and blest example wins.

Dryden.

4. Some is opposed to some, or to others.

It may be that the queen's treasure, in so great occasions of disbursements, is not always so ready; but being paid as it is, now some, and then some, it is no great impoverishment to her coffers.

Spenser on Ireland.

5. It is added to a number, to show that the number is uncertain and conjectural.

The vesicular cells may be for receiving the arterial and nervous juices, that by their action upon one another they may be swelled somehow, so as to shorten the length of every fibril.

Cheyne.

SOMERSAULT.† n. s. [someterset is the SOMERSET. corruption: sommer, a beam, and sault, Fr. a leap. Dr. Johnson.—Sommer, or sommier, is indeed a piece of timber; but appears to have no connection with the word before us, which Sherwood translates into the Fr. sobresault, and which Pasquier pronounces a corruption of souple-sault or saut. See Menage in V. SOURBRESAUT. But, as Mr. Tooke has observed, the word is the Ital. soprasalto, (sopra and salto), "voltando la persona sotto sopra senza toccar terra colle mani, o con altro." Della Crusca. See also SUMMERSAULT.] A leap by which a jumper throws himself from a height, and turns over his head.

He could doe

The vaulter's somersaults. Donne, Poems, p. 810.

As when some boy, trying the somersault,
Stands on his head and feet, as he did lie
To kick against earth's spangled canopy.

Brownie, Brit. Past. B. 1. S. 3.

I will only make him break his neck in doing a somersault.

Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

SOMETHING. n. s. [jumbding, Saxon.]

1. A thing existing, though it appears not what; a thing or matter indeterminate.

When fierce Bavar

Did from afar the British chief behold,
Betwixt despair and rage, and hope and pain,
Something within his warring bosom roll'd. Prior.

The force of the air upon the pulmonary artery is but small, in respect of that of the heart; but it is still something. Arbutnot on Aliments.

You'll say the whole world has something to do, something to talk of, something to wish for, and something to be employed about; but pray put all these somethings together, and what is the sum total but just nothing? Pope, Lett.

Here she beholds the chaos dark and deep,
Where nameless somethings in their causes sleep. Pope.

2. More or less; not nothing.

Something yet of doubt remains. Milton.

Years following years steal something every day,
At last they steal us from ourselves away. Pope.

Still from his little he could something spare,
To feed the hungry, and to clothe the bare. Harte.

3. A thing wanting a fixed denomination.

Something between a cottage and a cell—
Yet virtue here could sleep, and peace could dwell. Harte.

4. Part.

Something of it arises from our infant state. Watts.

thing discouraged by a new pain falling some days after upon his elbow, on the other side. Temple.

- SOMETIME. adv. [some and time.]

1. Once; formerly.

What art thou that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form,
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometime march? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France. Shakespeare.

2. At one time or other hereafter.

- SOMETIMES. adv. [some and times.]

1. Not never; now and then; at one time or other.

It is good that we sometimes be contradicted,
and that we always bear it well; for perfect peace cannot be had in this world. Bp. Taylor.

2. At one time: opposed to sometimes, or to another time.

Sometimes the one, and sometimes the other, may be glanced upon in these scripture descriptions. Burnet.

He writes not always of a piece, but sometimes mixes trivial things with those of greater moment:
sometimes also, though not often, he runs riot, and knows not when he has said enough. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

- SOMEWHAT. n. s. [some and what.]

1. Something; not nothing, though it be uncertain what.

Upon the sea somewhat methought did rise,
Like blueish mists. Dryden, Ind. Epp.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, on purpose to avoid the sight of somewhat that displeases him, would, for the same reason, shut them against the sun. Atterbury.

2. More or less.

Concerning every of these, somewhat Christ hath commanded, which must be kept till the world's end; on the contrary side, in every of them some-is too inquisitive through the whole; yet these imperfections hinder not our compassion. Dryden.

- So MEWHERE. adv. [some and where.] In one place or other; not nowhere.

Hopeless and forlorn

They are return'd, and somewhere live obscurely. Denham.

Compressing two prisms hard together, that their sides, which by chance were a very little convex, might somewhere touch one another, I found the place in which they touched to become absolutely transparent, as if they had there been one continued piece of glass. Newton, Opt.

Does something still, and somewhere yet remain,
Reward or punishment? Prior.

Of the dead we must speak gently; and therefore, as Mr. Dryden says somewhere, peace be to its manes. Pope.

- So MEWHILE.† n. s. [some and while; Sax.
jom-hpyle.] Once; for a time. Out of the Teut. sanse, increase, prosperity.]

Lucky; fortunate; thriving: A northern word. See Grose, and Brockett.

- SONG.† n. s. [song, je-junzen, Saxon.]

1. Any thing modulated in the utterance.

Noise other than the sound of dance and song. Milton, P. L.

He first thinks fit no sonnetter advance
His censure farther than the song or dance. Dryden.

2. A poem to be modulated by the voice;
a ballad.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about his tomb they go! Shakespeare.

In her days every man shall sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

3. A poem; lay; strain.

The bard that first adorn'd our native tongue,
Tun'd to his British lyre this ancient song. Dryden.

There we a while will rest;
Our next ensuing song to wond'rous things ad-dress'd. Drayton.

4. Poetry; poesy.

This subject for heroic song pleas'd me. Milton, P. L.

Names memorable long,
If there be force in virtue, or in song. Pope.

5. Notes of birds.

The lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning grey. Dryden.

6. An old Song. A trifle.

I do not intend to be thus put off with an old song. More.

A hopeful youth, newly advanced to great honour, was forced by a cobbler to resign all for an old song. Addison.

SONGISH. adj. [from song.] Containing songs; consisting of songs. A low word.

The songish part must abound in the softness and variety of numbers, its intention being to please the hearing. Dryden.

SONGOW, or SONGAL. n. s. Gleaned corn. Cheshire. And to songow, Mr. Wilbraham adds in his Cheshire Glossary, is to glean, or go gleaning; generally supposed to be so named from picking up the single straws. Hence singlin, a northern word, is judged to be the same as songow by Mr. Brockett. The etymology is found by Mr. Wilbraham in the Teut. sangh, or sanghe, fasciculus spicarum, which Kilian illustrates by the Germ. and Sax. sicamb, sang, gsang, and Angl. songe.

SONGSTER. n. s. [from song.] A singer. Used of human singers, it is a word of slight contempt.

The pretty songsters of the spring, with their various notes, did seem to welcome him as he passed. Howell.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own. L'Estrange.

Either songster holding out their throats, And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes. Dryden.

SONGSTRESS.† n. s. [from song.] A female singer.

Through the soft silence of the listening night, The sober-suited songstress trills her lay. Thomson, Summer.

Here the poet availed himself of an opportunity of paying a just compliment to the voice and skill of a real songstress.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

SONNET.† n. s. [sonnet, Fr. sonnetto, Italian.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language, and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton, of whose sonnets this is a specimen. Dr. Johnson. — The sonnet owes its origin to the poets of Italy. Many beautiful sonnets, since the time of Milton, have enriched our national poetry. It was not generous in Dr. Johnson to cite the following sonnet of Milton as a specimen, which is evidently of a ludicrous cast. Out of eighteen English sonnets written by Milton, the Rev. Mr. White of Lichfield has well observed, four indeed are bad: the rest, though they are not free from certain harshness, have a pathos and greatness in their simplicity, sufficient to endear the legitimate sonnet to every reader of taste: they possess a characteristic grace, which can never belong to three elegiac stanzas closing with a couplet.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon, And woven close, both matter, form, and stile; The subject new: it walk'd the town a-while, Numbering good intellects, now seldom por'd on:

Cries the stall-reader, Bless us, what a word on A title-page is this! and some in file Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile.

End-green. Why is it harder, sirs, than Gordon,

Colkitto, or Macdonnell, or Galasp?

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek,

That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp: Thy age, like ours, O soul of sir John Cheek, Hated not learning worse than toad or asp, When thou taught'st Cambridge and King Edward Greek. Milton.

2. A small poem.

Let us into the city presently, To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in musick; I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. Shaks.

TO SONNET.* v. n. [from the noun.] To compose sonnets. Not in use.

Nor lady's wanton love, nor wandering knight, Legend I out in rhimes all rightly dight; — Nor list I sonnet of my mistress' face,

To paint some blowesse with a borrowed grace.

Bp. Hall, Sat. l. 1.

Once did I sonnet to my saint, My soul in numbers move;

Once did I tell a thousand lies;

And then I was in love.

Jones, Muses' Garden of Delights, (1610.)

He ascribes all virtue to his wife in strains that come almost to sonnetting.

Milton, Iconoclast. ch. 7.

SONNETTEER.† n. s. [sonnetier, Fr. from

SONNETER. sonnet.] A small poet,

SONNETIST. in contempt. Dr. John-

SONNETWRITER. son. — Of these terms for a writer of sonnets Dr. Johnson has given only the first. Shakspeare's true word is sonnetter.

Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme; for

I am sure I shall turn sonnetter.

Shakspeare, Love's Labour's Lost.

The prophet of the heavenly lyre,

Great Solomon, sings in the heavenly quire,

And is become a new-found sonnetist!

Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 8.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetteers in this art.

Spectator.

What woful stuff this madrigal would be, In some starv'd hackney sonnetteer or me!

But let a lord once own the happy lines,

How the wit brightens! how the style refines!

Pope.

A suite of tales was published by George Whetstone, a sonnet-writer of some rank, and one of the most passionate among us, to bewail the perplexities of love! Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 483.

SONIFEROUS. adj. [sonus and fero, Lat.]

Giving or bringing sound.

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the ethereal part thereof, or soniferous parties of bodies.

Derham.

SONORIFICK. adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.]

Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form, and sonorifick quality, this would be unsatisfactory.

Watts, Logick.

SONOROUS. adj. [sonoreux, Fr. sonorus,

Lat.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous.

All the while

Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds; At which the universal host up-sent

A shout that tore hell's concave. Milton, P. L.

2. High sounding; magnificent of sound.

The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression.

Addison on Italy.

The vowels are sonorous.

Dryden.

SONOROUSLY. adv. [from sonorous.] With high sound; with magnificence of sound.

SONOROUSNESS. n. s. [from sonorous.]

1. The quality of giving sound.

Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best seasoning for sonorousness, he replied,

That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. Boyle.

2. Magnificence of sound.

SONSHIP. n. s. [from son.] Filiation;

the character of a son.

The apostle to the Hebrews makes afflictions not only incident but necessary to Christianity, the badge and cognizance of sonship.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

SONSY.* See SONCY.

SOON.† adv. [suns, Gothic; rona, Saxon;

saen, Dutch.]

1. Before long time to be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,

Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milton, P. L.

You must obey me, soon or late;

Why should you vainly struggle with your fate? Dryden.

2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,

And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.

Heb. xiii.

How is it that you are come so soon to-day?

Ex. ii. 18.

The earlier stayeth for the later, and not that the later cometh sooner. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Readily; willingly.

I would as soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is tossed up in so many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addison, Guardian.

4. It has the signification of an adjective;

speedy, quick.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

Make your soonest haste. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

5. SOON as. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came night unto the camp, he saw the calf and the dance. Ex. xxxii. 19.

Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born,

With the too early thoughts of being king. Dryden.

Feasts, and business, and pleasures, and enjoyments, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else; but as soon as we add death to them,

they all sink into an equal littleness. Law.

SOONLY. adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly

is proper.

A mason meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. More.

SOO'PBERRY. n. s. [sapindus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

SOOT. n. s. [rot, root, Saxon; soot, Icelandic; soet, Dutch.] Condensed or embodied smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. Bacon.

If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Howell.

Of't they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest dishrelsh, with'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton, P. L.
Our household gods, that droop upon our hearths,
Each from his venerable face shall brush
The Macedonian soot, and shine again. Dryden, Cleom.

SOOTE, or SOTE.* adj. Sweet. Obsolete. See SWET.

SOO'TED. adj. [from soot.] Smeared, maturated, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before. Mortimer.

SOO'TERKIN. n. s. A kind of false birch fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his teeming head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought-to-bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth, a sooterkin. Swift.

SOOTH.† n. s. [roß, Sax.]

1. Truth; reality. Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the eldest sister first be wed. Shakespeare.
He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter;
I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Camden, Rem.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you;
For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distress'd. Rowe.

2. Prognostication.

Tried time yet taught me greater things;
The sodain rising of the raging seas,
The sooth of byrdes by beating of their wings. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

3. Sweetness; kindness. This seems to be the meaning here.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

SOOTH.† adj. [roß, Saxon.] True; faithful; that may be relied on.

If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Some other means I have which may be us'd,
Which once of Melibeus old I learnt,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains. Milton, Comus.

To SOOTHE.† v. a. [ze-roothen, Saxon.] This word is better written with the final e, to distinguish it from sooth.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shaks.
VOL. III.

Can I soothe tyranny!

Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryden.

By his fair daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who sooths to hear delight his anxious mind;
Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope, Odyssey.

Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothing? Rowe.

I've try'd the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd him and caress'd him, been angry, sooth'd again;
Laid safety, life, and interest in his sight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato. Addison, Cato.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beldame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats. Dryden.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future pleas, And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SOO'THER.† n. s. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongues of soothers. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Pandocheus, an inn-keeper, a receiver of all,
and a soother of every man for his gain. Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Posit. B. 4. ch. 1.

SOO'THINGLY.* adv. [from To soothe.] With blandishments; with flattery.

Herewithal Anselmo rested the most soothingly and contentedly deceived that could be found in the world. Shelton, Transl. of D. Quir. P. 4. ch. 7.

SOO'THLY.* adv. [roßliche, Sax. Spenser uses the Saxon form, soothlich, F. Q. iii. ii. 14.] In truth; really.

He was fain to use his wits, and soothly to tell me, I have seen your face. Hales, Rem. p. 48.

To SOO'THSAY. v. n. [sooth and say.] To predict; to foretell.

A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying. Acts, xvi.

SOO'THSAY.* } n. s. [roß-faza, Saxon.
SOO'THSAYING. } Spenser sometimes writes
it soothsay; which see.]

1. True saying; veracity: the Saxon meaning.

Thou must discover all thy working,
How thou servest, and of what thing,
Though that thou shouldst for thy sooth-saw Ben all to betin. Chaucer, Rom. R. 6125.

2. Prediction.

Well seen in every science that mote be,
And every secret worke of nature's wayes,
In wittie riddles, and in wise soothsayes. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 35.

Divinations, and soothsayings, and dreams are vain. Ecclus. xxxiv. 5.

SOO'THSAYER. n. s. [from soothsay.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Scarce was Musidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.
A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakespeare.

He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom. Bacon, Hen. VII.

SOO'THNESS. n. s. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.

SOO'TY.† adj. [from soot; Sax. roßiz.]

1. Breeding soot.

By fire of sooty coal the alchymist turns Metals to gold. Milton, P. L.

2. Consisting of soot; fuliginous.

There may be some chymical way so to defecate
this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter. Wilkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All hell run out, and sooty flags display.
P. Fletcher, Locusts, (1627,) p. 58.

All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron;
Harpies and hydras and all monstrous forms. Milton, Comus.

I looked upon that sooty drug, which he held up in his cruet. Tatler, No. 131.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.
To SOO'TY. v. a. [from soot.] To make black with soot.

Then (for his own weeds) shirt and coat all rent,
Tann'd and all sootied with noisome smoke,
She put him on; and over all a cloke. Chapman.

SOP.† n. s. [rop, Sax. soppe, Teut. suppe, Germ. from rypan, soppen, supen, macerate,
humectare, intingere panem in jus.
See Wachter, and Kilian.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor; commonly to be eaten.

The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakespeare.
Draw, you rogue; for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you. Shakespeare.

Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.

The prudent sibyl had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard,
Which mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before
His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar. Dryden.

Ill nature is not cured with a sop; quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.

To Cerberus they give a sop,
His triple barking mouth to stop. Swift.

To SOP. v. a. To steep in liquor.

SOP-in-wine.* n. s. A kind of pink.

Bring coronations, and sops-in-wine,
Worne of paramours. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
Sops-in-wine, a flower in colour much like to a carnation, but differing in smell and quantity. E. K. Notes on the Shep. Cal.

SOPE. n. s. [See SOAP.]

SOPH. n. s. [from sophista, Lat.] A young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sops, and three pert Templars came,
The same their talents, and their tastes the same;
Each prompt to query, answer, and debate,
And smit with love of poesy and prate. Pope, Dunciad.

So'PHI. n. s. [Persian.] The emperor of Persia.

By this scimitar
That slew the sophi and a Persian prince. Shaks.

A fig for the sultan and sophi. Congreve.

So'PHICAL.* adj. [from σοφία, Gr. wisdom.]

Teaching wisdom.
All those books which are called sophical, such as the Wisdom of Sirach, &c. tend to teach the Jews the true spiritual meaning of God's economy.
Dr. Harris on the 53d Ch. of Isaiah, (1739,) p. 256.

So'PHISM.† n. s. [sophisme, Fr. sophisma, Lat.] A fallacious argument; an unsound subtlety; a fallacy.

These sophisms and elenchs of merchandize I skill not. Milton, Areopagitica.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.

I, who as yet was never known to show, False pity to premeditated woe, Will graciously explain great nature's laws, And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause. Harte.

SOPHIST.† n. s. [sophiste, Fr. sophista, Latin.] A professor of philosophy.

The court of Crassus is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece in the happy beginning of his reign. Temple.

SOPHISTER. n. s. [sophiste, Fr. sophista, Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk, nor live, as if there was no such thing. Denham.

Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of Christians. Rogers.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist. This sense is antiquated.

Alecidemus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech. Hooker.

TO SOPHISTER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To maintain by a fallacious argument. Obsolete.

It is well sophistred of you both: preposterous are your judgements evermore: yee judge evil good, and good evil.

Ld. Cobham (in 1413), Fox's Acts, &c.
SOPHISTICAL.† adj. [sophistique, Fr. from SOPHISTICK.] sophist. Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

The subtle persuasions and sophistical cavillations of the papistes.

Abp. Cranmer, Def. of Doct. of the Sacr. (1550), fol. 112.
Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical cozenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublimary world. Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils. Stillington.

That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot. More.

Fraud is the ready minister of injustice: — the currency of false pretence and sophistick reasoning was expedient to their designs.

Burke, Letter to a Member of the Nat. Assembly.
SOPHISTICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.]

With fallacious subtilty. Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.

TO SOPHISTICATE. v. a. [sophistiquer, Fr. from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophisticate the understanding, they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth, where scarce any probable shew appeareth. Hooker.

Here's three of us are sophisticated. Shakspeare.
Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Boyle.

The only persons amongst the heathens who sophisticated nature and philosophy in this particular, were the Stoicks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicited acts of man's will. South, Sermon.

'Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare; They purchase but sophisticated ware: 'Tis prodigality that buys deceit,

Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryden.

The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colourless, lest it should tinge and sophisticate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Bentley.

SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.]

Adulterate; not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter far than she 'Tis pure and right, without deceit, And such no woman e'er will be; No, they are all sophisticated. Cowley, Song.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophisticated and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Glanville.

So truth, when only one supply'd the state, Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticated. Dryden.

SOPHISTICATION. n. s. [sophistication, Fr. from sophisticate.] Adulteration; not genuineness.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain. Quincy.

Besides easy submissions to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasons. Glanville.

The drugs and simples sold in shops, generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial. Boyle.

SOPHISTICATOR.† n. s. [from sophisticate.]

Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.

I cordially commend, that the sophisticators of wine may suffer punishment above any ordinary thief. Whitaker, Blood of the Grape, (1654), p. 107.
Great depravers and sophisticators of antiquity. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 306.

SOPHISTRY. n. s. [from sophist.]

1. Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Sidney.

These men have obscured and confounded the natures of things, by their false principles and wretched sophistry; though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt. South.

2. Logical exercise.

The more youthful exercises of sophistry, themes, and declamations. Felton.

TO SOPORATE. v. n. [soporo, Lat.] To lay asleep. Dict.

SOPORIFEROUS.† adj. [soporifere, Fr. Cotgrave; soporifer, Lat. from sopor and fero.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep; narcotic; opiate; dormitive; somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures dead sleeps. Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Swift.

SOPORIFEROUSNESS. n. s. [from soporiferous.] The quality of causing sleep.

SOPORIFICK. adj. [sopor and facio.] Causing sleep; opiate; narcotick.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities. Locke.

SOPOROUS.* adj. [soporus, Lat.] Sleepy; causing sleep.

In small syncope it may perhaps rouse the spirits a little, but in soporuous diseases it is commonly an uncertain and ineffectual remedy. Greenhill, Art. of Embalm. p. 98.

SOPPER. n. s. [from sop.] One that steeps any thing in liquor.

SORB.† n. s. [sorbum, Lat.]

1. The service-tree.

The timber of the sorb is useful to the joiner. Evelyn.

2. The berry of the tree.

SORBILE. adj. [from sorbeo, Lat.] That may be drunk or sipped.

SORBITION.* n. s. [sorbitio, Fr. Cotgrave; sorbitio, Lat.] The act of drinking or sipping. Cockeram.

SORBO NICAL.* adj. Of or belonging to a Sorbonist. See SORBONIST.

Great-bellied braggars, or sorbornycall masters in Parys, which, commynge with rede faces from the cherefull banquet of Bacchus, called prandium theologicum, condemned Martyne Luther in 1523. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543), fol. 36.

The sorbornical or theological wine, and their feasts or gaudy days, are now come to be proverbially jested at. Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, p. 626.

SORBONIST.* n. s. A doctor of the theological house of Sorbon, or Sorbonne, in the university of Paris; the Sorbonne was also a term used in general for the whole faculty of theology there.

In school-divinity as able As he that might irrefragable: — Profound in all the nominal And real ways beyond them all; For he a rope of sand could twist As tough as learned Sorbonist. Hudibras, i. 1.

SORCERER.† n. s. [sorcier, French; sortarius, low Latin; from sortes, Lat. lots; implying a diviner by lots.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.

They say this town is full of cozenage, As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye, Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind, Soul-killing witches that deform the body, And many such like libertines of sin. Shaks.

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt such. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He saw a sable sorcerer arise, All sudden gorgons hiss, and dragons glare, And ten-horn'd fiends. Pope.

The Egyptian sorcerers contended with Moses; but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God. Watts, Logick.

SORCERESS. n. s. [Female of sorcerer.] A female magician; an enchantress.

Bring forth that sorceress condemn'd to burn. Shakspeare.

Divers witches and sorceresses have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours. Bacon.

The snaky sorceress that sat Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key. Milton, P. L.

How cunningly the sorceress displays Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine! Milton, S. A.

SORCEROUS.† adj. Containing enchantments. A word not used, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Chapman: but it seems to have been formerly common, both before and after Chapman.

The sercerous proceedings of Silvester.

Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. P. ii. (1550.) B. 6.
Th' art ent'ring Circe's house,
Where by her med'cines, black and sercerous,
Thy soldiers all are shut in well arm'd sties,
And turn'd to swine. Chapman.

The wine being consecrated, it is carried home,
that therewith they may sprinkle their houses, to preserve them from witchcraft and sercerous incantations.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, (1675,) p. 127.

So'CRERY. n. s. Magick; enchantment;
conjunction; witchcraft; charms.

This witch Scorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and serceries terrible,
Was banish'd. Shakspeare.

Adders' wisdom I have learn'd
To fence my ears against thy sercies.

Actæon has long tracts of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of sercery. Tatler.

SORD. n. s. [Corrupted from sward.]
Turf; grassy ground.

This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever Ran on the green sord. Shaks. Wint. Tale.
An altar — of grassy sord. Milton, P. L.

SORDES. † n. s. [Lat.] Foulness; dregs.
Dr. Johnson has considered the word only in its Latin form, in his example from Woodward. But it had been anglicised before his time.

They swear they have found out and can sell you the true elixir, the philosopher's stone, which will turn baser metals into gold; while yet, poor men, their rags, sords, and beggary, sufficiently confute their rare skill.

Bp. Gauden, Hierasp. (1653,) p. 219.
The sea washes off the soil and sordes wherein mineral mosses were involved and concealed,
and thereby renders them more conspicuous.

SORDET. † n. s. [sourdine, Fr. sordina, SORDINE. † Italian.] A small pipe put into the mouth of a trumpet to make it sound lower or shriller. Bailey.

SOR'DID. † adj. [sordide, French, in all its senses; sordidus, Latin.]

1. Foul; gross; filthy; dirty.

Never man more affected bravery and pride, than they did beggary and nastiness: — let these and their ill-advised followers pass for cynicks in Christianity; — whatever the original rule of their sordid founder was. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 262.

There Charon stands
A sordid god; down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean.

2. Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

Thou canst not those exceptions make,
Which vulgar sordid mortals take. Cowley.

It is strange, since the priest's office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion, to make it low and sordid.

South, Serm.

3. Covetous; niggardly.

He may be old,
And yet not sordid, who refuses gold. Denham.

If one should cease to be generous and charitable, because another is sordid and ungrateful, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues. L'Estrange.

SOR'DIDLY. adv. [from sordid.] Meanly;
poorly; covetously.

SOR'DIDNESS. n. s. [from sordid.]

1. Meanness; baseness.

I omit the madnesses of Caligula's delights,
and the execrable sordidness of those of Tiberius.

Cowley.

2. Nastiness; not neatness.

Providence deters people from sluttishness and sordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness. Ray.

SORDS.  n. s.* See SORDES.

SORE. n. s. [rap, Saxon; saur, Danish.]

A place tender and painful; a place excoriated; an ulcer. It is not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued or from internal cause: to be a sore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a sore before some disruption happens.

Let us hence provide
A salve for any sore that may betide.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Receipts abound; but searching all thy store,
The best is still at hand, to launce the sore,
And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed and gathers ground.

Dryden.
By these all fest'ring sores her councils heal,
Which time or has disclos'd, or shall reveal.

Dryden.
Lice and flies, which have a most wonderful instinct to find out convenient places for the hatching and nourishment of their young, lay their eggs upon sores. Bentley.

SORE. † adj. [rap, Sax. gravis, molestus;
sar, Goth. tener. Serenius.]

1. Tender to the touch. It has sometimes of before the causal noun.]

We can ne'er be sure,
Whether we pain or not endure;
And just so far are sore and griev'd,
As by the fancy is believ'd. Hudibras.

While sore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why should we tempt the doubtful die again?

Dryden.
It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes, If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

2. Tender in the mind; easily vexed.

Malice and hatred are very fretting and vexa-tious, and apt to make our minds sore and uneasy;
but he that can moderate these affections will find ease in his mind. Tillotson.

Laugh at your friends; and, if your friends are sore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more.

3. Violent with pain; afflictively vehement. See SORE, adverb.

Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful, and things strange; but this sore
night

Hath trifled former knowings. Shakspeare.

I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.
My loins are filled with a sore disease; and there is no whole part in my body. Common Prayer.

Sore hath been their fight,
As likeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd.
Milton, P. L.

Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quiet ever have;
After this day's travel sore,
Sweet rest seize thee evermore.

Milton, Ep. M. of Winch.
They are determin'd to live up to the holy rule, though sore evils and great temporal inconveniences should attend the discharge of their duty.

Atterbury.

4. Criminal. Out of use.

To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
SORE. † adv. [This the etymologists derive from seer, Teut. but seer means only an intenseness of any thing; sore almost always includes pain. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson has not rightly stated the use of this adverb. The German ser or sehr, as well as the Teut. seer, means in a great degree, intensely; a meaning which Serenius considers of the highest antiquity; and which is certainly the old English meaning.]

1. Intensely; in a great degree. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

This worthy Jason sore alongeth
To see the strange regions.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.
Good men delight sore when they hear of virtuous men. Thorpe (in 1407), Exam. in Fox's Acts.
Thou sore longest after thy father's house, [in the Transl. of 1578, "thou greatly longestest."] Genesis, xxxi. 30.

2. With painful or dangerous vehemence;
a very painful degree; with afflictive violence or pertinacity. It is now little used.

The knight, then lightly leaping to the prey,
With mortal steel him smote again so sore,
That headless his unwieldy body lay.

Spenser, F. Q.
Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand
presseth me sore. Common Prayer.

He this and that, and each man's blow
Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to sore.
Daniel.

Though iron hew and mangle sore,
Would wounds and bruises honour more.

Hudibras.
Distrust shook sore their minds. Milton, P. L.
So that if Palamon were wounded sore,
Arcite was hurt as much. Dryden, K. Tale.

Sore sigh'd the knight, who this long sermon heard:
At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

Dryden.
How, Didius, shall a Roman sore repuls'd
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?

How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions?
A. Philips.

To SORE.  v. a.* [from the noun.] To wound; to make sore. The following is the reading of Spenser's first edition in 1590, and no doubt the true one.
Others read bor'd.

The wyde wound —
Was closed up, as it had not been sor'd.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 38.

SORE. † n. s. [sor-falcon, Fr. a soare-hawk,
Cotgrave; from saur, brown.]

1. A hawk of the first year.

Of the soar-falcon so I learn to flye.
Spenser, Hymns.

The distinction of eyess and raninge hawks, of sores and enterwevers.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 118.
2. A buck of the fourth year, [from saur,
Fr.]

A buck is the first year a fawn; the second year, a pricket; the third year, a sorrell; and the fourth year, a soare. Return from Parnassus, (1606.)

So'REHON. † n. s. [Irish and Scottish.] A SORN. † kind of arbitrary exaction or servile tenure, formerly in Scotland, as likewise in Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among his tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands gilwiffitts, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to sorin, or be a sorner. Macbean.

They exact upon them all kinds of services; yea, and the very wild exactions, coignie, livery, and sorehon; by which they poll and undo the poor tenants and freeholders under them.

Spenser on Ireland.

SOR'EL, or SOR'REL.* adj. [saur, Fr.] Reddish; inclining to a red colour: as, a sorrel horse.

To redder herrings, lay them on hurdles in a close room, and there smoke them with the dried leaves of elm or oak, or with tanner's bark, until they have gotten their sorrel hue.

Cotgrave, in V. Saurir.

SOR'EL, or SOR'REL.† n. s. [dimin. of sore; from saur, Fr.] A buck of the third year. See SORE.

I am but a mere sorrel; my head's not hardened yet! A Christian turned Turk, (1612.)

SOR'ELY. adv. [from sore.] 1. With a great degree of pain or distress.

Here's the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!—What a sigh is there! the heart is sorely overcharged. Shakespeare.

Of the warrior train,
Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain. Dryden.

2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive.

I have done ill,
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will enjoy no more. Shakespeare.

SOR'ENESS.† n. s. [from sore; Sax. [sarp-nýrre.] Tenderness of a hurt.

He that, whilst the soreness of his late pangs of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work. Decay of Chr. Piety.

My foot began to swell, and the pain asswaged, though it left such a soreness, that I could hardly suffer the clothes of my bed. Temple.

SOR'ITES. n. s. [σωριτης.] Properly an heap. An argument where one proposition is accumulated on another.

Chrysippus the Stoick invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called sortes, or a heap. Dryden.

Sortes is when several middle terms are chosen to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its predicate with the first subject. Thus, all men of revenge have their souls often uneasy; uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be one's own plague is folly in the extreme. Watts, Logic.

SOR'ICIDE. n. s. [soror and cædo.] The murder of a sister.

SOR'RAGE. n. s. The blades of green wheat or barley. Dict.

SOR'RANCE. n. s. [In farriery.] Any disease or sore in horses. Dict.

SOR'REL. n. s. [rupe, Saxon; sorel, French; oxalis, Lat.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taste. Miller.

Of all roots of herbs the root of sorrel goeth the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of sorrel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious alkali.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

SOR'REL.* adj. See SOREL.

SOR'RELly.† adv. [from sorry.] Meanly; poorly; despicably; wretchedly; pitifully.

Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help, though I sing sorrelly. Sidney.

How does this hero in buskins perform? So wretchedly and sorrelly, so exactly to the same tune and his wonted pitch, that he has not struck one right stroke. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 53.

SOR'RINESS. n. s. [from sorry.] Meanness; wretchedness; pitableness; despicableness.

To SOR'ROW. v. n. [saurgan, Gothick; ropjan, Sax.] To grieve; to be sad; to be dejected.

The miserable change, now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Wherever sorrow is, relief would be;
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,

By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. Shakespeare.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance. 2 Cor. vii. 9. I neither fear to die nor desire to live; and having mastered all grief in myself, I desire no man to sorrow for me. Hayward.

Send them forth, though sorrowing, yet in peace. Milton, P. L.

Sad the prince explores
The neighb'ring main, and sorrowing treads the shores. Pope.

SOR'ROW.† n. s. [ropz, Saxon, from ropjan; saurgan, M. Goth. sorga, Su. Goth. to grieve. Serenius.] Grief; pain for something past; sadness; mourning. Sorrow is not commonly understood as the effect of present evil, but of lost good.

Sorrow is uneasiness in the mind, upon the thought of a good lost, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the sense of a present evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, on all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakespeare.

A world of woe and sorrow. Milton, P. L.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;
But having you, can show no sorrow now. Dryden.

SOR'ROWED.† adj. [from sorrow.] Accompanied with sorrow. Out of use.

Now the publick body, which doth seldom
Play the recanter, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And sends forth us to make their sorrow tender. Shakespeare.

The much wronged and over sorrowed state of matrimony. Milton, Doct. and Discov. of Div. Pref.

SOR'ROWFUL.† adj. [sorrow and full; Sax. ropzfull.]

1. Sad for something past; mournful; grieving.

Blessed are they which have been sorrowful for all thy scourges; for they shall rejoice for thee, when they have seen all thy glory. Tob. xiii. 14.

2. Deeply serious. Not in use.

Hannah said, No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have poured out my soul before the Lord. 1 Sam.

3. Expressing grief; accompanied with grief.

The things that my soul refused to touch are as my sorrowful meat. Job, vi. 7.

SOR'ROWFULLY.* adv. [from sorrowful.] In a sorrowful manner. Barret.

The matter he hath sorrowfully lamented. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 471.

SOR'ROWFULNESS.* n. s. [from sorrowful; Sax. ropzfulnêrre.] State of being sorrowful.

SOR'ROWING.* n. s. [ropzung, Sax. lamentatio.] Expression of sorrow.

Marina, hearing sighs, to him drew near;
And did entreat his cause of grief to bear;

Her beauty was the sting;
That caused all this instant sorrowing. Browne, Brit. Past. B. 1. S. 1.

SOR'ROWLESS.* adj. [sorrow and less; Sax. ropzleap.] Without sorrow.

Huloet, in V. Griefless.

If their repentance be sorrowless, it will prove but a sorry one. Hewitt, Serm. (1658.) p. 23.

SOR'RY.† adj. [rapiz, rapu, rapu, Sax.]

1. Grieved for something past. It is generally used of slight or casual miscarriages or vexations, but sometimes of greater things. It does not imply any long continuance of grief.

O, forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee. Shakespeare, Timon.

The king was sorry: nevertheless for the oath's sake he commanded the Baptist's head to be given her. St. Matth. xiv. 9.

I'm sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure. Shakespeare.

We are sorry for the satire interspersed in some of these pieces, upon a few people, from whom the highest provocations have been received. Swift.

2. Melancholy; dismal.

They espyde
A sorrie sight as ever seen with eye;
A headlesse ladie lying him beside,
In her own blood all wallow'd woefully. Spenser, F. Q.

3. [From saur, filth, Icelandic. Dr. Johnson.—Hence our word was at first sowry, in this sense. "Sowry or defiled." Prompt. Parv. in V. Soure, or Filth.] Vile; worthless; vexatious.

How now, why do you keep alone?
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should, indeed, have died
With them they think on. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

If the union of the parts consist only in rest, it would seem that a bag of dust would be of as firm a consistence as that of marble; and Bajazet's cage had been but a sorry prison. Glanville.

Coarse complexions,
And checks of soury grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to teaze the housewife's wool. Milton, Comus.

How vain were all the ensigns of his power, that could not support him against one slighting look of a sorry slave! L'Estrange.

If this innocent had any relation to his Thebais, the poet might have found some sorry excuse for detaining the reader. Dryden.

If such a slight and sorry business as that could produce one organical body, one might reasonably expect, that now and then a dead lump of dough might be leavened into an animal. Bentley, Serm.

SORT. n. s. [sorte, French.]

1. A kind; a species.

A substantial and unaffected piety not only gives a man a credit among the sober and virtuous, but even among the vicious sort of men. Tillotson.

These three sorts of poems should differ in their numbers, designs, and every thought. Walsh.

Endeavouring to make the signification of specific names clear, they made their specific ideas of the sorts of substances of a few of those simple ideas found in them. Locke.

2. A manner; a form of being or acting.

Flowers, in such sort worn, can neither be smelt nor seen well by those that wear them. Hooker.

That I may laugh at her in equal sort
As she doth laugh at me, and makes may pain her sport. Spenser, Sonnet.

To Adam in what sort shall I appear?

Milton, P. L.

3. A degree of any quality.

I have written the more boldly unto you, in some sort, as putting you in mind. Rom. xv. 15.

I shall not be wholly without praise, if in some sort I have copied his style. Dryden.

4. A class, or order of persons.

The one being a thing that belongeth generally unto all; the other, such as none but the wiser and more judicious sort can perform. Hooker.

I have bought

Golden opinions from all sorts of people. Shakspeare.
The first sort by their own suggestion fell.

Milton, P. L.

Hospitality to the better sort, and charity to the poor, two virtues that are never exercised so well as when they accompany each other.

Atterbury, Sermon.

5. A company; a knot of people.

Mine eyes are full of tears: I cannot see;
And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
But they can see a sort of traitors here. Shakspeare.
A sort of lusty shepherds strive. Waller.

6. Rank; condition above the vulgar.

Is signior Montanto returned from the wars? —
I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort. Shakspeare.

7. [Sort, Fr. sortes, Lat.] A lot. Out of use.

Make a lotty,

And by decree let blockish Ajax
Draw the sort to fight with Hector. Shakspeare.

8. A pair; a set; a suit.

To SORT. v. a. [sortiri, Lat. assortire, Italian.]

1. To separate into distinct and proper classes.

I come to thee for charitable licence,
To sort our nobles from our common men. Shaks.
A piece of cloth made of white and black threads, though the whole appear neither white nor black, but grey; yet each remains what it was before, if the threads were pulled asunder, and sorted each colour by itself. Boyle.
Shell-fish have been, by some of the ancients, compared and sorted with the insects. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Davies.

With this desire, she hath a native might
To find out every truth, if she had time;
The innumerable effects to sort aright,
And by degrees from cause to cause to climb.

Davies.

The number of simple ideas, that make the nominal essence of the lowest species, or first sorting of individuals, depends on the mind of man. Locke.

The rays which differ in refrangibility may be parted and sorted from one another, and that either by refraction, or by reflexion. Newton, Opt.

But grant that actions best discover man,
Take the most strong, and sort them as you can:
The few that glare, each character must mark:
You balance not the many in the dark. Pope.

2. To reduce to order from a state of confusion.

These they sorted into their several times and places; some to begin the service of God with, and some to end; some to be interlarded between the divine readings of the law and prophets. Hooker.

Let me not be light;

For a light wife doth make a heavy husband;
And never be Bassanio so from me;
But God sort all! Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. To conjoin; to put together in distribution.

For, when she sorts things present with things past,

And thereby things to come doth oft foresee;
When she doth doubt at first, and chuse at last,
These acts her own, without her body be. Davies.

The swain perceiving by her words ill sorted,
That she was wholly from herself transported. Brown.

4. To cull; to choose; to select.

Send his mother to his father's house,
That he may sort her out a worthy spouse. Chapman.

To SORT. v. n.

1. To be joined with others of the same species.

Nor do metals only sort and herd with metals in the earth, and minerals with minerals; but both in common together. Woodward.

2. To consort; to join.

The illiberality of parents towards their children makes them base, and sort with any company. Bacon.

3. To suit; to fit.

A man cannot speak to a son but as a father; whereas a friend may speak as the case requires, and not as it sorteth with the person. Bacon.

They are happy whose natures sort with their vocations. Bacon.

Among unequals, what society
Can sort, what harmony, or true delight?
Which must be mutual, in proportion due,
Giv'n and receiv'd. Milton, P. L.

The Creator calling forth by name
His mighty angels, gave them several charge,
As sorted best with present things. Milton, P. L.

For different stiles with different subjects sort,
As several garbs with country, town, and court. Pope.

4. [Sortir, to issue, French.] To terminate; to issue.

It sorted not to any fight, but to a retreat. Bacon.

Princes cannot gather this fruit, except they raise some persons to be companions; which many times sorteth to inconvenience. Bacon.

5. To have success; to terminate in the effect desired.

The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain, but they have not sorted to the same purpose as in their native country. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

It was tried in a blown bladder, whereunto flesh and a flower were put, and it sorted not; for dry bladders will not blow, and new bladders further putrefaction. Bacon.

6. To fall out. [from sort, a lot, French.]

And so far am I glad it did so sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shaks.

SoRTABLE.* adj. [sortable, Fr.] Suitable; befitting. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

The flourishing state of learning, sortable to so excellent a princess. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 1.

Daubus in the Rev. ed. by P. Lancaster, p. 46.

SoRTILEGY.* n. s. [sortilegium, Latin.] The act or practice of drawing lots.

Even in sortilegies, and matters of greatest uncertainty, there is a settled and preordered course of effect. Sir T. Brown, Rel. Medici, § 18.

SoRTITION.* n. s. [sortitio, Lat.] Selection or appointment by lot. Cockeram.

The soldiers have parted thy garments, and cast lots upon thy seamless coat: those poor spoils cannot so much enrich them as glorify thee, whose Scriptures are fulfilled by their barbarous sortitions. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

SoRTMENT. n. s. [from sort.]

1. The act of sorting; distribution.

2. A parcel sorted or distributed.

To SOSS.† v. n. [A cant word. Dr. Johnson.—Perhaps a corruption of To souse, from the Fr. sous, down.] To sit lazily on a chair; to fall at once into a chair.

The winter sky began to frown,
Poor Stella must pack off to town;
From wholesome exercise and air,
To sossing in an easy chair. Swift.

Soss.* n. s. [See the verb.]

1. A lazy fellow; a lusk.

2. A heavy fall. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

3. A mucky puddle, or sess. Gloss.

Hence sess-pool, (which see,) according to Grose.

SoT.† n. s. [rot, Norm. Sax. rot-ripe, a state of folly; sof, Fr. sof, Teut. The word is old in our language: "as it were a sote, I stood astonished." Chaucer, Flower and Leaf. Serenius refers the word to the Icel. saud, pecus, bestia.]

1. A blockhead; a dull ignorant stupid fellow; a dolt.

Of the loyal service of his son
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sof,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out. Shakspeare.

Either our brags
Were crackt of kitchen tuts, or his description
Provd us unspeaking sots. Shakspeare.

Soul-blinded sots, that creep
In dirt, and never saw the wonders of the deep. Drayton.

Tell him that no history or antiquity can match his conduct; and presently the sof, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to measure himself by himself, which is the only sure way for him not to fall short. South.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.

Every sign
That calls the staring sots to nasty wine. Roscommon.

A surly ill-bred lord,
That chides and snaps her up at every word:
A brutal sof; who, while she holds his head,
With drunken filth bedaubs the nuptial bed. Granville.

To SoT.† v. a. To stupify; to besot; to infatuate.

This soted priest, who was gladder than he?
Chaucer, Chan. Yem. Tale.

I am sotted,
Utterly lost; my virgin's faith has fled me.
Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.
I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
A driveling hero, fit for a romance.
Dryden, Span. Friar.

The potion
Turns his brain and stupifies his mind;
The sotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden.
TO SOT-† v. n. To tipple to stupidity.
He continued to doze and sot, and tell a tedious story, as most other landlords usually do.
Goldsmith, Essay 19.

SOTTISH. adj. [from sot.]
1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; doltish.

All's but naught:
Patience is sottish, and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.
Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more desperate or more sottish, did abide in the field, of whom many were slain. Hayward.

He gain'd a king,
Ahaz his sottish conqueror. Milton, P. L.
'Tis sottish to offer at things that cannot be brought about. L'Estrange.

The inhabitants of Soldania, in Africa, are so sottish and grossly ignorant, that they differ very little from brutes. Wilkins.

How ignorant are sottish pretenders to astrology!
Swift.

2. Dull with intemperance.

SOTTISHLY. adv. [from sottish.] Stupidly;
dully; senselessly.

Northumberland, sottishly mad with over-great fortune, procured the king, by his letters patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown.
Hayward.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy, and superstition sottishly ignorant in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion.
Glanville.

So sottishly to lose the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and so desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious
folly and deplorable madness in the world.
Bentley.

SOTTISHNESS. n. s. [from sottish.]

1. Dulness; stupidity; insensibility.

Sometimes phlegm purifies into sottishness, sot- tishness into an ignorance or neglect of all religion.
Holyday.

Few consider what a degree of sottishness and confirmed ignorance men may sin themselves into.
South.

The first part of the text, the folly and sottish- ness of atheism, will come home to their case; as they they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity.
Bentley.

2. Drunken stupidity.

No sober temperate person can look with any complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South.

SOUCÉ. n. s. See SOUSE.

SOUCHO'NG.* n. s. A kind of tea.

SOUVENANCE.* n. s. [See SOUVENANCE.] Remembrance.

To dwell in darkness without souvenace.

Spenser, Tears of the Muses.

SOVEREIGN-† adj. [souverain, French:
sovano, Italian, according to which form
Milton wrote this word sovrain.]

1. Supreme in power; having no superiour.

As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; so prayer testifieth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good. Hooker.

You, my sovereign lady,
Causeless have laid disgraces on my head.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

None of us who now thy grace implore,
But held the rank of sovereign queen before,
Till giddy chance, whose malice never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
Cast us down headlong from our high estate.
Dryden.

Whether Esau, then, were a vassal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birthright, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

2. Supremely efficacious; predominant over diseases.

A memorial of fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy. Hooker.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiric; and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Love-wounded Protheus,
My bosom, as a bed,
Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,
And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss. Shaks.
A water we call water of paradise, by that we do to it, is made very sovereign for health. Bacon.
Like the scum starv'd men did draw
From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest
Which were with any sovereign fatness blest.
Donne.

Be cool, my friend, and hear my muse dispense
Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense. Dryden.

SO'VEREIGN-† n. s.

1. Supreme lord.

O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakspeare.
By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,
Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
Oft our alliance other lands desir'd. Dryden.

2. Formerly, a gold coin, called also a rose-noble and double rose-noble: first coined by K. Hen. VII. and continued till the time of K. James I. inclusive. Now, while this old word, unnoticed by Dr.
Johnson, was added, (July 1817,) a new gold coin, of twenty shillings value.

Succeeding kings coined rose-nobles and double rose-nobles, the great sovereigns, with the said inscription. Camden, Rem.

I gave him four sovereigns for his pains.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

TO SO'VEREIGNIZE.* v. n. [from sovereign.]
To exercise supreme power.

Her royalties were spacious, as sovereignizing over many towns and provinces.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 84.
Nimrod was the first that sovereignized over men.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 226.

SO'VEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.] Supreinely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in himself. Boyle.

SO'VEREIGNTY. n. s. [souveraineté, Fr.]
Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.

Give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty. Shakspeare.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince

Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof. Shaks.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of so- vereignty. Davies.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be styl'd
Before the Lord; and in despite of heaven,
Or from heaven claiming second sovereignty.
Milton, P. L.

Nothing does so gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren.
Gov. of the Tongue.

Jove's own tree,
That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
High as his topmost boughs to heaven ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend. Dryden.

I well foresee, when'er thy suit I grant,
That I my much-lov'd sovereignty shall want,
And her new beauty may thy heart invade.
Dryden.

Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God. Rogers.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandroctottus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus. Arbuthnot on Coins.

SOUGH-† n. s. [from sous, French.]

1. A subterraneous drain.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought; the delfs would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any addits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray on the Creation.

Another was found in sinking a sough-pit.
Woodward.

2. A sound. Mr. Archdeacon Nares, in his excellent Glossary, thinks that this meaning is not very clear in the example from Ben Jonson; though he states that Skinner explains sough by sound.
One of the uses of the word in the Craven Dialect is that of a hollow murmur; and one of those in Scotland is that of a deep sigh. Swough, which Chaucer uses, is both noise and sound, and also a swoon; which Dr. Jamieson refers to the Sax. preze, clangor. But see also To Sough.

The well-greas'd wherry now had got between,
And bade her farewell sough unto the burden.
B. Jonson, Epigrams.

TO SOUGH.* v. n. [soeffen, Teut. spirare.]
To whistle: applied to the wind.

A noise like that of a great soughing wind.
Hist. of the Royal Soc. iv. 225.

SOUGHT. The pret. and participle pass.
of seek.

I am sought of them that asked not for me: I am found of them that sought me not. Isa. lxx. 1.

SOUL-† n. s. [raul, Saxon; saal, Icel. seele, Germ. saüwa, Goth. consent. aliis ling.
et dialect. benè multis. Serenius. The old form of our word was saul. "By Christe's saule." Chaucer.]

1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either.
Hooker.

Perhaps for want of food the soul may pine;
But that were strange, since all things bad and
good,

Since all God's creatures, mortal and divine,
Since God himself, is her eternal food. Davies.

He remembered them of the promises, seals, and oaths which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage, that these being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any political act of state be dissolved.
Hayward.

So natural is the knowledge of the soul's immortality, and of some abi for the future reception of it, that we find some tract or other of it in most barbarous nations. Heylin.

2. Intellectual principle.

Eloquence the soul, song charms the sense.

Milton, P. L.

The eyes of our souls only then begin to see, when our bodily eyes are closing. Law.

3. Vital principle.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,

To hold opinion with Pythagoras,

That souls of animals infuse themselves

Into the trunks of men. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul. Milton, P. L.

Join voices, all ye living souls! ye birds,

That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,

Bear on your wings, and in your notes, his praise.

Milton, P. L.

In common discourse and writing, we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles.

Watts.

4. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.

He has the very soul of bounty. Shakspeare.

Charity, the soul of all the rest. Milton, P. L.

5. Interior power.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,

Would men observingly distil it out. Shaks.

6. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.

Three wenches where I stood cry'd

"Alas, good soul!" Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

This is a poor mad soul; and she says up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The poor soul sat singing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow:

Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee.

Shakspeare.

Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense,
Your charge is such as does not need defence.

Dryden.

Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a peppercorn. Watts.

7. Human being.

The moral is the case of every soul of us.

L'Estrange.

It is a republic; there are in it a hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls.

Addison on Italy.

My state of health none care to learn;

My life is here no soul's concern. Swift.

8. Active power.

Earth, air, and seas, through empty space would rowl,

And heaven would fly before the driving soul.

Dryden.

9. Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.

That he wants caution, he must needs confess;
But not a soul, to give our arms success.

Young.

10. Intelligent being in general.

Every soul in heaven shall bend the knee.

Milton.

To SOUL* v. a. To endure with a soul:
an old verb. We still use souled; as narrow-souled, largely souled, and the like.

That Fadre's Sonne which alle things wrought;
And all that wrought is with a skilfull thought,

The Gost, that from the Fader gan procede,

Hath souled them withouten any drede,

Chaucer, Sec. Nun's Tale.

To SOUL, or SOUL* v. n. [rûp], Saxon, obsonum. Northumb. Gloss. at the end of Ray, in V. SOOL. Sool, or soole, any thing eaten with bread.
North. Grose.] To afford suitable sustenance.

I have, sweet wench, a piece of cheese, as good as tooth may chew,

And bread and wildings souling well.

Warner, Albion's England.

SOUL-BELL* n. s. The passing-bell. Obsolete. See PASSING-BELL.

We call them soul-bells, for that they signify the departure of the soul, not for that they help the passage of the soul.

By. Hall, Apol. against the Brownists.

SOUL-DISEASED* adj. [soul and disease.]
Diseased in mind; soul-sick.

[He] had great insight

In that disease of grievous conscience,

And well could cure the same; his name was

Patience:

Who, coming to that soul-diseased knight,

Could hardly him intreat to tell his grief.

Spenser, F. Q.

SO'ULDIER. See SOLDIER.

SO'ULED. adj. [from soul.] Furnished with mind.

Gripping, and still tenacious of thy hold,

Would'st thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely soul'd,

Should give the prizes they had gain'd before?

Dryden.

SO'ULLESS;† adj. [raul-leay, Saxon.]

1. Without soul; without life.

Their holiness is the very outward work itself,
being a brainless head and soulless body.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. (ed. 1605.) X. 4.

2. Mean; low; spiritless.

Slave, soulless villain, dog, O rarely base!

Shakspeare.

SOUL-SHOT. n. s. [soul and shot.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Romanists.

In the Saxon times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called pecunia sepulchralis et symbolum anime, and in Saxon soul-shot. Ayliffe, Paregon.

SOUL-SICK* adj. [soul and sick.] Diseased in mind: a forcible expression.

Mankind is mortally soul-sick.

By. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 51.

I am soul-sick,
And wither with the fear of one condemn'd,
Till I have got your pardon.

Beaumont and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

SOUND. adj. [rûnb, Saxon.]

1. Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not diseased; not hurt.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,

To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks. Shakspeare.

He hath received him safe and sound.

Luke, xv. 27.

We can preserve
Unhurt our minds, and understanding sound.

Milton.

The king visits all around,
Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;

Honours the princely chiefs, Dryden.

But Capys and the rest of sounder mind,

The fatal present to the flames design'd,

Or to the deep. Dryden.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, on account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are all so called with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical.

Watts, Logick.

2. Right; not erroneous; orthodox.

Whom although to know be life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our soundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him; and our safest eloquence concerning him is silence. Hooker.

Let my heart be sound in thy statutes.

Ps. cxix. 80.

Sound, and yet not trivial, catechetick institution.

Felton.

The rules are sound and useful, and may serve your devotion. Wake.

3. Stout; strong; lusty.

The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give sound strokes with their clubs wherewith they fight, or else shoot strong shots with their bows. Abbot.

4. Valid; not failing.

They reserved their titles, tenures, and signories whole and sound to themselves. Spenser on Ireland.

5. Fast; hearty. It is applied to sleep.

New wak'd from soundest sleep,

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid

In balmy sweat. Milton, P. L.

SOUND. adv. Soundly; heartily; completely fast.

The messenger approaching to him spake,

But his waste words return'd to him in vain;

So sound he slept that nought might him awake.

Spenser, F. Q.

SOUND.† n. s. [sound, High Dutch, from the ancient Saxon rûnb, as Kilian hath noted; sond, or sond, saith he, Vet. Sax.

fretum. Gregory, Posthum. 1640, p. 328.

Sund, Su. Goth. fretum, vadum angustius, ut transnatariqueat, ab Icel. synða, natare. Serenius. Wachter is of the same opinion. Gloss. Germ. in V. SUND.]

A shallow sea, such as may be sounded.

The Sound of Denmark, where ships pay toll.

Camden.

Wake,

Behold I come, sent from the Stygian sound,

As a dire vapour that had cleft the ground,

To ingender with the night, and blast the day.

B. Jonson.

Him young Thoosa bore, the bright increase
Of Phorcys, drownded in the sounds and seas. Pope.

SOUND. n. s. [sonde, Fr.] A probe, an instrument used by surgeons to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.

The patient being laid on a table, pass the sound till it meet with some resistance. Sharp, Surgery.

To SOUND.† v. a. [Alem. sondan, maris profunditatem explorare, à sund. V.

SOUND. Serenius.]

1. To search with a plummet; to try depth.

In this secret there is a gulph, which while we live we shall never sound. Hooker.

You are, Hastings, much too shallow

To sound the bottom of the after-times.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. To try; to examine.

Has he never before sounded you in this business? Shakspeare.

Invites these lords, and those he meant to sound.

Daniel.

I was in jest,

And by that offer meant to sound your breast.

Dryden.

I've sounded my Numidians, man by man,

And find 'em ripe for a revolt. Addison, Cato.

To SOUND. v. n. To try with the sounding-line.

The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country, and sounded, and found it near twenty fathoms. Acts, xxvii.

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding-line, he reaches no bottom.

Locke.

SOUND. n. s. [sepia, Lat.] The cuttle-fish.
Ainsworth.

SOUND. n. s. [son, French; sonus, Lat.]
1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marred the face of goodly poesy,
And made a monster of their fantasy.
Spenser.

Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights;
And shew the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antic rowd.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a sound: so a long pole struck upon gravel in the bottom of the water maketh a sound.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The warlike sound of trumpets loud. Milton.
When'er he spoke, his voice was heard around,
Loud as a trumpet with a silver sound. Dryden.
That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called sound; though, till it affect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion. Locke.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.
He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill sound in men's ears.
Locke.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not sound that must be the principle. Locke.

O lavish land! for sound at such expence?
But then, she saves it in her bills for sense. Young.

To SOUND. v. n.

1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.

Trumpet once more to sound at general doom.
Milton.

That with one blast through the whole house does bound,
And first taught speaking-trumpets how to sound.
Dryden.

Thither the silver sounding lyres
Shall call the smiling loves and young desires.
Pope.

2. To exhibit by sound, or likeness of sound.
Why do you start and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair? Shakespeare.
They being told there was small hope of ease
To be expected to their evils from hence,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty.

B. Jonson, Catiline.
This relation sounds rather like a chymical dream than a philosophical truth.
Wilkins, Math. Magicl.

3. To be conveyed in sound.
From you sounded out the word of the Lord.
1 Thess. i. 8.

To SOUND. v. a.

1. To cause to make a noise; to play on.
And many nymphs about them flocking round,
And many tritons, which their horns did sound.
Spenser.

Michael bid sound
The archangel trumpet. Milton, P. L.

Misenus lay; none so renown'd
The warrior trumpet in the field to sound;
With breathing brass to kindle fierce alarms,
And rouse to dare their fate in honourable arms.
Dryden.

2. To betoken or direct by a sound.

Once Jove from Ida did both hosts survey,
And, when he pleas'd to thunder, part the fray;
Here heav'n in vain that kind retreat should sound,
The louder cannon had the thunder drown'd.
Waller.

3. To celebrate by sound.

Sun, sound his praise. Milton, P. L.

SO'UNDBOARD. n. s. [sound and board.]
Board which propagates the sound in organs.

Try it without any soundboard along, only harpise at one end of the string.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes.
Milton.

SO'UNDING. adj. [from sound.] Sonorous; having a magnificent sound.

Obsolete words may then be revived, where more sounding or more significant than those in practice.
Dryden.

SO'UNDING.* n. s. [from To sound, to try depth.]

1. Act of trying the depth of the water with a plummet.

2. [From sound, a noise.] Act of emitting a sound; the sound emitted.

The sounding again of the mountains, [in the margin, the echo.] Esai. vii. 7.

SO'UNDESS.* adj. [sound and less.]

1. Too deep to be reached by the plummet; not to be fathomed.

Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat,
While he upon your soundless deep doth ride.
Shakespeare, Sonn. 80.

You could make shift to paint an eye,
An eagle towering in the sky,
The sun, or sea, or soundless pit.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. Without sound.

They rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless. — Not stingless too? —
O yes, and soundless too;
For you have stol'n their buzzing.
Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

SO'UNDLY. adv. [from sound.]

1. Healthily; healthily.

2. Lustily; stoutly; strongly.

When Duncan is asleep,
Whereto the rather shall this hard day's journey
Soundly invite him. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

They did play,
My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast
With other halsers made me soundly fast.
Chapman, Odyss.

Who had so often in your aid
So many ways been soundly paid.
Hudibras.

Have no concern,
Provided Punch, for there's the jest,
Be soundly maul'd, and plague the rest. Swift.

Their nobility and gentry are one half ruined, banished, or converted: they all soundly feel the smart of the last Irish war. Swift.

3. Truly; rightly.

The wisest are always the readiest to acknowledge, that soundly to judge of a law is the weightiest thing which any man can take upon him.
Hooker.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to our religion. Bacon.

4. Fast; closely: it is used of sleeping.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfen knight he bad him fly,
Where he slept soundly, void of evil thought.
Spenser, F. Q.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

SO'UNDNESS. n. s. [from sound.]

1. Health; heartiness.

I would I had that corporal soundness now,
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldierish. Shakespeare.

2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time; other odds there was none amongst them, saving only that some fell sooner away, and some later from the soundness of belief. Hooker.

Lesly is misled in his politicks; but he hath given proof of his soundness in religion. Swift.

As the health and strength, or weakness of our bodies, is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young; so the soundness or folly of our minds are not less owing to those first tempers and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers. Law.

3. Strength; solidity.

This presupposed, it may stand then very well with strength and soundness of reason, even thus to answer. Hooker.

To SOUP.* v. a. [rupan, Sax. sorbere; supa, Su. Goth. the same.]

1. To sup; to swallow.

Deeth is sopun up in victorie. Wicliffe, 1 Cor. xv.

2. To breathe out; to draw out. [Sax. rpeopan, exhaurire.]

A thousand sours to temper with one sweet,
To make it seem more dead and dainty.

Spenser.

To SOUR. v. a.

1. To make acid.

His angelick nature had none of that carnal leaven which ferments to the souring of ours.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
Till knowledge misapp'ly'd, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood.

Dryden.

One passion, with a different turn,

Makes wit inflame or anger burn:

So the sun's heat, with different powers,

Ripens the grape, the liquor sours.

Swift.

2. To make harsh, or unkindly.

Tufts of grass sour land.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To make uneasy; to make less pleasing.

Hail, great king!

To this reply'd the stern Athenian prince,
And sourly smil'd.

Dryden, Kn. Tale.

3. Painfully; discontentedly.

As bad dispositions run into worse habits, the evening doth not crown, but sourly conclude the day.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 6.

SO'URNES. n. s. [from sour.]

1. Acidity; austereness of taste.

Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body, and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I the spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;

But summer doth, like age, the sourness waste.

Denham.

He knew

For fruit the grafted pear-tree to dispose,
And tame to plums the sourness of the loes.

Dryden, Virgil.

Of acid or sour one has a notion from taste, sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe.

Arbutnot.

Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end?

Pope.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.

Pelagius carped at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too hardly thereof.

Hooker.

He was never thought to be of that superstitious
sourness, which some men pretend to in religion.

King Charles.

Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature.

Addison, Freehold.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness mingle with our serious frame of mind.

Nelson.

But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart.

Pope.

2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.

They soused me into the Thames with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies.

Shakspeare.

Who those were that run away,
And yet gave out th' had won the day;

Although the rabble sous'd them for't,

O'er head and ears in mud and dirt.

Bulwer.

They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the most case-hardened of the Ironsides.

Addison, Guardian.

To SOUSE. † v. n. [from sous or dessus, down, Fr. Mr. Brockett, with great ingenuity, proposes a better etymology in the old Fr. sus for above or upon; "for which," he observes, "the French now use sur, though sus is still retained in some phrases; as, courir sus à quelqu'un, to fall upon one. The modern preposition dessus, upon or above, is only a compound of de and the old sus." N. C.
Words.] To fall as a bird on its prey;
to fall with violence.

Both together smite,

And souse so sore, that they the heavens affray.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thus on some silver swan, or timorous hare,
Jove's bird comes sousing down from upper air;

Her crooked talons truss the fearful prey;

Then out of sight she soars.

Dryden, Æn.

Jove's bird will souse upon the timorous hare,
And tender kids with his sharp talons tear.

Dryden, jun.

Through the lowest region I flew,

Sousing through falling bogs of dew.

Shyman, Trag. of Hen. III. of France, (1678.)

To SOUSE. v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

The gallant monarch is in arms;

And like an eagle o'er his airy tow'rs,

To souse annoyance that comes near his nest.

Shakspeare.

SOUSE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Violent attack, as of a bird striking his prey.

Eft fierce returning, as a faulcon fayre,

That once hath failed of her souse full near,

Remounts againe into the open ayre.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 36.

With that his murderous mace he up did reare,

That seemed nought the souse thereof could beare,

And therewith smote at him with all his might.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 44.

Her conscience and her fears creeping upon her,

Dead, as a fowl at souse, she'll sink.

Beaum. and Fl. Chances.

I escap'd the souse of his contracted fist.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 56.

SOUSE. adv. With sudden violence. A

low word.

able article of commerce in Japan.

Soy-sauce — is prepared from soybeans, (dolichos soja), and salt, mixed with barley or wheat.

Thunberg.
Some provinces [of Japan] furnish better soy than others; but, exclusively of this, it grows better and clearer through age. Its colour is invariably brown, and its chief excellence consists in the agreeable salt taste which it possesses.

Transl. of Thunberg's Travels, vol. iv. (1795,) p. 121.
SPAAD. n. s. [stella terræ, Lat.] A kind of mineral.

English talc, of which the coarser sort is called

SPACE. n. s. [spatium, Lat.]

1. Room; local extension.

Space is the relation of distance between any two bodies or points. Locke.

Oh, undistinguish'd space of woman's wit!

Shakespeare.

This which yields or fills all space. Milton, P. L.
Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.

Space and motion can never be actually infinite:
they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end; so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined;
no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.

2. Any quantity of place.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods, about ten miles space to Walpo.

Knolles.

In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them. Burnet.

Measuring first with careful eyes
The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries.

Dryden.

3. Quantity of time.

There is a competent time allowed every man, and as it is certain death is the conclusion of it, 'tis possible some space before death. Hammond.

Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confounded, though immortal. Milton, P. L.

In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight.

Wilkins, Math. Mag.

God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. Tillotson.

The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease. Addison, Freeholder.

4. A small time; a while.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace
Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space. Spenser, F. Q.

Compassion quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears

A space, till former thoughts restrain'd excess.

Milton, P. L.

drille.

SPAGYRICAL* adj. [spagyricus, Lat.
spagiriq, Fr. from the Gr. σπάω, to extract, and ἀγρία, to collect; not from spaher, Teut. a searcher, as Dr. Johnson would have it to be under the adjective spagyrick, which he has noticed;
where he says, Paracelsus coined the word, viz. spagyricus.] Chymical.

Paracelsus — brought to light in these parts of the world the use of hermetical, spagyrical, or chymical physick, as they term it.

Hakewill on Prov. p. 244.

They all cried out fire, when spagyric preparations came first into use.

Dr. Harris's Descript. of Loo, &c. (1699), p. 65.
SPAGYRICK† adj. [spagyricus, Lat. See SPAGYRICAL.] I know no example of this adjective. Bishop Hall writes the substantive spagyrick, which is the more correct spelling.† Chymical.

SPAGYRICK* n. s. A chymist.

Those only know how to wait, that have learnt to frame their mind to their estate; like to a skillful musician, that can let down his strings a peg lower when the tune requires it; or like to some cunning spagyrick, that can intend or remit the heat of his furnace according to occasion.

Bp. Hall, Of Content. § 4.

SPA'GYRIST. n. s. A chymist.

1. The space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger extended; nine inches.

A foot, the length of it, is a sixth part of the fathom; a span, one eighth; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, or inch, one seventy-second; and a forefinger's breadth one ninety-sixth.

Holder on Time.

Will you with counters sum
 The vast proportion of his infinite?
 And buckle in a waste most fatuousless,
 With spans and inches so diminutive
 As fears and reasons? Shaks. Tr. and Cress.

Sum how brief the life of man

Runs his erring pilgrimage,

That the stretching of a span

Buckles in his sum of age.

Shakspeare.

Our lives are but our marches to our graves:

— Faith, 'tis true, sir:

We are but spans and candles' ends.

Beaumont and Fl. Hum. Lieut.

When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules' pillar. Brown.

2. Any short duration.

You have scarce time.

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,

To keep your earthly audit. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

My surveyor is false; the o'er great cardinal
 Hath shew'd him gold; my life is spann'd already.

Shakspeare.

Our thoughts — not only bestride all the sea and land, but span the sun and firmament at once.

Donne, Devot. p. 67.

This soul doth span the world, and hang content
 From either pole unto the centre;

Where in each room of the well-furnish'd tent
 He lies warm, and without adventure. Herbert.

Harry, whose tuneful and well-measur'd song
 First taught our English music how to span

Words with just note and accent, not to scan
 With Mida's ears, committing short and long.

Milton, Sonnet.

SPAN. The preterite of spin. See SPIN.

Together furiously they ran,

That to the ground came horse and man;

The blood out of their helmets span,

So sharp were their encounters.

Drayton, Nymphid.

SPA'NCEL* n. s. A rope to tie a cow's hinder legs. North. Grose.

Am I not totally a span-new gallant,

Fit for the choicest eyes?

Beaumont and Fl. False One.

To SPAN† v. a. [Dr. Johnson gives this word without any etymon, or authority. It is, however, very old in our language, and is still common in the north of England. "To spanyn or *wany*n children, ablacto." Prompt. Parv. It is the German spenen, from span, uber, ʔpana, Sax. ubera.] To wean a child.

SPAN† n. s. [spange, Germ. spanghe, Teut.] A thin piece of gold, or silver, or other shining materials: a spangled ornament.

A vesture — sprinkled here and there

With glittering spangs that did like stars appear.

Spenser, F. Q.

In that day shall the Lord take away the gorgeousness of their apparel, and spangs, chains, parlettes, and collets.

Knight, Tr. of Truth, (1580,) fol. 7.

The colours that shew best by candlelight are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and oes or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. Bacon.

SPA'NGLE† n. s. [spange, Germ. a buckle, a locket: whence other spangen, earrings.]

 As those two eyes become that heavenly face.

Shakspeare.

Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,
 That the eyes of busy fools may be stopt there.

Donne.

Four faces each

Had, like a double Janus; all their shape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those Of Argus. Milton, P. L.

Then appear'd

Spangling the hemisphere, then first adorn'd
 With the bright luminaries, that set and rose.

Milton, P. L.

He cuts out a silk mantle from the skies,
 Where the most sprightly azure pleas'd the eyes;
 This he with starry vapours spangles all,
 Took in their prime, ere they grow, rise, and fall.

Cowley.

The spacious firmament on high,
 With all the blue ethereal sky,
 And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
 Their great Original proclaim. Addison, Spect.

SPA'NIEL† n. s. [hispaniolus, Lat. espagneul, Fr. from Hispaniola, where the best breed of this species of dog was. See Hyde, Not. on Peristol. Itin. Mundi, p. 173.]

1. A dog used for sports in the field, remarkable for sagacity and obedience. Divers days I followed his steps till I found him, having newly met with an excellent spaniel belonging to his dead companion. Sidney.

There are arts to reclaim the wildest men, as there are to make spaniels fetch and carry : chide 'em often, and feed 'em seldom.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. A low, mean, sneaking fellow.

I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
The more you beat me I will fawn on you. Shaks.

Which *sparre*s the body's sheath, but melts the steel.

Cleveland.

Dim sadness did not sparre

Celestial viasages. Milton, P. L.

Less pleasure take brave minds in battles won

Than in restoring such as are undone :

Tigers have courage, and the rugged bear;

But man alone can whom he conquers sparre.

Waller.

6. To grant; to allow; to indulge.

Set me in the remotest place,

That Neptune's frozen arms embrace;

Where angry Jove did never sparre

One breath of kind and temperate air.

Roscommon.

7. To forbear to inflict or impose.

Spare my remembrance; 'twas a guilty day;

And still the blush hangs here.

Dryden, All for Love.

O sparre this great, this good, this aged king,

And sparre your soul the crime!

Dryden, Span. Friar.

The next a fountain spouting through his heir.

Pope.

No statute in his favour says

How free or frugal I shall pass my days;

I, who at sometimes spend, at others sparre,
Divided between carelessness and care.

Pope.

2. To forbear; to be scrupulous.

His soldiers sparred not to say that they should be unkindly dealt with, if they were defrauded of the spoil.

Knolles.

To pluck and eat my fill I spar'd not.

Milton, P. L.

3. To use mercy; to forgive; to be tender.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was spar- ing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon.

SPARE.† adj. [ppæp, Sax. parcus.]

1. Scanty; not abundant; parsimonious; frugal.

By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specific uniformities? Glanville.

These principles I consider not as occult qualities supposed to result from the specific forms of things, but as general laws of nature by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered. Newton, Opt.

As all things were formed according to their specific platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Norris.

Specific gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Quincy.

The specific qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil, and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt, and earth appear to be the same in all plants. Arbutnot.

Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.

2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular distemper. It is usually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.

The operation of purging medicines have been referred to a hidden propriety, a specific virtue, and the like shifts of ignorance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SPECIFIC.* n. s. A specific medicine.

If she would drink a good decoction of sarsa, with the usual specifics, she might enjoy a good health. Wiseman.

SPECIFICALLY.* adv. [from specific.] In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South, Serm.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically, differ from the fantastic reason of brutes, which have no conceit of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple conceits, nor of any other universal. Grew.

He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever since; and that, if an axe head be supposed to float upon water which is specifically lighter, it had been supernatural. Bentley.

To SPECIFY.* v. a. [from species and facio, Lat.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.

Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specifying, concurrent, new imparate act of the divine special providence. Hale.

SPECIFICATION.* n. s. [from specific; specification, French.]

1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.

This specification or limitation of the question hinders the disputers from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry. Watts.

2. Particular mention.

The constitution here speaks generally without the specification of any place. Ayliffe, Powergen.

SPECIFICNESS.* n. s. [from specific.] Particular mark of distinction.

A spirit is one simple specific essence or substance; and that true specificness in its essence is the real and intimate form thereof. Annot. on Glanville, &c. (1682), p. 232.

To SPECIFY.* v. a. [from species; specifier, Fr.] To mention; to show by some particular marks of distinction.

As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are such must be great. Hooker.

St. Peter doth not specify what these waters were. Burnet.

He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of their soils, are specified. Pope.

SPECIMEN.* n. s. [specimen, Lat.] A sample; a part of any thing exhibited, that the rest may be known.

Several persons have exhibited specimens of this art before multitudes of beholders. Addison, Spect.

SPECIOUS.† adj. [specieux, Fr. speciosus, Lat.]

1. Showy; pleasing to the view.

Divers sorts are of them, [serpents:] some specious, and beautiful to the eye.

Bp. Richardson on Gen. iii. 1. (1655.)

The rest, far greater part,
Will deem in outward rites and specious forms,
Religion satisfy'd. Milton, P. L.

She next I took to wife,
O that I never had! fond wish too late!
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila,
That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare.

Milton, S. A.

2. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right; striking at first view.

Bad men boast

Their specious deeds on earth which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal.

Milton, P. L.

Somewhat of specious they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for folly will not easily go down in its natural form. Dryden.

Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature and good manners. Rogers.

This is the only specious objection which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine of this church in the point of celibacy. Atterbury.

SPECIOUSLY. adv. [from specious.] With fair appearance.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity; especially to that personated devotion under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised, and put off more speciously. Hammond.

SPECIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from specious.] The state or quality of being specious. Ash.

SPECK. n. s. [pecca, Sax.] A small discoloration; a spot.

Every speck does not blind a man.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Then are they happy, when

No speck is left of their habitual stains;

But the pure æther of the soul remains.

Dryden, Æn.

TO SPECK. v. a. To spot; to stain in drops.

Each flower —

Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold.

Milton, P. L.

SPECKLE. n. s. [from speck.] Small speck;
little spot.

TO SPECKLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small spots.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,

Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,

And often bounding on the bruised grass,

As for great joy of his new comen guest.

Spenser, F. Q.

Speckled vanity

Will sicken soon and die,

And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould.

Milton, Ode.

Saw'st thou not late a speckled serpent rear

His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?

Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take

The crested basilisk and speckled snake. Pope.

The tortoise here and elephant unite,

Transform'd to combs, the speckled and the white.

Pope.

SPECKLEDNESS.* n. s. [from speckle.]
State or quality of being speckled. Ash.

SPECKT, or SPREIGHT.† n. s. A woodpecker.

Ainsworth. The true word specht had been noticed long before by Sherwood.

See SPECHT.

SPECTACLE. n. s. [spectacle, French;
spectaculum, Latin.]

1. A show; a gazing stock; any thing exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.

In open place produc'd they me,

To be a publick spectacle to all. Shaks. Hen. VI.

We are made a spectacle unto angels and men.

1 Cor. iv. 9.

2. Any thing perceived by the sight.

Forth riding underneath the castle wall,

A dunghill of dead carcasses he spy'd,

The dreadful spectacle of that sad house of pride.

Spenser, F. Q.

When pronouncing sentence, seem not glad;

Such spectacles, though they are just, are sad.

Denham.

3. [In the plural.] Glasses to assist the sight.

The sixth age shifts

Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloons,

With spectacles on nose and pouch on side.

Shakspeare.

We have helps for sight above spectacles and glasses. Bacon.

Shakspeare was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards, and found her there.

Dryden on Dram. Poesy.

The first spectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new planets. Grew.

This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shews why their sight is mended by spectacles. Newton.

This day, then, let us not be told,

That you are sick and I grown old;

Nor think on our approaching ills,

And talk of spectacles and pills. Swift.

SPECTACLED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with spectacles.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights

Are spectacled to see him. Shaks. Coriol.

SPECTACULAR.* adj. [from spectacle.]
Relating to spectacles or shows.

The spectacular sports were concluded.

Dr. Hiches, Sermon. 30 Jan. (1681-2.) p. 4.

SPECTATION. n. s. [spectatio, Lat.] Regard; respect.

This simple spectation of the lungs is differenced from that which concommitates a pleurisy. Harvey.

SPECTATOR. n. s. [spectateur, Fr. spectator,
Lat.] A looker-on; a beholder.

More

Than history can pattern, though devis'd

And play'd, to take spectators. Shakspeare.

If it proves a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

An old gentleman mounting on horseback, got up heavily; but desired the spectators that they would count fourscore and eight before they judged him. Dryden.

He mourns his former vigour lost so far,

To make him now spectator of a war. Dryden.

What pleasure hath the owner more than the spectator? Seel.

SPECTATORSHIP.† n. s. [from spectator.]

1. Act of beholding.

Thou stand'st i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueller in suffering. Shakspeare.

2. Office or quality of a spectator.

Your first rudimental essays in spectatorship were made in my shop, where you often practised for hours. Spectator.

SPECTATRESS.*† n. s. [spectatrix, Latin.

SPECTATRIX. } This form in English is given by Cotgrave under the French term spectatrice.] A female looker-on,

or beholder.

Amid the general wreck see where she stands,
Like Helen, in the night when Troy was sack'd, Spectatress of the mischief which she made.

Rowe, Fair Penitent.

Did reassume its shatter'd throne,
But as spectatress of this last of horrors?

Walpole, Mysteries Mother.

SPECTRE.† n. s. [spectrum, Lat. spectre,
Fr. "an image, or figure, seen either truly, or but in conceit; thence a spirit, ghost, vision, apparition, fantasm." Cot-
grave.]

1. Apparition; appearance of persons dead.

The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fanatic spectres to rejoice. Dryden.

The very poetical use of the word for a spectre doth imply an exact resemblance to some real being it represents. Stillingfleet.

These are nothing but spectres the understanding raises to itself to flatter its own laziness. Locke.

2. Something made preternaturally visible.

SPECTRUM. n. s. [Lat.] An image;
a visible form.

This prism had some veins running along within the glass, from the one end to the other, which scattered some of the sun's light irregularly, but had no sensible effect in increasing the length of the coloured spectrum. Newton, Opt.

SPECULAR.† adj. [specularis, Lat.]

1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking-glass.

It were but madness now t' impart

The skill of specular stone. Donne.

Quicksilver may, by the fire alone, in glass vessels, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and specular as before. Boyle.

A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of those rings; and thence I understood that these rings arise not from the specular surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass whereof the speculum was made, and upon the thickness of the glass between them. Newton.

2. Assisting sight. [Dr. Johnson calls this usage improper; but assigns no reason why. It is an old French meaning; of which he was not aware. Speculatoire, "clear, transparent; also, helping the sight." Cotgrave.]

The hidden way

Of nature would'st thou know, how first she frames

All things in miniature? thy specular orb

Apply to well-dissected kernels; lo!

In each observe the slender threads

Of first-beginning trends. Philips.

3. Affording view. See the first sense of SPECULATION.

Look once more, ere we leave this specular
mount. Milton, P. R.

TO SPECULATE. v. n. [speculer, Fr. specular, Lat.] To meditate; to contemplate; to take a view of any thing with the mind.

Consider the quantity, and not speculate upon an intrinsecal relation. Digby on Bodies.

As news-writers record facts which afford great matter of speculation, their readers speculate accordingly, and, by their variety of conjectures, become consummate statesmen. Addison.

TO SPECULATE. v. a. To consider attentively; to look through with the mind.

Man was not meant to gape, or look upward, but to have his thoughts sublime; and not only behold, but speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding.

SPECULATION.† n. s. [speculation, Fr. from speculate; Lat. specula, a watch-tower.]

1. Examination by the eye; view.

Here, as from a turret of speculation, you may look down upon the vulgar.

Codrington, Marrow of Hist. (1653.)

Let us descend now therefore from this top of speculation.

Milton, P. L.

2. Examiner; spy. This word is found nowhere else, and probably is here misprinted for speculator.

They who have, as who have not, whom their great stars

Throne and set high? servants

Which are to France the spies and speculations, Intelligent of our state.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. Mental view; intellectual examination; contemplation.

In all these things being fully persuaded, that what they did, it was obedience to the will of God, and that all men should do the like; there remained after speculation, practice whereunto the whole world might be framed.

Hooker.

Thenceforth to speculations high or deep, I turn'd all thoughts; and with capacious mind Consider'd all things visible.

Milton, P. L.

News-writers afford matter of speculation.

Addison.

4. A train of thoughts formed by meditation.

From him Socrates derived the principles of morality, and most part of his natural speculations.

Temple.

5. Mental scheme not reduced to practice.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only round in speculation, has since been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators.

Temple.

This is a consideration not to be neglected, or thought an indifferent matter of mere speculation.

Leslie.

6. Power of sight. Not in use.

Thy bones are marrowless; thy blood is cold; Thou hast no speculation in those eyes

Thou star'st with.

Shakespeare.

SPECULATIST.* n. s. [from speculate.]

A speculator. Speculatist is perhaps the older word; and though Dr. Johnson has overpassed it in his Dictionary, he was fond of it in his writings.

Let the profoundest speculatist, or curious practitioner, turn the edge of his wit which way he will to find some new thing; yet sure it is, the same things have been.

Granger on Eccl. (1621,) p. 24.

The observation of a few retired speculatists.

Covey, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 2.

The perplexity which has entangled the speculatists of all ages.

Johnson, Review of Jenyns's Free Enquiry.

It would seem impossible to a solitary speculatist, that a human being can want employment.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 124.

Such are the conceits of speculatists, who strain their faculties to find in a mine what lies upon the surface.

Johnson, Life of Prior.

SPECULATIVE.† adj. [speculatif, Fr. from speculate.]

1. Given to speculation; contemplative.

If all other uses were utterly taken away, yet the mind of man being by nature speculative, and delighted with contemplation in itself, they were to be known even for mere knowledge sake.

Hooker.

It encourages speculative persons who have no turn of mind to increase their fortunes.

Addison.

2. Theoretical; notional; ideal; not practical.

Some take it for a speculative platform, that reason and nature would say that the best should govern, but no wise to create a right.

Bacon, Holy War.

These are not speculative flights, or imaginary notions, but are plain and undeniable laws, that are founded in the nature of rational beings.

Law.

3. Belonging to view. Shakespeare's combination means the eyes.

My speculative instruments.

Shaks. Othello.

Speculative glasses. Hooke, Hist. R. S. iv. 30.

4. Prying.

Counsellors should not be too speculative into their sovereign's person.

Bacon.

SPECULATIVELY.† adv. [from speculative.]

1. Contemplatively; with meditation.

These were with Mary to be speculatively affected; mean time those Marthas, who were troubled about many things, were not for their provident care in domestic affairs altogether condemned.

Comment on Chaucer, (1665,) p. 70.

2. Ideally; notionally; theoretically; not practically.

It is possible that a man may, speculatively, prefer the constitution of another country, or an Utopian of his own, before that of the nation where he is born and lives.

Swift, Exam. No. 29.

SPECULATIVENESS.* n. s. [from speculative.] The state of being speculative.

Scott.

SPECULATOR. n. s. [from speculate.]

1. One who forms theories.

He is dextrous in puzzling others, if they be not through-paced speculators in those great theories.

More.

2. [Speculateur, Fr.] An observer; a contemplator.

Although lapidaries and questuary enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals, and natural speculators, conceive the stones which bear this name to be a mineral concretion.

Brown.

3. A spy; a watcher.

All the boats had one speculator, to give notice when the fish approached.

Broomie on the Odys.

SPECULATORY.† adj. [from speculate.]

1. Exercising speculation.

Both these were nothing more than speculative out-posts to the Akeman-street.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 58.

SPECULUM.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. A mirror; a looking-glass; that in which representations are formed by reflection.

A rough and coloured object may serve for a speculum, to reflect the artificial rainbow.

Boyle on Colours.

2. An instrument in surgery used for dilatation.

SPEED. The preterite and part. passive of speed.

His horse full of windgalls, sped with the spavins, and rayed with the yellows.

Shakspeare.

Barbarossa, sped of that he desired, staid not long at Constantinople, but shaped his course towards Italy.

Knolles.

With all his harness soon the god was sped; His flying hat, his wings upon his heels.

Dryden.

SPEECH.† n. s. [jæc, Sax. from To speak.]

1. The power of articulate utterance; the power of expressing thoughts by vocal words.

There is none comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith man alone is endowed, for the communication of his thoughts.

Holder on Speech.

Though our ideas are first acquired by various sensations and reflections, yet we convey them to each other by the means of certain sounds, or written marks, which we call words; and a great part of our knowledge is both obtained and communicated by these means, which are called speech.

Watts.

2. Language; words considered as expressing thoughts.

In speech be eight parts.

Accidence.

The acts of God to human ears Cannot without process of speech be told.

Milton, P. L.

3. Particular language as distinct from others.

There is neither speech nor language, but their voices are heard among them.

Ps. Comm. Fr.

4. Any thing spoken.

A plague upon your epileptick visage! Smile you my speeches as I were a fool?

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. Talk; mention.

The duke did of me demand What was the speech among the Londoners, Concerning the French journey.

Shakspeare.

Speech of a man's self ought to be seldom.

Bacon, Ess.

6. Oration; harangue.

The constant design of these orators, in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point.

Swift.

7. Declaration of thoughts.

I, with leave of speech implor'd, reply'd.

Milton, P. L.

TO SPEECH.* v. n. To harangue; to make a speech.

He saved continually of the merlin: he stood upon the bulks in Westminster hall, and speeched against him from morning till night.

Account of T. Whigg, Esq. (1710,) p. 9.

And were you supposed to have the tongues of angels and archangels to speech it in your behalf, their words would have no weight!

Fyfe, Serm. ii. 435.

SPEECHLESS. adj. [from speech.]

1. Deprived of the power of speaking; made mute or dumb.

He fell down, foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.

Shakspeare.

The great god Pan hath broken his pipes, and Apollo's priests are become speechless.

Raleigh.

A single vision transports them: it finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate when it departs.

Dryden.

Speechless with wonder, and half dead with fear.

Addison.

2. Mute; dumb.

I kneel'd before him; 'Twas very faintly he said, rise: dismiss'd me

Thus, with his speechless hand.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

From her eyes

I did receive fair speechless messages.

Shakspeare.

He that never hears a word spoken, it is no wonder he remain speechless; as any one must do, who from an infant should be bred up among mutes.

Holder on Speech.

SPEECHLESSNESS.* n. s. [from speechless.]

State of being speechless.

Immediate preceding signs of death are great unquietness — the memory confused, speechlessness, cold sweats.

Bacon, Hist. of Life and Death.

TO SPEED.† n. n. pret. and part. pass. sped and speeded. [spoeden, Teut. spuden, Germ. to hasten; jpeb, Sax. celerity, haste. Wachter derives the word from the Gr. σπεῖδα, (speudo), to hasten; Serenius from the Goth. spo sig, the same.]

1. To make haste; to move with celerity.

So well they sped, that they be come at length
Unto the place whereas the Paynim lay,
Devoid of outward sense and native strength,
Covered with charmed cloud from view of day.

Spenser, P. Q.

Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet?
Have I, in my poor and cold motion, the expedition of thought? I *sped*ed hither with the very extremest inch of possibility.

Shakespeare.

If prayers
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard.

Milton, P. L.

See where Idwall speeds! a trusty soldier.

A. Philips.

2. [Spebian, to grow rich, Saxon.] To have good success.

Timon is shrunk, indeed;
And he, that's once deny'd, will hardly speed.

Shakespeare.

Now if this suit lay in Bianca's pow'r,
How quickly should you speed!
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell,

I told you then he should prevail, and speed
In his bad errand.

Milton, P. L.

3. To succeed well or ill.

Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I've look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Macians shewed them what an offence it was rashly to depart out of the city, which might be unto them dangerous, although they should speed never so well.

Knolles.

These were violators of the first temple, and those that profaned and abused the second, sped no better.

South.

4. To have any condition good or bad.

Ships heretofore in seas like fishes sped,
The mightiest still upon the smallest fed.

Waller.

To SPEED. v. a.

1. To hasten in haste; to send away quickly.

The tyrant's self, a thing unused, began
To feel his heart relict with meek compassion;
But not dispos'd to ruth or mercy then;
He sped him thence home to his habitation.

Fairfax.

2. To hasten; to put into quick motion.

She,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
Led hither by pure love.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

Satan, tow'r'd the coast of earth beneath,
Down from the ecliptick sped with hop'd success,
Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel.

Milton, P. L.

The priest reply'd no more,
But sped his steps along the hoarse resounding shore.

Dryden.

3. To furnish in haste.

4. To dispatch; to destroy; to kill; to mischief; to ruin.

With a speeding thrust his heart he found;
The lukewarm blood came rushing through the wound.

Lucina
Reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes.

Dryden.

Propitious Neptune steer'd their course by night
With rising gales, that sped their happy flight.

Dryden.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the Pole.

Pope.

7. To make prosperous; to make to succeed.

If any bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.

2 John, 10.
He was chosen, though he stood low upon the roll, by a very unusual concurrence of providential events, happened to be sped.

Fell.

SPEED.† n. s. [p̄pec, Saxon.]

1. Quickness; celerity.

Earth receives
As tribute, such a sunless journey brought
Of incorporeal speed, her warmth and light;
Speed! to describe whose swiftness number fails.

Milton, P. L.

We observe the horse's patient service at the plough, his speed upon the highway, his docileness, and desire of glory.

More.

2. Haste; hurry; dispatch.

When they strain to their utmost speed, there is still the wanted distance between them and their aims: all their eager pursuits bring them no acquests.

Dec. of Chr. Plety.

3. The course or pace of a horse.

He that rides at high speed, and with a pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

4. Success; event of any action or incident.

fix on thatch with. A northern word.

Ray and Grose.

SPELL.† n. s. [rpel, Saxon, a word.]

1. A charm consisting of some words of occult power. Thus Horace uses words:

Sunt verba et voces quibus hunc lenire dolorem Possis.

Start not; her actions shall be holy:
You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjunctions, letters, characters, notes, and dashes.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,
Had not spells.

And black enchantments, some magicians's art,
Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong, Milton, S. A.

Youself you so excel,
When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
That, like a spirit, with this spell

Of my own teaching I am caught.

Waller.

Mild Lucina
Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes,
And spoke the powerful spells that babes to birth disclose.

Dryden.

2. A turn of work; a vicissitude of labour. [from the Sax. p̄p̄han, vices alicujus obire. Lye. A word frequent among seamen, as he adds, denoting their respective turns of labour.]

Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells: the residue of the time they wear out at coytes and kayles.

Carew.

3. [Spel, Sax. historia, narratio.] A tale. Obsolete.

Now—hearken to my spell:
Of battaille, and of chevalerie,
Anon I will you tell. Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

TO SPELL.† v. a. pret. and part. pass. spelled or spelt. [spellen, Teut. spellen, Germ. which Wachter derives from spalten, to split, to divide.]1. To write with the proper letters. In the criticism of spelling, the word sative ought to be with i, and not with y; and if this be so, then it is false spelled throughout.

Dryden, Jur. Ded.

2. To read by naming letters singly. I never yet saw man,

How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featur'd,
But she would spelt him backward: if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister.

Shakespeare.

3. To read; to discover by characters or marks. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

In this manner to sit spelling and observing divine justice upon every accident, and slight disturbance, that may happen humanly to the affairs of men, is but another fragment of his broken revenge.

Milton, Eiconoclast. § 26.

4. To charm.

I have you fast:
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

For a time he was much spelled with Elianor Talbot, daughter of John Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury.

Sir G. Buck, Life of Rich. III. p. 116.

This gather'd in the planetary hour,
With noxious weeds, and spelt with words of power,
Dire step-dames in the magick bowl infuse.

Dryd.

5. [Speltan, Sax.] To relate; to teach. This meaning also is overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

Might I that holy legend find,
By fairies spelt in mystic rhymes,
To teach enquiring later times,
What open force, or secret guile,
Dash'd into dust the solemn pile. Warton, Ode 11.
TO SPELL. v. n.

1. To form words of letters.

What small knowledge was, in them did dwell;
And he a god, who could but read or spell.
Dryden.

By pasting on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in coats has played himself into spelling.
Locke.

The Latin, being written of the same character with the mother-tongue, by the assistance of a spelling-book, it is legible.
Spectator.

Another cause, which hath maimed our language, is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak.
Swift.

2. To read.

If I read aught in heaven,
Or heaven write aught of fate, by what the stars,
Voluminous or single characters,
In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
Sorrow and labours, opposition, hate,
Attend thee.
Milton, P. L.

When gowns, not arms, repell'd
The fierce Epirote, and the African bold,
Whether to settle peace, or to unfold
The drift of hollow states, hard to be spell'd.
Milton, Sonnet.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
Where I may sit, and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven's doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew. Milton, Il Pens.

3. To read unskillfully.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude unwritten blank, sent into the world only to read and spell out a God in the works of creation.
South.

TO SPELT. v. n. [Dr. Johnson gives no derivation, and pronounces the word bad; but why, it is difficult to say. It is evidently the Germ. spalten, to divide.]
To split; to break.

Feed geese with oats, spelted beans, barley meal,
or ground malt mixed with beer.
Mortimer.

SPELT.* n. s. [pelc, Sax. spelte, Teut.] A kind of corn.

Lentils, and millet, and fitches, [in the margin spelt.]
Ezek. iv. 9.

SPELTTER. n. s. A kind of semi-metal.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames.
Newton.

SPENCE.* n. s. [despence, old Fr.] A buttery; a larder; a store-room; a place where any provisions are kept. "Spence, cellarium, promptuarium." Prompt.
Parv. See also Cotgrave, and Sherwood. This is the old sense of the word, and is still so used in many places.
Spens, Cornish. In some parts of the north, it is used for a kind of little parlour or inner room of a country-house.

As botel in the spence. Chaucer, Sonyn. Tale.

SPENCER.* n. s. [from spence.] A butler;
any who has the care of the spence:
cellarius, Lat. Obsolete. Prompt. Parv.
TO SPEND. v. a. [penban, Saxon; spen- dere, Ital.]

1. To consume; to exhaust; to waste.

Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds. Shakspeare.
I will very gladly spend and be spent for you.
2 Cor. xii. 15.

There is oil in the dwelling of the wise, but a foolish man spendeth it up.
Prov. xxi. 20.

We must exasperate
The almighty Victor to spend all his rage.

Milton, P. L.

Money is brought into England by nothing but spending here less of foreign commodities than what we carry to market can pay for. Locke.

2. To bestow as expence; to expend as cost.

Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? Isa. lv. 2.

3. To bestow for any purpose: often with upon.

When we can intreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shaks. Macbeth.

Eleutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to spend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any mention to him of the proposed opinion. Boyle.

4. To effuse.

Coward dogs
Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

5. To squander; to lavish.

The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what course we are to take to pass our time; some to get, and others to spend their estates. Wake.

6. To pass; to suffer to pass away.

In those pastoral pastimes, a great many days were spent, to follow their flying predecessors.

Sidney.

They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Job, xxi. 13.

He spends his life with his wife, and remembereth neither father nor mother. 1 Esdr. iv. 21.

Say, for you saw us, ye immortal lights,
How oft unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Ledaean stars, so fam'd for love,
Wonder'd at us from above. Cowley.

When he was of riper years, for his farther accomplishment, he spent a considerable part of his time in travelling. Pope.

7. To waste; to wear out; to exhaust of force.

The waves ascended and descended, till their violence being spent by degrees, they settled at last.
Burnet, Theory.

They bend their bows, they whirl their slings around;
Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground.
Dryden.

The winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;
Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury, and direct it right,
Till it has spent itself on Cato's head.
Addison, Cato.

8. To fatigue; to harass.

Nothing but only the hope of spoil did relieve them, having scarce clothes to cover their nakedness, and their bodies spent with long labour and thirst. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Or come your shipping in our ports to lay,
Spent and disabled in so long a way? Dryden, Æn.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,
And harass'd out with duty. Dryden.

Some spent with toil, some with despair oppress'd;

Leap'd headlong from the heights; the flames consum'd the rest. Dryden, Æn.

Thou oft hast seen me,
Wrestling with vice and faction; now thou seest me
Spent, overpower'd, despairing of success.
Addison, Cato.

TO SPEND. v. n.

1. To make expence.

Henceforth your tongue must spend at lesser rate,
Than in its flames to wrap a nation's fate. Dryden.

He spends as a person who knows that he must come to a reckoning. South.

2. To prove in the use.

Butter spent as if it came from the richer soil.
Temple.

3. To be lost or wasted.

The sound spendeth and is dissipated in the open air; but in such concaves it is conserved and contracted. Bacon.

On mountains, it may be, many dews fall, that spend before they come to the vallies. Bacon.

4. To be employed to any use.

There have been cups and an image of Jupiter made of wild vines; for the vines that they use for wine are so often cut, that their sap spendeth into the grapes. Bacon.

SPENDER. n. s. [from spend.]

1. One who spends.

Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time; but healthful, short, and apt to refresh
you. Bp. Taylor.

2. A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bishop Morton told the commissioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were sparing, to tell them that they must needs have, because they laid up; and if they were spenders, they must needs have, because it was seen in their port and manner of living.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

SPE'NDING.* n. s. [penbung, Saxon.]
Act of consuming, expending, or bestowing for any purpose.

The great mogul's wealth and revenues, treasure, or spendings. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 404.

SPE'NDTHRIFT. n. s. [spend and thrif.] A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bitter cold weather starved both the bird and the spendthrift. L'Estrange.

Some fawning usurer does feed
With present sums th' unwary spendthrift's need.
Dryden.

Most men, like spendthrift heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come. Locke.

The son, bred in sloth, becomes a spendthrift, a profligate, and goes out of the world a beggar.

Swift.

SPE'RABLE. adj. [sperabilis, Lat.] That may be hoped. Not in use.

We may cast it away, if it be found but a bladder, and discharge it of so much as is vain and not sperable. Bacon.

SPE'RATE.* adj. [speratus, Lat.] Hoped to be not irrecoverable.

We have spent much time in distinguishing between the sperate and desperate deeds of the clergy.

Repr. to Q. Anne, in Ecton's St. of Q. A.'s Bounty, (1721.) p. 108.

TO SPERE.* v. a. [piyuan, Sax.] To ask;
to enquire. Still a northern word, and in some parts pronounced spere.

SPERM. n. s. [sperme, Fr. sperma, Lat.]

Seed; that by which the species is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and some but one; this may be caused by the quantity of sperm required, or by the partitions of the womb which may sever the sperm.
Bacon.

There is required to the preparation of the sperm of animals a great apparatus of vessels, many secretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations.

Ray.

SPERMACE'TI. n. s. [Latin.] Corruptly pronounced parmasia.

A particular sort of whale affords the oil whence this is made; and that is very improperly called sperma, because it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made. It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itself being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is to shoot into flakes, not much unlike the crystallization of salts; but in this state 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankness, from which it is freed by squeezing it between warm metalline plates: at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, smooth, white, and in some measure transparent.

Quincy.

SPERMATICAL. } adj. [spermatique, Fr.]
SPERMATICK. } [from sperm.]

1. Seminal; consisting of seed.

The primordials of the world are not mechanical, but spermatical or vital. More, Div. Dial.

Metals and sundry meteors rude shapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or spermatical form, distinct from the rest or motion of the particles of the matter. More.

2. Belonging to the sperm; containing sperm.

The moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels. Bacon.

Two different sexes must concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of spermatick vessels, wherein the most spiritous part of the blood is by many digestions and circulations exalted into sperm. Ray on the Creation.

To SPERMATIZE. v. n. [from sperm.] To yield seed.

Aristotle affirming that women do not spermatize, and confer a receptacle rather than essential principles of generation, deductively includes both sexes in mankind. Brown.

SPERMATOCE'LE. n. s. [σπέρμα and κῆλη.]

A rupture caused by the contraction of the seminal vessels, and the semen falling into the scrotum. Bailey.

SPERMOLOGIST. n. s. [σπερματολόγος.] One who gathers or treats of seeds. Dict.

To SPERSE.† v. a. [sparsum, Lat.] To disperse; to scatter. A word not now in use. See To SPARSE.

The wrathful wind,
Which blows cold storms, burst out of Scythian new

That spers'd those clouds. Spenser.

To SPET.† v. a. [spæcan, Sax.] To eject from the mouth; to throw out. This is the old form of spit.

To spet out his poison; to speak the worst that he can. Barret, Adv. (1580.)

Mysterious dame,
That ne'er art call'd, but when the dragon womb
Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air. Miltons, Comus.

SPET.* n. s. [from the verb.] Spittle; matter ejected from the mouth.

The speckled trout—
Defies his foe with a fell spet.

Love, Lucast. Posth. p. 42.
To SPEW.† v. a. [speiwan, Goth. spīpan, Sax. spewen, Germ. spouwen, Teut.]

1. To vomit; to eject from the stomach.

A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder,
That in his throat him pricking softly under
His wide abyss, him forced forth to spew,
That all the sea did roar like heaven's thunder,
And all the waves were stain'd with filthy hue.

Spenser.

2. To eject; to cast forth.

When earth with slime and mud is cover'd o'er,
Or hollow places spew their watery store. Dryden.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show;
And when the fouler bottom spews the black,
The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

3. To eject with loathing.

Keep my statutes, and commit not any of these abominations, that the land spew not you out.

Lev. xviii. 28.

Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. Bacon, Ess.

To SPEW. v. n. To vomit; to ease the stomach.

He could have haul'd in
The drunkards, and the noises of the inn;
But better 'twas that they should sleep or spew,
Than in the scene to offend or him or you.

B. Jonson.

SPE'WER.* n. s. [spīpepe, Sax.] One who spews.

SPE'WINESS.* n. s. [from spewy.] Moistness; dampness.

These would in time bear good fruits, if the coldness and spewiness of the soil did not make them dwindle.

Bp. Gauden, Hierasp. (1653), p. 551.

SPE'WING.* n. s. [spīpinze, Sax.] Act of vomiting.

Shameful spewing shall be upon thy glory.
Hab. ii. 16.

SPE'WY. adj. [from spew.] Wet; foggy. A provincial word.

The lower vallies in wet winters are so spewy, that they know not how to feed them. Mortimer.

To SPHACELATE. v. a. [from sphacelus, medical Latin.] To affect with a gangrene.

The long retention of matter sphacelates the brain. Sharp.

To SPHACELATE. v. n. To mortify; to suffer the gangrene.

The skin, by the great distension, having been rendered very thin, will, if not taken away, sphacellate, and the rest degenerate into a cancerous ulcer.

Sharp.

SPHACELUS. n. s. [σφακέλος.] sphacele, Fr.] A gangrene; a mortification.

It is the ground of inflammation, gangrene, sphacelus. Wise man.

SPHERE. n. s. [sphere, French; sphæra, Latin.]

1. A globe; an orbicular body; a body of which the centre is at the same distance from every point of the circumference.

First the sun, a mighty sphere, he fram'd.
Milton, P. L.

2. Any globe of the mundane system.

What if within the moon's fair shining sphere,
What if in every other star unseen,
Of other worlds he happily should hear?

Spenser, F. Q.

And then mortal ears
Had heard the music of the spheres. Dryden.

3. A globe representing the earth or sky.

Two figures on the sides emboss'd appear;
Conon, and what's his name who made the sphere,
And shew'd the seasons of the sliding year?

Dryden.

4. Orb; circuit of motion.

Half unsung, but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere. Milton, P. L.

5. Province; compass of knowledge or action; employment. [From the sphere of activity ascribed to the power emanating from bodies.]

To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Of enemies he could not but contract good store, while moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre. King Charles.

Every man, versed in any particular business, finds fault with these authors, so far as they treat of matters within his sphere. Addison, Freeholder.

Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to the æthereal kind. Pope.

The hermit's pray'r permitted, not approv'd,
Soon in an higher sphere Eulogius mov'd. Harte.

To SPHERE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in a sphere.

The glorious planet Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the rest, whose med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil. Shakspeare.

2. To form into roundness.

Light from her native east
To journey through the airy gloom began,
Spher'd in a radiant cloud; for yet the sun
Was not. Milton, P. L.

SPHE'RICAL. } adj. [spherique, Fr. from SPHE'RIK. } sphere.]

1. Round; orbicular; globular.

What descent of waters could there be in a spherical and round body, wherein there is not high nor low. Raleigh.

Though sounds spread round, so that there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they go farthest in the forelines from the first local impulsion of the air. Bacon.

By discernment of the moisture drawn up in vapours, we must know the reason of the spherical figures of the drops. Clavius.

A fluid mass necessarily falls into a spherical surface. Keil.

Where the central nodule was globular, the inner surface of the first crust would be spherick; and if the crust was in all parts of the same thickness, that whole crust would be spherical.

Woodward on Fossils.

2. Planetary; relating to orbs of the planets.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains by spherical predominance. Shakspeare.

SPHE'RICALITY.† adv. [from spherical.] In form of a sphere.

Birds build their nests spherically.
Wotton, Rem. p. 14.

SPHE'RICALNESS. } n. s. [from sphere.]
SPHE'RICITY. } Roundness; rotundity; globsity.

Such bodies receive their figure and limits from such lets as hinder them from attaining to that sphericalness they aim at. Digby.

Water consists of small, smooth, spherical particles: their smoothness makes 'em slip easily upon one another; the sphericity keeps 'em from touching one another in more points than one.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

SPHE'RICKS.* n. s. pl. The doctrine of the sphere.

SPHE'ROID. n. s. [σφαῖρα and εἶδος.] spher-uide, Fr.] A body oblong or oblate, approaching to the form of a sphere.

They are not solid particles, by the necessity they are under to change their figures into oblong spheroids, in the capillary vessels. Cheyne.

SPHE'ROIDICAL. } adj. [from spheroid.]
SPHE'ROIDAL. } Having the form of a spheroid.

If these corpuscles be spheroidal, or oval, their shortest diameters must not be much greater than those of light. Cheyne.

If the surface of the earth was covered with water, it would put on a spheroidal, or egg-like figure. Adams on the Globes.

SPHE'ROIDITY.* n. s. [from spheroid.] Deviation from a sphere. Mason.

The orbit of the earth has an eccentricity more than double in proportion to the spheroidity of its globe. Adams.

SPHE'RULE. n. s. [sphærule, Lat.] A little globe.

Mercury is a collection of exceeding small, vastly heavy spherules. Cheyne.

SPHERY.* adj. [from sphere.]

1. Spherical; round.

What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
Made me compare with Hermia's spheric eye?
Shakespeare, M. N. Dream.

2. Belonging to the spheres.

Mortals, that would follow me,
Love Virtue; she alone is free:
She can teach ye how to climb
Higher than the spheric chime. Milton, Comus.

SPHINCTER.* n. s. [sphincter, Lat.] One of the circular and constrictory muscles of the human body.

SPHINX.* n. s. [σφίγξ.]

The sphinx was a famous monster in Egypt, that remained by conjoined Nilus, having the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peacham on Drawing.

SPIAL.* n. s. [espial, Fr.] A spy; a scout; a watcher. Obsolete.

His ears be as spials, alarum to crie. Tusser.
He privy spials plac'd in all his way,
To weet what course he takes, and how he fares. Spenser.

For he by faithful spial was assured
That Egypt's king was forward on his way. Fairfax.

Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magistrates and officers. Bacon.

SPICE.† n. s. [espices, Fr.]

1. A vegetable production, fragrant to the smell and pungent to the palate; an aromatic substance used in sauces.

Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream. Shakespeare.

Is not manhood, learning, gentleness, and virtue,
the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Garlick, the northern spice, is in mighty request among the Indians. Temple.

High sauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

2. A small quantity, as of spice to the thing seasoned. Dr. Johnson. — Spice, in this sense, means a sample, a specimen; and is perhaps no other than the old word spece, (Fr. espece), which was used for sort or species; as, "species of things and progressions," Chaucer, Kn. Tale; and, "every speece of storm," B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd. Mr. Tyrwhitt has also given spice as a reading of Chaucer, according to this meaning: "How many maneres ben of actions, — how many spices there ben of penance." Persones Tale.

Think what they have done,
And then run stark mad; for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it. Shakespeare.

It containeth singular relations, not without some spice or sprinkling of all learning. Brown, Vulg. Err.

So in the wicked there's no vice,
Of which the saints have not a spice. Hudibras.

To SPICE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with spice; to mix with aromatic bodies.

His mother was a vot'ress of my order,
And in the spiced Indian air by night
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shaks.

With a festivity
She'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread
With flow'ry poysons. Chapman.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great-grand-children of thy praises grow;

And so, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.

What though some have a freight
Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail? Herbert.

2. To render nice; to season with scruples. This figurative sense escaped Dr. Johnson.

Come near, my spouse, —
Ye shouldest be al patient and meke,
And han a swete spiced conscience. Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prol.

They dallied out the matter like Chaucer's friar at the first, under pretence of a spiced holiness. Questions of Profitable Concernings, (1594,) p. 15.
You have such a spic'd consideration,
Such qualms upon your worship's conscience!
Beaumont and Fl. Chances.

SPICER.* n. s. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.

Names have been derived from occupations, as Salter and Spicer. Camden.

SPICERY.* n. s. [espiceries, Fr. from spice.]

1. The commodity of spices. Their camels were laden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

She in whose body
The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africa, and the unknown rest,
Were easily found. Donne.

2. A repository of spices.

The spicery, the cellar, and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Addison on Italy.

SPICK and SPAN.† [This expression I should not have expected to have found authorised by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from ppannan, to stretch, Saxon; expandere, Lat. whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth newly extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters: it is however a low word. Dr. Johnson. — In Dutch they say spikspelder-nieuw; and spijker means a warehouse or magazine. Spil, or spel, means a spindle, schiet-spiel, the weaver's shuttle; and spoelder, the shuttle-thrower. In Dutch, therefore, spikspelder-nieuw means new from the warehouse and the loom. In German they say span-neu and funckel-neu. Spange means any thing shining; as funckel means to glitter or sparkle. In Danish, funckel-ny. In Swedish, spitt-spangande-ny. In English we say spick and span-new, fire-new, brand-new. The two last, brand and fire, speak for themselves. Spick and span-new means shining new from the warehouse. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, i. 527. — Dr. Jamieson considers our expression as perhaps a corruption of the Su. Goth. sping spaangande ny; which Ihre derives from spinga, a chip or splint, from spaan, the same; as the Sax. ppon also is. This, carrying us to the Scottish split-new and the German splitter-new, is intended to explain our phrase, "new as a splinter or chip from the block." A writer in the Gent. Mag. for March 1755, imagines it to be a corruption of the Italian spiccata da la spanna, "snatched from the hand, opus ablatum incude; or, according to another expression of our own, fresh from the mint; in all which the same idea is conveyed by a different metaphor."] Quite new; now first used.

While the honour thou hast got,
Is spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely. Buller.

They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. Burnet.

I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPICKNEL.* n. s. [meum, Lat.] The herb maldmony or bearwort. Dict.

SPICY.* adj. [from spice.]

1. Producing spice; abounding with aromatics.

Off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabeau odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest; with such delay
Well pleas'd they slack their course; and many a league, Milton, P. L.

Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles.

For them the Idumean balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceilon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

2. Aromatic; having the qualities of spice.

The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscosity. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Under southern skies exalt their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPICO'SITY.* n. s. [spica, Lat.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn; fulness of ears. Dict.

To SPICULATE.* v. a. [spicula, Lat.] To make sharp at the point.

Plant thy thick row of thorns, and, to defend
Their infant shoots, beneath, on oaken stakes,
Extend a rail of elm, securely arm'd
With spiculated paling, in such sort
As, round some citadel, the engineer
Directs his sharp stoccard. Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 2.

SPIDER.† n. s. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spin; Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπίς, to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from spieden, Dutch, speyden, Danish, to spy, to lie upon the catch. Dop, bopa, Saxon, is a beetle, or properly an humble bee, or stingless bee. May not spider be spy dor, the insect that watches the dor? Dr. Johnson. — Ingeniosissima et autore acutissima digna est origo, quam adducit Johnson ab Angl. spy, (Sueth. spēja, insidiosè speculanti,) et Sax. dop, musca quædam. Ast ut ab ipso recedam, et cum Skinnero, rescisso n, à spinna (spinner) emanatam vocem statuum, suadet analogia linguarum affinium. Serenius.] The animal that spins a web for flies.

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Shaks.

The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand
The innocent to free. Drayton.

Insidious, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no officious damsel's broom;
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,
And spread thy banners round my room;

While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confined to noisome garret,
And rudely banish'd rooms of state. Dr. Littleton.
The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line.

Pope.

SPIDER-CATCHER. n. s. [from spider and catcher; piscus murarius, Lat.] A bird.
SPIDERLIKE.* adj. [spider and like.] Resembling a spider in shape or quality.

Spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

I can bend my body no farther than it is bent by nature. For this reason, when ladies drop a fan or glove, I am not the first to take them up; and often restrain my inclination to perform those little services, rather than expose my spider-like shape.
Hay, Ess. on Deformity, p. 18.

SPIDERWORT. n. s. [phalangium, Latin.] A plant with a lilyflower, composed of six petals.
Miller.

SPINGEL. n. s. [meum, Latin.] A plant. See SPICKNEL.

SPINGOT. n. s. [spijcker, Dutch.] A pin or peg put into the faucet to keep in the liquor.

Base Hungarian wight, wilt thou' the spigot wield?
Shakespeare.
Take out the spigot, and clap the point in your mouth.
Swift.

SPIKE.† n. s. [spica, Lat.]

1. An ear of corn.
Drawn up in ranks and files, the bearded spikes
Guard it from birds as with a stand of pikes.
Denham.

Suffering not the yellow beards to rear,
He tramples down the spikes, and intercepts the year.
Dryden.

The gleaners,
Spike after spike, their sparing harvest pick.
Thomson.

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear of corn. [spik, Su. Goth.]

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oaken timber; and we need not borrow of any other iron for spikes, or nails to fasten them.
Bacon.

The head of your medal would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower.
Dryden.

He wears on his head the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun.
Addison.

SPIKE. n. s. A smaller species of lavender.
The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated.
Hill, Mat. Med.

TO SPIKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with long nails.
Lay long planks upon them, pinned or spiked down to the pieces of oak on which they lie.
Moxon, Mech. Ex.

Lay long planks upon them, spiking or pinning them down fast.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To set with spikes.
A youth, leaping over the spiked pales, was suddenly frightened down, and in his falling he was caught by those spikes.
Wiseman.

3. To make sharp at the end.

SPIKED.* adj. [from spike.] Having ears, or those parts which contain seeds.

The clover white,
That in a spiked ball collects its sweets.
Mason, Eng. Gard. B. 2.

SPIKENARD. n. s. [spica nardi, Lat.] A plant, and the oil or balsam produced from the plant.

It grows plentifully in Java. It has been known to the medical writers of all ages.
Hill, Mat. Med.

A woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, brake and poured it on his head.
St. Mark, xiv. 3.

He cast into the pile bundles of myrrh, and sheaves of spikenard, enriching it with every spicy shrub.
Spectator.

SPIKY.* adj. [from spike.] Having a sharp point.

The tapering pyramid, the Egyptian's pride,
And wonder of the world; whose spiky top
Has wounded the thick cloud.
R. Blair, The Grave.

Leicesterian fleeces, which the sinewy arm
Combs through the spiky steel in lengthen'd flakes.
Dyer, Fleece.

SPILL.† n. s. [spijlen, Dutch.]

1. A small shiver of wood, or thin bar of iron; a splinter.

The oysters, besides gathering by hand, have a peculiar dredge, which is a thick strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern.
Carew.

The smallest spill, or mote, is restless agony to the eye; it never leaves to force out tears.
Allestree, Serm. (1684), P. II. p. 75.

Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole, stopped with a spill.
Mortimer.

2. A small quantity of money. I know not whence derived.

The bishops, who consecrated this ground, were wont to have a spill or sportule from the credulous laity.
Ayliffe.

3. A small slip of paper. The word has lately been revived, Mr. Archdeacon Nares observes, in order to this signification. Mr. Jennings states it as now a West Country word for a stalk, particularly that which is long and straight.

TO SPILL. v. a. [ppillan, Saxon; spillen, Dutch; spilla, Icelandic.]

1. To shed; to lose by shedding.
Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt.
Shakespeare.

Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.
Shakespeare, Timon.

Themselves exact their cruelty,
And I constrained am this blood to spill.
Daniel, Civ. War.

They having spill'd much blood, and done much waste,

Subduing nations; and achiev'd thereby
Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey,
Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth.
Milton, P. L.

Medea must not draw her murth'ring knife,
And spill her children's blood upon the stage.
Roscommon.

Orbellan did disgrace
With treacherous deeds our mighty mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spilt,
What is it less than to partake his guilt? Dryden.

Nor the Centaur's tale
Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflam'd, they fought and spilt their drunken souls
At feasting hour.
Philips.

2. To destroy; to mischief.

Thus is our thought with pain of thistle tilled,
Thus be our noblest parts dried up with sorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much minding spilled.
Sidney.

Why are you so fierce and cruel?
Is it because your eyes have power to kill?
Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory think to save than spill.
Spenser.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ingrateful man. Shakespeare, X. Lear.

Be not angry with these fires;
For then their threats will kill me:
Nor look too kind on my desires;
For then my hopes will spill me.
B. Jonson.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together:
Nor are their forms by rash encounters spill'd;
For there they stand, and neither toucheth either.
Davies.

3. To throw away.

This sight shall damp the raging ruffian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword arrest.
Tickell.

TO SPILL. v. n.

1. To waste; to be lavish.
Thy father bids thee spare, and chides for spilling.
Sidney.

2. To be shed; to be lost by being shed.
He was so toptful of himself, that he let it spill on all the company: he spoke well indeed, but he spoke too long.
Watts.

SPILLER. n. s. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of fishing line.

In harbour they are taken by spillers made of a cord, to which divers shorter are tied at a little distance, and to each of these a hook is fastened with a bait: this spiller they sink in the sea where those fishes have their accustomed haunt. Carew.

SPILT.* part. adj. [perhaps intended for spelt, i. e. divided. See TO SPELT.] Variegated.

Though all the pillows of the one were gilt,
And all the other's pavement were with yvory spilt.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 5.

SPILTH. n. s. [from spill.] Any thing poured out or wasted.

Our vaults have wept with drunken spilth of wine.
Shakespeare.

TO SPIN.† v. a. preter. spun or span; part. spun. [spinnan, Goth. ppinnan, Sax. spinnen, Germ. and Dutch; spinia, Icel. from spenna, to extend, to draw out. Serenius.]

1. To draw out into threads.
The women spun goats' hair. En. xxxv. 26.

2. To form threads by drawing out and twisting any filamentous matter.

You would be another Penelope; yet all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakespeare.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue;
The finest of the wool is left for you. Dryden.

3. To protract; to draw out.

By one delay after another they spin out their whole lives, till there's no more future left before 'em.
L'Estrange.

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No, let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last.
Addison, Cato.

4. To form by degrees; to draw out tediously.

I passed lightly over many particulars, on which learned and witty men might spin out large volumes.
Digby.

If his cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against intangling property, spinning out causes, and squeezing clients.
Collier.

Men of large thoughts and quick apprehensions are not to expect any thing here, but what, being spun out of my own coarse thoughts, is fitted to men of my own size.
Locke.

The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say:
Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day. Pope.

5. To put into a turning motion, as a boy's top.

To SPIN. v. n.

1. To exercise the art of spinning, or drawing threads.

We can fling our legs and arms upwards and downwards, backwards, forwards, and round, as they that spin. More.

Ten thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;

Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,

They neither know to spin, nor care to toil.

Prior.

For this Alcides learn'd to spin;

His cure laid down, and lion's skin. Prior.

2. [Spigare, Italian.] To stream out in a thread or small current.

Together furiously they ran,

That to the ground came horse and man;

The blood out of their helmets span,

So sharp were their encounters.

Drayton, Nymphid.

3. To move round as a spindle.

Whether the sun, predominant in heaven,

Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun,

He from the east his flaming road begin,

Or she from west her silent course advance

With inoffensive pace, that spinning sleeps

On her soft axle, while she paces even,

And bears thee soft with the smooth air along,

Solicit not thy thoughts. Milton, P. L.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,

Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;

Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,

The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.

SPINACH. } n. s. [spinachia, Lat.] A plant.

SPINAGE. }

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which, in some sorts, have thorns adhering to them. Miller.

Spinage is an excellent herb crude, or boiled.

Mortimer.

SPINAL. adj. [spina, Lat.] Belonging to the back bone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are somewhat analogous thereto.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain and spinal marrow, which by their bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the stamina or threads of the solid parts. Arbutnot.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall

Lux'd his joint neck, and spinal marrow bruise'd.

Philips.

SPINDLE. n. s. [spinbēl, spinbēl, Saxon.]

1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Bodies fibrous by moisture incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing; as appeareth by the twisting of thread, and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.

Sing to those that hold the vital sheers,

And turn the adamantine spindle round

On which the fate of gods and men is wound.

Milton, Arcades.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons.

Jasper Maine.

So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew,
And when Imperial Jove appear'd in view,
Resum'd her female arts, the spindle and the clew;

VOL. III.

Forgot the sceptre she so well had sway'd,
And with that mildness, she had rul'd, obey'd.

Stepney.

Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred tamely to the spindle and the loom?

A. Philips.

2. A long slender stalk.

The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in heights, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break. Mortimer.

3. Any thing slender. In contempt.

Repose yourself, if those spindle legs of yours will carry you to the next chair.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

The marriage of one of our heires with an eminent courtier gave us spindle shanks and cramps.

Tatter.

To SPINDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into a long small stalk.

Another ill accident in drought is the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

When the flowers begin to spindle, all but one or two of the biggest, at each root, should be nipped off. Mortimer.

SPINDLELEGGED.† } adj. [spindle and SPINDLESHANKED. } shank.] Having small legs.

Many great families are insensibly fallen off from the athletic constitution of their progenitors, and are dwindled away into a pale, sickly, spindle-legged generation of valetudinarians.

Tatter, No. 148.

Her lawyer is a little ravelled, spindle-shanked gentleman. Addison.

SPINDLETREE.† n. s. [enonymus, Latin.]

Prickwood. A plant.

There is a shrub called the spindle-tree, commonly growing in our hedges, which bears a very hard wood. Evelyn.

SPINE. n. s. [spina, Lat.] The back bone.

The rapier entered his right side, reaching within a finger's breadth of the spine. Wiseman, Surgery.

There are who think the marrow of a man,

Which in the spine, while he was living, ran;

When dead, the pith corrupted will become

A snake, and hiss within the hollow tomb. Dryd.

SPINE.† n. s. [espine, Fr. spina, Lat.] A thorn.

Roses, their sharp spines being gone.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

SPINEL. n. s. A sort of mineral.

Spinel ruby is of a bright red; red; it is softer than the rock or balass ruby. Woodward.

SPINET.† n. s. [espinette, French; spinetta, Ital.] A small harpsichord; an instrument with keys.

When miss delights in her spinnet,

A fiddler may his fortune get. Swift.

SPINET.† n. s. [spinetum, Lat.] A small wood; a place where briars and bushes grow.

In this sense spiny is still used in some of our midland counties.

The invention was to have a satyr lodged in a little spinet, — who advanced his head above the top of the wood, &c.

B. Jonson, Entert. at Althorpe.

SPINIFEROUS. adj. [spina and fero, Lat.] Bearing thorns.

SPINK.† n. s. [spinckot, Su. Gothick. Dr. Jamieson has overpassed this derivation of our word. Dr. Johnson has offered none. And Mr. Moor, in his Suffolk Words, applying spink, as indeed in other places it is applied, to the chaffinch, says, "that the origin of this appellation is difficult to imagine, and would perhaps be impossible to trace."

A finch; a bird.

Want sharpens poesy, and grief adorns;
The spinck chaunts sweetest in a hedge of thorns.

Harte.

SPINNER.† n. s. [from spin.]

1. One skilled in spinning.

A practised spinner shall spin a pound of wool worth two shillings for sixpence. Graunt.

2. A garden spider with long jointed legs.

Weaving spiders come not here!

Hence, you long-legg'd spinners, hence! Shaks.

3. The common spider that spins webs for flies.

Spynners ben tokens of divynation, and of knowing what wether shal fal.

Transl. of Bartholom. de Prop. Rer. fol. 314.

Where the bee gathereth honey, even there the spinner gathereth venome.

Latimer in Fox's Acts and Mon.

SPINNING Wheel. n. s. [from spin.]

The wheel by which, since the disuse of the rock, the thread is drawn.

My spinning wheel and rake,

Let Susan keep for her dear sister's sake. Gay.

SPINNY.† adj. I suppose small, slender.

A barbarous word. Dr. Johnson. —

It is an old, however barbarous word, which Dr. Johnson might have shewn

by the following example.

The Italians proportion it [beauty,] big and plum; the Spaniards, spynie and lanke; and amongst us, one would have her white, another brown. Flor. Tr. of Montaigne, (1613), p. 269.

They plow it early in the year, and then there will come some spinny grass that will keep it from scalding. Mortimer.

SPINNY, or SPINNY.† n. s. A small wood.

See SPINET.

SPINOSITY.† n. s. [spinus, Lat.] Crabbedness; thorny or briary perplexity.

The spinosity of harsh and dry opinions.

More, Myst. of Godliness, p. 276.

Philosophy consisted of nought but dry spinosities, lean notions, and endless alterations about things of nothing. Glanville.

SPINOUS.† adj. [spinus, Lat.] Thorny;

full of thorns.

Our senses are pricked and wounded with this spinous or thorny matter.

W. Mountague, Den. Ess. P. I. (1648), p. 72.

SPINSTER.† n. s. [from spin, Su. Goth. spinnersta.]

1. A woman that spins.

The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,

And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,

Do use to chaunt it. Shaks. Tw. Night.

One Michael Cassio,

That never set a squadron in the field,

Nor the division of a battle knows

More than a spinster. Shaks. Othello.

2. [In law.] The general term for a girl or maiden woman.

If a gentlewoman be termed spinster, she may abate the writ. Sir E. Coke.

I desire that a yearly annuity of twenty pounds shall be paid to Rebecca Dingley of the city of Dublin, spinster, during her life. Swift.

SPINSTRY.† n. s. [from spinster.] The work of spinning.

What new decency can then be added to this by your spinstry?

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2. ch. 2.

SPINNY.† adj. [spina, Latin.] Thorny; briary; perplexed; difficult; troublesome.

The first attempts are always imperfect ; much more in so difficult and spiny an affair as so nice a subject. Digby.

The spiny desarts of scholastick philosophy. Warburton on Prod. p. 61.

SPIRACLE. n. s. [spiraculum, Latin.] A breathing hole ; a vent ; a small aperture.

Most of these spiracles perpetually send forth fire, more or less. Woodward.

SPIRAL. adj. [spiral, French ; from spira, Lat.] Curve ; winding ; circularly involved, like a screw.

The process of the fibres in the ventricles, running in spiral lines from the tip to the base of the heart, shews that the systole of the heart is a muscular constriction, as a purse is shut by drawing the strings contrary ways. Ray.

Why earth or sun diurnal stages keep ? In spiral tracts why through the zodiac creep ? Blackmore.

The intestinal tube affects a straight, instead of a spiral cylinder. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SPIRALLY. adv. [from spiral.] In a spiral form.

The sides are composed of two orders of fibres running circularly or spirally from base to tip. Ray on the Creation.

SPIRATION. † n. s. [spiratio, Lat.] Breathing.

To other substances, void of corporeal bulk and concretion, the name of spirit is assigned to imply the manner of their origin, because God did, by a kind of spiration, produce them. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 84.

SPIRE. † n. s. [spire, old Fr. spira, Ital. and Lat. spira, Su. Goth.]

1. A curve line ; any thing wreathed or contorted, every wreath being in a different plane ; a curl ; a twist ; a wreath. His head

Crested aloft, and caruncle his eyes ; With burnish'd neck of verdant gold, erect Amidst his circling spires, that on the grass Floated redundant. Milton, P. L.

A dragon's fiery form belied the god, Sublime on radiant spires he rode. Dryden.

Air seems to consist of spires contorted into small spheres, through the interstices of which the particles of light may freely pass ; it is light, the solid substance of the spires being very small in proportion to the spaces they take up. Cheyne.

2. Any thing growing up taper ; a round pyramid, so called perhaps because a line drawn round and round in less and less circles, would be a spire ; a steeple. With glistering spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton, P. L.

He cannot make one spire of grass more or less than he bath made. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

These pointed spires that wound the ambient sky, Inglorious change ! shall in destruction lie. Prior.

3. The top or uppermost point. 'Twere no less than a traducement, To hide your doings, and to silence that, Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd, Would seem but modest. Shaks. Coriol.

To SPIRE. † v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot up pyramically. The sithe sheers up the spiring grass. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 16.

It is not so apt to spire up as the other sorts, being more inclined to branch into arms. Mortimer.

The spiring turrets glitter through the skies. Shenstone, Judg. of Hercules.

2. [Spiro, Latin.] To breathe. Not in use.

To SPIRE.  v. a.* To shoot forth. Not in use.

In gentle ladie's breste, and bounteous race Of woman-kind, it fayrest flowre doth spyre. And beareth fruit of honour and all chaste desyre. Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 52.

SPIRED.  adj.* [from spire.] Having a steeple or spire.

Or pinnaced, or spired. Mason.

SPIRIT. † n. s. [spiritus, Lat.]

1. Breath ; wind.

All purges have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach. Bacon.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatual parts within them ; but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is ; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort ; but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The balmy spirit of the western breeze. Anon.

2. [Esprit, Fr.] An immaterial substance ; an intellectual being.

Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving do subsist. Locke.

She is a spirit ; yet not like air, or wind,

Nor like the spirits about the heart or brain ;

Nor like those spirits which alchymists do find,

When they in every thing seek gold in vain ;

For she all natures under heav'n doth pass,

Being like those spirits which God's bright face do see ;

Or like himself, whose image once she was,

Though now, alas ! she scarce his shadow be :

For of all forms she holds the first degree,

That are to gross material bodies knit ;

Yet she herself is bodiless and free,

And though confin'd is almost infinite. Davies.

I shall depend upon your constant friendship ;

like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who,

though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us. Pope.

If we seclude space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind, or body and spirit. Watts, Logick.

You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and clothing ; but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit. Law.

3. The soul of man.

The spirit shall return unto God that gave it. Ecc. xii. 7.

Look, who comes here ! a grave unto a soul,

Holding th' eternal spirit 'gainst her will

In the vile prison of afflicted breath. Shakspeare, K. John.

Every thing that you call yours, besides this spirit, is but like your clothing ; sometimes that is only to be used for a while, and then to end, and die, and wear away. Law.

4. An apparition.

They were terrified, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. St. Luke, xxiv. 37.

Perhaps you might see the image, and not the glass ; the former appearing like a spirit in the air. Bacon.

Whilst young, preserve his tender mind from all impressions of spirits and goblins in the dark. Locke.

5. Temper ; habitual disposition of mind.

He sets

Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise

Quite out their native language. Milton, P. L.

That peculiar law of christianity which forbids revenge, no man can think it grievous who considers the restless torment of a malicious and revengeful spirit. Tillotson.

Nor once disturb their heavenly spirits

With Scapin's cheats, or Caesar's merits. Prior.

Let them consider how far they are from that spirit, which prays for its most unjust enemies, if they have not kindness enough to pray for those, by whose labours and service they live in ease themselves. Law.

He is the devout man, who lives no longer on his own will, or the way and spirit of the world, but to the sole will of God. Law.

6. Ardour ; courage ; elevation ; vehemence of mind.

'Tis well blown, lads ;

This morning, like the spirit of a youth

That means to be of note, begins betimes. Shaks.

Farewell the big war,

The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing file. Shakspeare.

The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.

7. Genius ; vigour of mind.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,

Here needs me, whiles the famous ancestors

Of my most dreaded sovereign I recount,

By which all earthly princes she doth far surmount. Spenser, F. Q.

To a mighty work thou goest, O king,

That equal spirits and equal powers shall bring. Daniel.

A wild Tartar, when he spies

A man that's handsome, valiant, wise,

If he can kill him, thinks t' inherit

His wit, his beauty, and his spirit. Butler.

The noblest spirit or genius cannot deserve enough of mankind, to pretend to the esteem of heroick virtue. Temple.

8. Turn of mind ; power of mind moral or intellectual.

You were us'd

To say extremity was the trier of spirits,

That common chances common men could bear. Shakspeare.

I ask but half thy mighty spirit for me, Cowley,

A perfect judge will read each work of wit,

With the same spirit which its author writ :

Survey the whole, nor seek slight fault to find,

Where nature moves, and rapture warms the mind. Pope.

9. Intellectual powers distinct from the body.

These discourses made so deep impression upon the mind and spirit of the prince, whose nature was inclined to adventures, that he was transported with the thought of it. Clarendon.

In spirit perhaps he also saw

Rich Mexico, the seat of Montezume. Milton, P. L.

10. Sentiment ; perception.

You are too great to be by me gainssaid :

Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain. Shakspeare.

11. Eagerness ; desire.

God has changed men's tempers with the times, and made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. South.

12. Man of activity ; man of life, fire, and enterprise.

The wat'ry kingdom is no bar

To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shaks.

13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.

Romish adversaries, from the rising up of some schismatical spirits amongst us, conclude, that the main body of our church is schismatical, because some branches or members thereof were such. White.

Of pitying God did well-form'd spirits raise,

Fit for the toilsome business of their days,

To free the groaning nation, and to give

Peace first, and then the rules in peace to live. Cowley.

Such spirits as he desired to please, such would

I chase for my judges. Dryden.

14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind ; the purest part of the body, bordering, says Sydenham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.

Though thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakespeare, K. John.
When I sit and tell

The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out Into my story. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies wasted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament;
What can we know, or what can we discern?

It was the time when gentle night began
To indrench with sleep the busy spirits of man.

To sing thy praise, would Heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays.

All men by experience find the necessity and aid of the spirits in the business of concoction.

By means of the curious inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be altered.

In some fair body thus the secret soul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills the whole;
Each motion guides, and ev'ry nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in the effects remains.

He is always forced to drink a heavy glass, to drive thoughts of business out of his head, and make his spirits drowsy enough for sleep.

15. Characteristical likeness; essential qualities.

Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a descending light, which of all other doth set off men's faces in their truest spirit.

16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.
Nor doth the eye itself,

17. That which hath power or energy.
There is in wine a mighty spirit, that will not be congealed.

18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation;
as brandy, rum.

What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many different things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor.

All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach.

In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil;
if it will, it is spirit.

19. Mark to denote an aspirated pronunciation.

That the press should have stripped these broken ends of verses [Homer's] of the unnecessary and troublesome luggage of spirits and accents, is neither the compositor's nor the corrector's fault.

Dalgerno, Deaf & Dumb Man's Tutor, (1680), p. 126.
20. It may be observed, that in the poets spirit was a monosyllable, and therefore was often written sprite, or, less properly, spright.

The charge thereof unto a courteous spright
Commanded was.

To SPÍRIT.† v. a.

A man so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe begone,
Drew Priam's curtain.

Of their wonted vigour left them drain'd,
Exhausted, spiritless, afflicted, fall'n.

Much more is it needful now, against all the casualties of this life, to have an intimate and speaking help, a ready and reviving associate in marriage; whereof who misses, by chancing on a mute and spiritless mate, remains more alone than before.

Nor did all Rome, grown spiritless, supply
A man that for bold truth durst bravely die.

Art thou so base, so spiritless a slave?
Not so he bore the fate to which you doom'd him.

2. Having no breath; extinct.

The very condition of human nature admonishes us, that the spiritless body should be restored to the earth from whence it was derived.

SPÍRITLESSLY.* adv. [from spiritless.]
Without spirit; without exertion.

The same [external profession] will this church of Laodicea hold on spiritlessly and lazily, with little life or zeal.

spiritousness of the liquor, did lift up the upper surface, and for a moment form a thin film like a small hemisphere.

SPÍRITUAL. adj. [spirituel, French; from spirit.]

1. Distinct from matter; immaterial; incorporeal.

Echo is a great argument of the spiritual essence of sounds; for if it were corporeal, the repercussion should be created by like instruments with the original sound.

Both visibles and audibles in their working emit no corporeal substance into their mediums, but only carry certain spiritual species.

All creatures, as well spiritual as corporeal, declare their absolute dependence upon the first Author of all beings, the only self-existent God.

2. Mental; intellectual.
Spiritual armour, able to resist
Satan's assaults.

The same disaster has invaded his *spiritu*als;
the passions rebel; and there are so many governours,
that there can be no government.

3. Not gross; refined from external things;
relative only to the mind.

Some who pretend to be of a more spiritual and refined religion, spend their time in contemplation, and talk much of communion with God.

4. Not temporal; relating to the things of heaven; ecclesiastical.

Place man in some publick society, civil or spiritual.

Thou art reverend,
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.

Upon our spiritual convocation,

As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy did.

Those servants, who have believing masters, are forbid to withdraw any thing of their worldly respect, as presuming upon their spiritual kindred; or to honour them less, because they are become their brethren in believing.

The clergy's business lies among the laity; nor is there a more effectual way to forward the salvation of men's souls, than for spiritual persons to make themselves as agreeable as they can in the conversations of the world.

She loves them as her spiritual children, and they revere her as their spiritual mother, with an affection far above that of the fondest friends.

SPÍRITUALIST.* n. s. [from spiritual.] One who professes regard to spiritual things only; one whose employment is spiritual.

Those high-flown spiritualists, the quakers, are of the same mind.

Hallywell, Acc. of Familism, (1673), p. 19.
May not he that lives in a small thatched house — preach as loud, and to as much purpose, as one of those high and mighty spiritualists?

Echard, Gr. of the Cont. of the Cl. (ed. 1696), p. 140.
SPÍRITUALITY. n. s. [from spiritual.]

1. Incorporeity; immateriality; essence

1. One who puts meat on a spit.

2. One who spits with his mouth. Huloet.

3. A young deer. Barret.

SPITTLE.† n. s. [corrupted from hospital, and therefore better written spital, or spittal. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Gifford, the recent editor of Ben Jonson's Works, denies that spittle means generally an hospital or almshouse; and says that, with our ancestors, it had an appropriate signification, viz. a lazaret-house, a receptacle for wretches in the leprosy, and other loathsome diseases, the consequence of debauchery and vice. B. Jonson, i. 17. And see Massinger's Works, iv. 53. Mr. Gifford, therefore, opposes the use of spital or spittal in this sense. Our ancestors, however, were not uniformly thus scrupulous: — Bryand Lyle, lord of Abergervenny, having two sons both leprous, built for them a lazaretto or spittall. The Younger Brother's Apology, Oxf. 1635, p. 50. But the distinction is observed at a later period: "He should rather pity such, as knowing in himself the misery of poverty, than oppress them and rob the hospital and spittle." Bishop Richardson on the Old Test. 1655, p. 301.] A kind of hospital; a place for the reception of sick and diseased persons. It is still retained in Scotland.

To the spittle go, And from the powdering-gub of infancy Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

How largely gives, how splendidly he treats. Dryd.

He, of the royal store
Splendidly frugal, sits whole nights devoid
Of sweet repose. Philips.

SPLENDOUR. n. s. [splendeur, French; splendor, Latin.]

1. Lustre; power of shining.

Splendour hath a degree of whiteness, especially if there be a little repulsion; for a lookingglass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The dignity of gold above silver is not much;
the splendour is alike, and more pleasing to some eyes, as in cloth of silver. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

The first symptoms are a chiliness, a certain splendour or shining in the eyes, with a little moisture. Arbuthnot.

2. Magnificence; pomp.

Romulus, being to give laws to his new Romans, found no better way to procure an esteem and reverence to them, than by first procuring it to himself by splendour of habit and retinue. South.

'Tis use alone that sanctifies expense,
And splendour borrows all her rays from sense. Pope.

SPLENDROUS.* adj. [from splendour.] Having splendour. Not in use.

Mankind sprang from one common original; whence this tradition would be universally diffused.

Tillotson.

SPRAT. n. s. [sprot, Dutch; sarda, Lat.] A small sea-fish.

So oft in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brings.

Sidney.

All sprats do lay for porke and sowse,
For sprats and spurtings for their house. Tusser.

Of round fish there are brit, sprat, barn, smelts.

Carew.

To SPRAWL.† v. n. [spradle, Danish; spar-telen, Dutch; spralla, Su. Goth.]

1. To struggle as in the convulsions of death.

Hang the child that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul. Shakespeare.

Some lie sprawling on the ground,
With many a gash and bloody wound. Hudibras.

2. To tumble, or creep with much agitation and contortion of the limbs.

The birds were not fledged, but upon sprawling and struggling to get clear of the flame, down they tumbled.

L'Estrange.

Telamon happ'd to meet
A rising rook that held his fasten'd feet;

So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound.

Dryden.

Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl. Prior.

Did the stars do this feat once only, which gave beginning to human race; who were then there in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches?

Bentley.

He ran, he leapt into a flood,
There sprawl'd a while, and scarce got out,
All cover'd o'er with slime. Swift.

SPRAY.† n. s. [of the same race with sprit and spout. Dr. Johnson. — Rather of the same race with sprig; which see.]

1. The extremity of a branch.

At sight whereof each bird that sits on spray
And every beast that to his den was fled,

Come forth afresh out of their late dismay,
And to the light lift up their drooping head.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;

Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days.

Shakespeare.

The wind that whistles through the sprays
Maintains the consort of the song;
And hidden birds with native lays

The golden sleep prolong. Dryden.

2. The foam of the sea: commonly written spry.

Winds raise some of the salt with the spray. Arbutnot.

To SPREAD.† v. a. [ppæban, ppæban, Saxon; spreyden, Teut. Serenius, noticing the Swed. sprida, expandere, refers it to breda, dilatare, bred, latus. In like manner the Sax. bræban, dilatare, and bræb, breadth, brab, broad, are to be noticed. Spenser has once, for the sake of his rhyme, written the participle sprad, R. Q. vi. ii. 5. Spred was, anciently, common.]

1. To extend; to expand; to make to cover or fill a larger space than before.

He bought a field where he had spread his tent. Gen. xxiii.

Rizpah spread sackcloth for her upon the rock. 2 Sam. xxi.

Faire attendants then,

The sheets and bedding of the man of men,
Within a cabin of the hollow keele,

Spred and made soft. Chayman.

Make the trees more tall, more spread, and more hasty than they use to be. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarslish. Jer. x.

Shall funeral eloquence her colours spread,
And scatter roses on the wealthy dead? Young.

2. To cover by extension.

Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face.

Granville.

3. To cover over.

The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold.

Isa. xl. 19.

4. To stretch; to extend.

Spred o'er the silver waves thy golden hair. Shakespeare.

He arose from kneeling, with his hands spread up to heaven, and he blessed the congregation.

1 Kings, viii. 54.

The stately trees fast spread their branches.

Milton, P. L.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
Fast by his side Pisistratus lay spread,

In age his equal, on a splendid bed. Pope.

5. To publish; to divulge; to disseminate.

They, when departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country. St. Matth. ix. 31.

6. To emit as effluvia or emanations; to diffuse.

Their course through thickest constellations held,
They spread their bane. Milton, P. L.

To SPREAD. v. n. To extend or expand itself.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension only of their spreading and ambitious designs.

Bacon.

Plants, if they spread much, are seldom tall.

Bacon.

Great Pan, who wont to chase the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there.

Addison, Cato.

The valley opened at the further end, spreading forth into an immense ocean.

Addison.

SPREAD.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Extent; compass.

Professions of Christianity that have any large spread in the world.

Abp. Usher, Serm. (Ans. to the Jesuit,) p. 21.

I have got a fine spread of improvable lands, and am already ploughing up some, fencing others.

Addison.

2. Expansion of parts.

No flower hath spread like that of the woodbind.
Bacon.

SPREADER.† n. s. [from spread.]

1. One that spreads.

By conforming ourselves we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from Papists by our conformity with them in ceremonies.
Hooker.

2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.

If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news.
Swift.

3. One that expands or extends.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet perchance he may yield, though with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other.
Watton on Education.

SPREADING.* n. s. [from spread.] Act of extending or expanding.

Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle? Job, xxxvi. 29.

SPRENT. part. [from sprene, to sprinkle, pppenzan, pppenan, Saxon; sprengen, Dutch.] Sprinkled. Obsolete.

O lips, that kiss'd that hand with my tears sprent.
Sidney.

SPREY.* adj. Spruce. Exm. dial. See SPRUCE.

SPRIG.† n. s. [brig, Welsh, a twig, shoot, or sprig, of a tree: the English spring seems to be hence derived, q. d. ys brig, Davies, and Richards. Nevertheless, Dr. Johnson considers it of the same race with spring; and Serenius, not however overpassing the Welsh word, refers it also to the Swedish spricka: as, loefven spricka ut, the leaves come out.]

1. A small branch; a spray.

The substance is true ivy; after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some spring to keep.
Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears

A spring of bays in fifty years;

While every fool his claim alleges,

As if it grew in common hedges.
Swift.

2. A brad or nail without a head.

To SPRIG.* v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small branches; to work in sprigs.
Ash.

SPRIG Crystal. n. s.

In perpendicular fissures, crystal is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other lessening gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries spring or rock crystal.
Woodward.

SPRINGGY.† adj. [from spring.] Full of small branches.
Sherwood.

SPRIGHT. n. s. [contraction of spirit, spiritus, Latin; it was anciently written sprete, or spryte; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives spritely, spriteful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display

The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way.

To bear the message of her spright. Spenser, F. Q.

Forth he called out of deep darkness dread
Legions of sprights, the which, like little flies,

Fluttering about his ever damned head,
Await whereto their service he applies.

Spenser, F. Q.

While with heav'nly charity she spoke,
A streaming blaze the silent shadows broke;
The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,
And gaping graves received the guilty spright.
Dryden.

2. Walking spirit; apparition.

The ideas of goblins and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again.
Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

O chastity, the chief of heavenly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights:
To only thee my constant course I bear,
Till spotless soul unto thy bosom fly,
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in use.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a spright.

A ludicrous use.

I am sprighted with a fool. Shakspeare, Cymb.

SPRIGHTFUL. adj. [spright and full.]

Lively; brisk; gay; vigorous.

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. —
— Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman.
Shakspeare.

Steeds sprightful as the light. Cowley.

Happy my eyes when they behold thy face:

My heavy heart will leave its doleful beating,

At sight of thee, and bound with sprightful joys.
Otway.

SPRIGHTFULLY. adv. [from sprightful.]

Briskly; vigorously.

Norfolk, sprightfully and bold,

Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.
Shakspeare.

SPRIGHTFULNESS.* n. s. [from sprightful.]

Sprightliness; gaiety; vivacity.

Sharpness of apprehension is a sprightfulness of the mind, and is there liveliest where there be most spirits.
Hammond, Works, iv. 629.

SPRIGHTLESS.† adj. [from spright.] Dull; enervated; sluggish.

Cloths, and images of men,

But sprightless trunks.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599.) Pref.

Are you grown

Benumb'd with fear, or virtue's sprightless cold?
Cowley.

I could not but reflect on the absurdity of parents, who educate crowds to spend their time in pursuit of such cold and sprightless endeavours to appear in publick.
Tatler, No. 197.

SPRIGHTLINESS. n. s. [from sprightly.]

Liveliness; briskness; vigour; gaiety; vivacity.

The soul is clogged when she acts in conjunction with a companion so heavy; but in dreams, observe with what sprightliness and alacrity does she exert herself.
Addison.

SPRIGHTLY. adj. [from spright.] Gay;

brisk; lively; vigorous; airy; vivacious.

Produce the wine that makes us bold,

And sprightly wit and love inspires. Dryden.

When now the sprightly trumpet from afar

Had giv'n the signal of approaching war. Dryden.

Each morn' they wak'd me with a sprightly lay:

Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladsome day.
Prior.

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green;

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen. Pope.

To SPRING. v. n. pret. sprung or sprang, anciently sprong; part. sprung. [ppunzan, Sax. springen, Dutch.]

1. To arise out of the ground and grow by vegetative power.

All blest secrets,

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,

Sprung with my tears; be aidant and remediate

In the good man's distress. Shakspeare.

To his music, plants and flowers

Ever sprung, as sun and showers

There had made a lasting spring.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth,
Job, xxxviii. 27.

Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprung up and increased. St. Mark, iv. 8.

Tell me, in what happy fields

The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope.

2. To begin to grow.

That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not sprung, are effects of Providence. Ray.

3. To proceed as from seed.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves; and in the second year that which springs of the same. 2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,

Giving no ground unto the house of York,

They never then had sprung like summer flies.
Shakspeare.

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips

it part,

And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart.
Pope.

5. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear or to exist.

When the day began to spring, they let her go.
Judges.

To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up. St. Matth. iv. 16.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,

Taint not the pure streams of the springing day

With your dull influence: it is for you

To sit and scoule upon night's heavy brow.
Crashaw.

Do not blast my springing hopes,

Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul.
Rowe.

6. To issue with effect or force.

Swift fly the years, and rise the expected morn!

Oh spring to light, auspicious babe, be born!
Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors, or a country.

How youngly he began to serve his country,

How long continued; and what stock he springs

of;

The noble house of Marcius. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Our Lord sprung out of Judea. Heb. vii. 14.

All these

Shall, like the brethren sprung of dragons' teeth,

Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em.
B. Jonson.

Heroes of old, by rapine, and by spoil,

In search of fame did all the world embroil;

Thus to their gods each then ally'd his name,

This sprung from Jove, and that from Titan came.
Granville.

8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to spring

Out of despair. Milton, P. L.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and descend

by the same rules. Locke.

9. To grow; to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring?
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to rush hastily; to appear suddenly.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shakespeare.

He called for a light, and sprang in and fell before Paul. Acts.

When Heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again;

Then sprang she forth, they follow'd her amain. Dryden.

Afraid to sleep;
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap
She sprang from bed. Dryden.

Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life; and, fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

See, aw'd by Heaven, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;
And, springs from her disappointed arms,
Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Blackmore.

The mountain stag, that springs
From height to height, and bounds along the plains,

Nor has a master to restrain his course;
That mountain stag would Vaneer rather be,
Than be a slave. Philips, Briton.

11. To fly with elastick power; to start.

A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer, Husbandry.

12. To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers, when their game will spring. Ottway.

A covey of partridges springs in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

13. To issue from a fountain.

Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springs water. Gen. xvi. 19.

Let the wide world his praises sing;
Where Tagus and Euphrates spring;
And from the Danube's frosty banks to those Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Roscommon.

14. To proceed as from a source.

'Tis true from force the noblest title springs,
I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light Sprung through the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright:

The power, behold! the pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.

The friendly gods a springs gale enlarg'd,
The fleet swift tilting o'er the surges flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope.

To SPRING. v. a.

1. To start; to rouse game.

Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose:
Now negligent of sport I lie;
And now, as other fawknars use,

I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die;
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Donne.

That sprung the game you were to set,
Before you 'd time to draw the net. Hudibras.

A large cock-pheasant he sprung in one of the neighbouring woods. Addison, Spect.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.

See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
The scent grows warm; he stops, he springs the prey. Gay.

2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse, surpris'd with fright,
Starts up, and leaves her bed, and springs a light. Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,

And would not be oblig'd to God for more:
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!

These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But drop from heaven, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light. Dryden.

He that has such a burning zeal, and springs such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Collier.

3. To make by starting, applied to a ship.

People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has sprung
a leak. L'Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time:
Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou spring'st at a leak already in thy crown. Dryden.

Whether she sprung a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

4. To discharge, applied to a mine.

Our miners discovered several of the enemies' mines, who have sprung divers others which did little execution. Taitler.

I sprung a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison, Spect.

5. To contrive on a sudden; to produce hastily; to offer unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause sprung a new project, and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear till the ladies had shown their zeal against the pretender. Swift.

6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.

Unbeseeching skill
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.

7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground, so plants spring, thence spring for the season;

so water springs, thence spring for a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently; thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring; thence spring means an elastick body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING.† n. s. [spring, Saxon, from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate; the vernal season.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:

To his music, plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The spring visiteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carew.

Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson, Spring.

2. An elastick body; a body which when distorted has the power of restoring itself to its former state.

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wheels. Wilkins.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chape of the vice open. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastick motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastick force.

Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryden.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop.
If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest, unless they be elastick, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring which is weakened, when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbutnot.

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life;
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.

Nature is the same, and man is the same; has the same affections and passions, and the same springs that give them motion. Rymer.

Our author shuns by vulgar springs to move. Pope.

5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.

The pris'n'r with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighbouring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground!
Addison, Cato.

6. A leak; a start of plank.

Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents; how to shift his sails;
Where her springs are, her leaks, and how to stop
'em. B. Jonson, Catiline.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.

Now stop thy springs; my sea shall suck them
dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Springs on the tops of hill pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

When in the effects she doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring
doth rise;
And seeing the branch, conceives the root below:
These things she views without the body's eyes. Davies.

He adds the running springs and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes.

Dryden.

Nile hears him knocking at his sevenfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews' fates.

Dryden.

He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of winter.

Locke.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in springs, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground.

Locke.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.

To that great spring, which doth great kingdoms move,
The sacred spring, whence right and honour streams;

Distilling virtue, shedding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams.

Davies.

I move, I see, I speak, discourse and know,
Though now I am, I was not always so;

Then that from which I was, must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore.

Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages,
from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals.

Dryden.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable.

Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.

About the spring of the day Samuel called Saul to the top of the house.

1 Sam. ix. 26.

10. Cause; original.

The reason of the quicker or slower termination of this distemper, arises from these three springs.

Blackmore.

The first springs of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little.

Swift.

11. A plant; a shoot; a young tree; a coppice.

Birds, which in the lower spring
Did shroude in shady leaves from sunny ray.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Thy groves and pleasant springs
The painful labourer's hand shall stock, the roots to burn.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 14.

The nightingale, among the thick-leav'd springs sits alone in sorrow.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

From haunted spring and dale,
Edg'd with poplar pale.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

In yonder spring of roses intermix'd
With myrtle.

Milton, P. L.

When the spring is of two years' growth, draw part of it for quick-setts.

Evelyn, B. iii. ch. 7. § 23.

12. A youth. See SPRINGAL.

She pictur'd winged Love,
With his young brother Sport; —
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring
A burning tead about his head did move.

Spenser, Musopotmos.

13. A hand or shoulder of pork.

These springs of pork.

Beaum. and Fl. Prophetess.

SPRINGAL.† n. s. [Of this word Dr.
Johnson has given no etymology, nor example. It is evidently from the Sax.
ppungan, germinare; and was also formerly written springe. See the twelfth sense of SPRING. This sense of spring
Dr. Johnson illustrated from Spenser:
but springal was the more usual word.
It may be added, that the old French word springaller meant to leap, to bound.] A youth; an active, nimble, young man. Not now in use. Bullok.

Yonge springals in the flower of their youth.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1550), Min. 2. b.

Two springals of full tender years.

Spenser, F. Q.

I do not rail against the hopeful springal,
That builds up monuments in brass.

Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

SPRINGE. n. s. [from spring.] A gin; a noose, which, fastened to any elastic body, catches by a spring or jerk.

As a woodcock to my own springe, Osrick,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shaks.

Let goats for food their loaded udders lend;
But neither springes, nets, nor snares employ.

Dryden.

With hairy springes we the birds betray,
Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey.

Pope.

To SPRINGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To ensnare; to catch in a trap.

We springe ourselves, we sink in our own bogis.

Beaum. and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

SPRINGER.† n. s. [from spring.]

1. One who rouses game.

2. A young plant.

The young men and maidens go out into the woods and coppices, cut down and spoil young springers to dress up their May-booths.

Evelyn, B. iv. § 4.

SPRINGHALT.† n. s. [perhaps from spraen- ga, Swed. to sprain a horse's legs by riding him beyond his strength; and halt,
the consequence of it. See To SPRAIN.]
A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.

They've all new legs, and lame ones; one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the spavin
And springhalt reign'd among them.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

SPRINGHEAD.* n. s. [spring and head.]
Fountain; source.

The nearer the spring-head, the purer streams.
Proceed. against Garnet, (1606), Ll. 3. b.

The wolf, drinking at the spring-head, quarrelled with the lamb for troubling his draught when he was quenching his thirst at the stream below.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 199.

Now this spring-head of science is purely fantastical.

Bolingbroke to Pope.

SPRINGINESS. n. s. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.

Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow, since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness.

Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction.

Bentley.

SPRINGING.* n. s. [from spring.]

1. Growth; increase.

Thou makest it soft with showers; thou blestest
the springing thereof.

Ps. lxx. 10.

2. [In architecture.] The side of an arch contiguous to the part whereon it rests.

Archaeol. vol. xvii. p. 4. n.

SPRINGLE. n. s. [from spring.] A spring;
an elastic noose.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plash-shoot serveth for springles to take them.

Carew.

SPRINGTIDE. n. s. [spring and tide.] Tide at the new and full moon; high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does less supply,
Till they quite shrink in again:
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but rain, and runs not clear.

Dryden, Tyr. Love.

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns;
that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide.

Grew, Cosmol.

SPRINGY. adj. [from springe.]

1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in the arterial road;
While the tir'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein.

Blackmore, Creation.

This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy.

Arbuthnot.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality.

Bentley, Scrm.

2. [From spring.] Full of springs and fountains. Not used.

Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather marl them for grass than corn.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To SPRINKLE.† v. a. [sprinkelen, sprencelen, Teut. sprengen, Germ. ppen- zen, Saxon.]

1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses.
Take handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it towards the heaven.

Ex. ix. 8.

2. To scatter in drops.

Sprinkle water of purifying upon them.

Num. viii. 7.

3. To besprinkle; to wash, wet, or dust by scattering in small particles.

Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience.

Heb. x. 22.

Wings he wore

Of many a colour'd plume sprinkled with gold.

Milton, P. L.

The prince, with living water sprinkled o'er
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch.

Dryden, Æn.

To SPRINKLE. v. n. To perform the act of scattering in small drops.

The priest shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger.

Lev. xiv.

Baptism may well enough be performed by sprinkling, or effusion of water.

Ayliffe, Purgation.
When dextrous damsels twirl the sprinkling
mop,

And cleanse the spatter'd sash, and scrub the stairs,
Know Springal appears.

Gay, Trivia.

SPRINKLE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small quantity scattered.

2. An espergoire; an utensil to sprinkle with.

She always smyl'd, and in her hand did hold
An holy water sprinkle dipt in dew,
With which she sprinkled favours manifold
On whom she list.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 13.

SPRINKLER. n. s. [from sprinkle.] One that sprinkles.

SPRINKLING.* n. s. [from sprinkle.]

1. The act of scattering in small drops.
Your clerical shavings, your crossings, sprink- lings, your cozening miracles.

Bp. Hall, Epist. D. 1. E. 1.

2. A small quantity scattered.

To SPURT.† v. a. [See To SPIRT, and To SPROUT.] To throw out; to eject with force.

Toads sometimes exclude or sprit out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine. Brown.

TO SPRIT. v. n. [ppp̄tan, Saxon; spruyten, Dutch.] To shoot; to germinate; to sprout. Used of barley wetted for malt.

SPRIT.† n. s. [pppote, Sax. serculus.]

1. Shoot; sprout.

The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or sprit at the root-end of the corn. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. [Sp̄p̄ot, Sax. contus.] A pole; hence our word boltsprit. This meaning is overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

SPRITSAIL. n. s. [sprit and sail.] The sail which belongs to the bowsprit mast. Dict.

Our men quitted themselves of the fire-ship, by cutting the spritsail tackle off with their short hatchets. Wiseman.

SPRITE.† n. s. [Contracted from sprit.] A spirit; an incorporeal agent. See SPRIGIT.

The sprites of fiery temeragants in flame Mount up, and take a salamander's name. Pope.
Of these am I who thy protection claim,
A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name. Pope.

SPRITFEUL.* adj. [See SPRIGITFEUL.] Gay; lively; cheerful.

A spritleful gait that leaves no print,
And makes a feather of a flint.
Sivoad, in Wit Restor'd, (1658.)

SPRITFEULLY. adv. [See SPRIGITFEULLY.] Vigorously; with life and ardour.

The Grecians spritlefully drew from the darts the corse,

And heast it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman, Iliad.

SPRITELESS.* adj. See SPRIGITLESS.

SPRITELINESS.* n. s. See SPRIGITLINESS. Wit and spritleliness of conversation.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 436.

SPRITELY.* adj. See SPRIGITELY.

SPRITELY. adv. [from sprite.] Gayly.

You have not seen young heifers, hilly kept;
Full'd full of daisies at the field, and driven
Home to their hovels; all so spritlely given,
That no roome can contain them. Chapman.

SPROD.* n. s. A salmon while in its second year's growth; so called by fishermen in many parts of England. Chambers.

SPRONG. The old preterite of spring.

Not mistrusting, till these new curiosities spring up, that ever any man would think our labour herein misspent, or the time wastefully consumed.

Hooker.
TO SPROUT. v. n. [ppp̄tan, Saxon; spruyten, Dutch. Sprout, sprit, and by a very frequent transposition sprit or sput, are all the same word.]

1. To shoot by vegetation; to germinate.

The sprouting leaves that saw you here,
And call'd their fellows to the sight. Cowley.

Try whether these things in the sprouting do increase weight, by weighing them before they are hang'd up; and afterwards again, when they are sprouted. Bacon.

That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grains, whose ends, cut off, have notwithstanding sprouted. Brown, Vulg. Err.
Old Baucis is by old Philemon seen
Sprouting with sudden leaves of sprightly green. Dryden.

Hence sprouting plants enrich the plain and wood:

For physic some, and some design'd for food. Blackmore.

Envid Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top she proudly bears,
Eludes the ax, and sprouts against the stroke,
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars. Prior.

Rub malt between your hands to get the come or sprouting clean away. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To shoot into ramifications.

Vitriol is apt to sprout with moisture. Bacon.

3. To grow.

Th' enlivening dust its head begins to rear,
And on the ashes sprouting plumes appear. Tickell.

SPROUT.† n. s. [from the verb; Saxon, pppote, pppauta.] A shoot of a vegetable.

Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.

Early ere the odoriferous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassell'd horn
Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton, Arcades.

To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray on the Creation.

SPROUTS. n. s. pl. [from sprout.] Young coleworts.

SPRUCE.† adj. [Skinner derives this word from preux, French; but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout; Casaubon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came spruce. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius refers the word to the Swed. spraeg, formosus; spraecht et spraeg, clarus et splendens (de pannis). With this our provincial word sprey, or spry, in great measure, accords; which in some places is used for smart, elegant, and also for lively or acute. "SPREY: spruce, ingenious. Exm. dialect." Grose. And so sprack, or sprag; which see. Dr. Johnson's conjecture of pruce, weighed with the following extract, at least will amuse the reader: "Sir Edw. Howard then admiral, and with him Sir Thomas Parre in doublets of crimson velvet, &c. were apparell'd after the fashion of Prussia or Spruce." Holinshed's Chron. p. 805. Prussia, it might hence be supposed, gave, in old time, the law as to fashionable and costly apparel. Barret describes Prussian leather under the simple name of spruce. Alv. 1580. Thus, in reference to fine habiliments, a sprusado likewise became a term to denote one who paid great attention to dress: "They put me in mind of the answer of that sprusado to a judge in this kingdom, a rigid censor of men's habits; who, seeing a neat finical divine come before him in a cloak lined through with plush, encountered him." Comment on Chaucer, 1665, p. 19.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance. It was anciently used of things with a serious meaning: it is now used only of persons, and with levity.

Another neat in clothes, spruce, full of courtesy. Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref. p. 34.

The tree
That wraps that crystal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.

Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou dost meet. Donne.

Along the crisped shades and bowers
Revels the spruce and jocund spring;
The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton, Comus.
I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practised by many chymists. Boyle.
He put his band and beard in order,
The sprucer to accost and board her. Hudibras.
He is so spruce, that he can never be genteel. Tailler.

This Tim makes a strange figure with that ragged coat under his livery: can't he go spruce and clean? Arbutnot.

TO SPRUCE.† v. n. [from the adjective.] To dress with affected neatness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
TO SPRUCE.* v. a. To trim; to dress.

Then 'gan Don Psittaco
To spruce his plumes.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 39.

What is truth would, I hope, nevertheless be truth in it, however oddly spruced up by such an author.

Vindict. of the Reasonab. of Christ. (1695,) p. 24.
Sprucing up the hairy cheeks. Ainsworth.

SPRUCE.† n. s. A species of fir.

Those from Prussia (which we call spruce) and Norway are the best. The hemlock-tree (as they call it in New England) is a kind of spruce. Evelyn.

SPRUCE-BEER. n. s. [from spruce, a kind of fir.] Beer tinctured with branches of fir.

In ulcers of the kidneys spruce-beer is a good balsamick. Arbutnot.

SPRUCE-LEATHER. n. s. Corrupted for Prussian leather. Ainsworth.

The leather was of Pruce. Dryden, Fob.

SPRUCELY.† adv. [from spruce.] In a nice manner.

Under that fayre ruffe so sprucely set
Appears a fall, a falling band forsooth!

Marston, Sat. (1598,) S. 3.

SPRUCENESS.† n. s. [from spruce.] Neatness without elegance; trimness; quaintness; delicacy; fineness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
Now, in the time of spruceness, our plays follow the niceness of our garments.

Middleton, Roar. Girl. Prol.
Polished periods, gaudy embellishments, artificial transitions; words that sound big, and signify little; formal figures; an affected spruceness, and excessive delicacy of style.

Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 251.

TO SPRUG.* v. a. To make smart. See SPRAG, and SPRUCE. This word is still used in some places.

They are the very ticklings of nature's heart, that make her sprug up herself in the season of the spring, to court the world with in her best array. Parth. Sacra, (1683,) p. 211.

SPRUNG. The preterite and participle passive of spring.

Tall Norway fir their masts in battle spent,
And English oaks sprung leaks and planks restore. Dryden.

Now from beneath Maleas' airy height,
Aloft she sprung, and steer'd to Thebes her flight.
Pope.
Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I.
Pope.

To SPRUNT.* v. n. [sprengen, Teut.
[ppingan, Sax.]]

1. To spring up; to germinate. This is an ancient verb: "To spruntone or buttone, pullo." Prompt. Parv.
2. To spring forward.

See this sweet simpering babe,
Dear image of thyself; see! how it sprunts
With joy at thy approach.

Somerville, Rural Games, C. iii.

SPRUNT.† n. s.

1. Any thing that is short, and will not easily bend. Dr. Johnson. — The recent editor of Ben Jonson's Works, Mr. Gifford, has in a note on the word spruntly stated, that Dr. Johnson has here merely copied Ainsworth. In the English part of Ainsworth's dictionary, before me, "Sprunt, very active, agilis, alacris, strenuus, &c." occurs, but no mention whatever of the substantive. This sense of sprunt, as a substantive, appears to want authority.
2. A leap, or a spring in leaping; sprunt is so used in Derbyshire.

SPRUNT.* part. adj. [from To sprunt.] Vigorous; active. Kersey, Dict. 1702. Hence Ainsworth took the word. It means grown out, becoming strong; and is applied, in some parts of the north, to a stout youth.

SPRUNTLY.* adv. [from To sprunt.] Mr. Mason and Mr. Gifford define this adverb spruntly; the latter of these gentlemen acknowledging that he knows not the etymon of the word, but that sprunt has the same derivation, and bears the same import, as spruce. Notes on Ben Jonson, vol. v. p. 105. The etymon of sprunt is shewn under the verb, and the reader may therefore appreciate the alleged identity. Spruntly means perhaps youthfully, like a young person. The speaker is a vain, affected woman.

How do I look to-day? am I not drest
Spruntly? B. Jonson, Dev. an. Ass.

SPRY.* adj. Lively; active; acute. See SPRUCE, and SPRAG.

SPUD.† n. s. [perhaps from spada, Ital. a kind of sword. See the etymology of SPRT.] A short knife; any short thick thing, in contempt.

My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixt
Than strongest weeds that grow these stones betwixt:

My spud these nettles from the stones can part,
No knife so keen to weed thee from my heart.

Swift.

SPULLERS of Yarn. n. s. [perhaps properly spoolers.] Are such as are employed to see that it be well spun, and to fit for the loom.

Dict.

SPUME.† n. s. [spuma, Lat.] Foam; froth.

She — lette it [the medicine] boyle in such a pille,
Till that she sigh the spume white.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spirituous and fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, opening to the ambient light.

Milton, P. L.

Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which are caused by the airy parts diffused by the congealable mixture. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To SPUME. v. n. [spumo, Lat.] To foam;
to froth.

SPUMOUS.* adj. [spumeus, Latin; from SPUMY.*] the noun.] Frothy; foamy.

The cause is the putrefaction of the body by unnatural heat: the putrifying parts suffer a turgescence, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend into the surface of the water. Brown.

Not with more madness, rolling from afar,
The spumy waves proclaim the watery war;
And mounting upwards with a mighty roar,
March onwards, and insult the rocky shore.

Dryden.

The spumous and florid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbuthnot.

SPUN. The pret. and part. pass. of spin.
The nymph nor spun, nor dress'd with artful
pride;

Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was ty'd.

Addison.

SPUNGE. n. s. [spongia, Lat.] A sponge.
See SPONGE.

When he needs what you have glean'd, it is but squeezing you, and, sponges, you shall be dry again.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Considering the motion that was impressed by the painter's hand upon the sponge, compounded with the specific gravity of the sponge and the resistance of the air, the sponge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion.

Bentley, Serm.

To SPUNGE. v. n. [rather To sponge.] To hang on others for maintenance.

This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sponging while you are young. Swift to Gay.

SPUNGINESS.* n. s. Spunginess: which
see. Cotgrave.

SPUNGINGHOUSE. n. s. [sponge and house.]

A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.

A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a spong- inghouse. Swift.

SPUNGY. adj. [from sponge.]

1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spongy stuff made,
Did into France or colder Denmark room,
To ruin with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.

2. Wet; moist; watery.

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spongy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sun-beams.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

3. Having the quality of imbibing.
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spongy to suck in the sense of fear. Shaks.

SPUNK.† n. s. [voncke, Teut. scintilla.
Dr. Jamieson.] See also SPONK.

1. Touchwood; rotten wood.

To make white powder, the best way is by the powder of rotten willows; spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it russet.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Vivacity; spirit; activity. A low and contemptible expression. — Dr. Jamieson and Mr. Brockett on the contrary observe, that in Scotland, and as a northern English word, it is very good and forcible, and may be considered as a natural transition from the idea of touchwood. Several northern glossaries, now before me, old and modern, take no notice of it. Nor has Grose in his Provincial Glossary mentioned it; though in his dictionary of the vulgar tongue, or collection of satirical and burlesque

words, it exists:

SPUR.† n. s. [rpup, Sax. spore, Danish,
Icelandick, and Dutch; esperon, Fr.]

1. A sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.

He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better, had come upon the spur to redeem Philoclæa's picture. Sidney.

Whether the body politic be
A horse whereon the governour doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command it, lets it straight feel the spur.

Shakespeare.

He presently set spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Was I for this entitled, sir,
And grid with rusty sword and spur,
For fame and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.

2. Incitement; instigation. It is used with to before the effect. Dryden has used it with of; but, if he speaks properly, he means to make the following word personal.

Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire whereof provoketh unto motion, how should that divine power of the soul, that spirit of our mind, ever stir itself into action,
unless it have also the like spur? Hooker.

What need we any spur, but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

His laws are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of providence of the future to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.

Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all laudable attempts; and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are proposed. Dryden.

The chief, if not only spur to human industry and action, is uneasiness. Locke.

The former may be a spur to the latter, till age makes him in love with the study, without any childish bait. Cheyne.

3. The longest and largest leading root of a tree: hence probably the spur of a post, the short wooden buttress affixed to it, to keep it firm in the ground.

Malone.

Grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spurs together. Shaks. Cymbeline.

The strong-had's promontory
Have I made shake, and by the spurs
Pluck'd up the pine and cedar. Shaks. Tempest.

4. The sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.

Of birds the bill is of like matter with the teeth:
as for their spur, it is but a nail. Bacon.

Animals have natural weapons to defend and offend; some talons, some claws, some spurs and beaks. Ray.

5. Any thing standing out; a snag; as, the spur of a post. See the third definition.
6. A sea-swallow.

The sea-swallows they there [in Caldey isle]
call spurs. Ray, Rem. p. 245.

To SPUR.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick with the spur; to drive with the spur.

My friend, who always takes care to cure his horse of starting fits, spurred him up to the very side of the coach. Addison.

Your father, when he mounted, Rein'd 'em in strongly, and he spurr'd them hard. Dryden.

Who would be at the trouble of learning, when he finds his ignorance is caressed? But when you brow-beat and maul them, you make them men; for though they have no natural mettle, yet, if they are spurred and kicked, they will mend their pace. Collier on Pride.

2. To instigate; to incite; to urge forward.

Lovers break not hours, Unless it be to come before their time; So much they spur their expedition. Shakspeare.

Let the awe he has got upon their minds be so tempered with the marks of good-will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Locke.

3. To drive by force.

Love will not be spurr'd to what it loaths. Shakspeare.

4. To fix a spur to.

Castor the flame of fiery steed, With well spurr'd boot, took down; As men, with leathern buckets, do Quench fire in country town. Old Ballad of St. George for England.

TO SPUR. v. n.

1. To travel with great expedition. With backward bows the Parthians shall be there, And, spurring from the fight, confess their fear: A double wreath shall crown our Caesar's brows. Dryden.

2. To press forward.

Ascanius took th' alarm, while yet he led, And, spurring on, his equals soon o'erpass'd. Dryden, Æn. Some bold men, though they begin with infinite ignorance and error, yet, by spurring on, refine themselves. Greuv.

TO SPURGALL.* v. a. [spur and gall.] To wound or hurt with the spur. Dr. Johnson has introduced into his Dictionary spurgalled, as an adjective, with the examples from Shakspeare and Pope; but, in both, the word is a participle; and it was a common verb. See also Barret, and Sherwood.

I was not made a horse, And yet I bear a burthen like an ass, Spurgall'd, and tir'd, by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

I am ridden, Tranio, And spurgall'd to the life of patience. Beaumont and Fl. Tam. Tamed. Spare yourself, lest you bejude the good gallop, your own opinatious wit, and make the very conceit itself blush with spurgalling. Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

What! shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day, Or each new pension'd scycphant, pretend To break my windows, if I treat a friend? Pope.

SPURGALL.* n. s. A hurt occasioned by the too frequent use of the spur. Ash.

SPURGE. n. s. [espurge, French; spurgie, Dutch, from purgo, Latin.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants. Skinner.

Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice. There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which wartwort is one. Broad-leaved spurge is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cataputia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts; but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustic. Miller.

2. Short and thick; having one part close to another, as those of an animal contracted and cowering.

The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish: the head is broad and squat. Grew.

Alma in verse, in prose the mind, Throughout the body, squat or tall, Is bond fide all in all. Prior.

SQUAT. n. s.

1. The posture of cowering or lying close. A stitch-fall'n cheek that hangs below the jaw; Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw For an old grandam ape, when with a grace She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryden.

2. A sudden fall.

Bruises, squats, and falls, which often kill others, can bring little hurt to those that are temperate. Herbert.

SQUAT. n. s. A sort of mineral.

The squat consists of tin ore and spar incorporated. Woodward.

To SQUAWL.* See To SQUALL.

To SQUEAK. v. n. [sqwaeka, Swedish.]

1. To set up a sudden dolorous cry; to cry out with pain.

2. To cry with a shrill acute tone.

The sheeted dead

Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shakespeare.

Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored. Bacon.

I see the new Arion sail,

The lute still trembling underneath thy nail: At thy well-sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore, The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryden.

Blunderbusses planted in every loop-hole go off at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar. Dryden.

Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans squeaking through the mouth of an enuch? Addison.

How like brutes' organs are to ours: They grant, if higher powers think fit, A bear might soon be made a wit; And that, for any thing in nature, Pigs might squeak love-odes, dogs bark satire. Prior.

In florid impotence he speaks, And as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.

Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Homer. Pope, Odys.

3. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.

If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him. Dryden, Don Sebast.

SQUEAK. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cry of pain.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs, In panic horror of pursuing dogs: With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak, Poor swine! as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

2. A shrill quick cry, not of pain.

The coquette—with a great many skittish notes, affected squeaks, and studied inconsistencies, distinguished herself from the rest of the company. Tatler, No. 157.

SQUEA'KER.* n. s. [from squeak.] One who cries with a shrill acute tone.

Mimical squeakers and blowers, the vain-glorious admirers only of themselves, and those of their own fashioned face and gesture. Echard, Obs. on Answ. to Cont. of the Cl. p. 137.

To SQUEAL. † v. n. [sqwaela, Su. Goth. See To SQUALL.] To cry with a shrill sharp voice; to cry with pain. Squeak seems a short sudden cry, and squeal a cry continued.

He squealeth out, as though he had heard some marvelous strange sounds. Dr. Fulke, Conf. of the Pop. Quar. &c. (1583,) p. 25.

She pinched me, and called me a squealing child. Tatler, No. 15.

SQUEA'MISH. † adj. [for quawmish or qualmish, from qualm. Dr. Johnson.—

And thus formerly our word was squawmish: "To be squawmish or nice." Barret, Alv. 1580.] Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.

Yet, for countenance sake, he seemed very squeamish in respect of the charge he had of the princess Pamela. Sidney.

Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish, That takes a basting for a blemish; For what's more honourable than scars, Or skin to tatters rent in wars? Hudibras.

His musick is rustick, and perhaps too plain
The men of squeamish taste to entertain. South.
It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and voracious. South.

There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the moderns, or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either. Locke.

SQUEA'MISHLY.† adv. [from squeamish.] In a fastidious manner. Sherwood.

Too palpable therefore is the modern delicacy of the writer of the battle of Hastings, who thus squeamishly introduces this tale of Saxon perfidy:

"I, tho' a Saxon, yet the truth will telle."

Warton, Rowley Eng. p. 70.

SQUEA'MISHNESS. n. s. [from squeamish.] Niceness; delicacy; fastidiousness.

The thorough-paced politician must laugh at the squeamishness of his conscience, and read it another lecture. South.

Upon their principles they may revive the worship of the host of heaven; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of stomach. Stillingfleet.

To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable. Swift.

SQUEA'SINESS.* n. s. [from squeasy.] Nausea; queasiness; fastidiousness.

A squeasiness and rising up of the heart between any mean, vulgar, or mechanical condition of men. Hammond, Works, iv. 614.

SQUEA'SY.* adj. Queasy; nice; squeamish; fastidious; scrupulous.

He is as squeasy of his commendations as his courties. Bp. Earle, Charact. of a Bunt Man.
In squeasy stomachs honey turns to gall. Dryden.

To SQUEEZE.† v. a. [cprian, Saxon; gwagsu, Welsh, to squeeze, to press. So in Armorick. From sz gwagsu comes the English word. See Davies and Richards. But the Sax. cprian, to quash, is the preferable origin; according to which form our word was once written: "To squise or thrust together, presso." Barret, Alv. 1580.]

1. To press; to crush between two bodies.

It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the presses for printing. Wilkins.

The sinking of the earth would make a convulsion of the air, and that crack must so shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours. Burnet.

He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground, And squeez'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd. Dryden.

None acted mournings forc'd to show,
Or squeeze his eyes to make the torrent flow. Dryden.

When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand? Pope.

2. To oppress; to crush; to harass by extortion.

In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden. L'Estrange.

3. To force between close bodies.

To SQUEEZE. v. n.

1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.

A concave sphere of gold filled with water and soldered up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton, Opt.

2. To force way through close bodies.

Many a publick minister comes empty in; but when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off. L'Estrange.

SQUEEZE. n. s. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.

A subtle artist stands with wond'rous bag,
That bears imprisonment winds, of gentler sort
Than those that erst Laertes' son enclos'd:
Peaceful they sleep; but let the tuneless squeeze
Of labouring elbow rouse them, out they fly
Melodious, and with spritely accents charm. Philips.

SQUEE'ZING.* n. s. [from squeeze.] Act of squeezing.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain! Pope.

To SQUELCH, or SQUELSH. v. a. [a corruption perhaps of squash.] To crush. Dr. Johnson, in defining the verb squab, has used this word; not then intending, perhaps, to call the substantive a low ludicrous word.

He has almost trod my guts out: —
O, 'twas your luck and mine to be squelch'd. Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

SQUELCH.† n. s. [from the verb.] Dr. Johnson calls this substantive a low ludicrous word; and defines it a heavy fall. It is indeed a very common expression, but is rather, as Grose terms it, a flat fall on one side.

He tore the earth which he had sav'd
From squelch of knight, and storm'd and rav'd. Hudibras.

So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squelch, away he scampers, bawling like mad. L'Estrange.

SQUIB.† n. s. [schieben, Germ. to push forward. This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]

1. A small pipe of paper filled with wildfire. Used in sport.

The armada at Calais, sir Walter Raleigh was wont prettily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon them. Bacon, War with Spain.

The forest of the south compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes. Howell, Voc. For.

Lampoons, like squibs, may make a present blaze;

But time, and thunder, pay respect to bays. Wallar.

Furious he begins his march,
Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch;
With squibs and crackers arm'd to throw
Among the trembling crowd below. Swift.

Criticks on verse, as squibs on triumphs wait,
Proclaim the glory, and augment the state. Young.

2. Any sudden flash.

Dead clouds of sadness, or light squibs of mirth. Donne, Poems, p. 341.

3. A lampoon: a frequent colloquial expression.

4. Any petty fellow. Not now in use. Asked for their pass by every squib, That list at will them to revile or snub. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

The squibs, in the common phrase, are called libellers. Tatler, No. 88.

SQUILL. n. s. [squilla, scilla, Lat. squille, Fr.]

1. A plant.

It hath a large acrid bulbous root like an onion; the leaves are broad; the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the starry hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves. Miller.

Seed or kernels of apples and pears put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come up earlier than in the earth itself. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
'Twill down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.

The self-same atoms
Can, in the truffle, furnish out a feast;
And nauseate, in the scaly squill, the taste. Garth.

2. A fish.

3. An insect.

The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squill-fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings: the head broad and squat. Grew.

SQUINANCY.† n. s. [squinance, squinancie, French; squinantia, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Some of our old authors write this word squinacy, whence squinzy; and thence quinsy seems more regularly formed: "Canker in the mouth; squinacie in the throat." Bp. King, Thanks-giv. Sermon. 1619, p. 21. "Being surprised by a squinzy." Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 1. § 2. ed. 1652.] An inflammation in the throat; a quinsy.

Used for squinancies and inflammations of the throat; it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue. Bacon.

In a squinancy there is danger of suffocation. Wiseman.

SQUINT.† adj. [squinte, Dutch, oblique, transverse.] Looking obliquely; looking not directly; looking suspiciously.

Herdgroom, I fear me, thou have a squint eye. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Aug.

Her look is squint, with which wisely beholding one, she fix'dly looketh upon another.

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626), p. 71.

Where an equal poise of hope and fear
Does arbitrate the event, my nature is
That I incline to hope rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint suspicion. Milton, Comus.

SQUINT.* n. s. An oblique look.

To SQUINT. v. n. To look obliquely; to look not in a direct line of vision.

Some can squint when they will; and children set upon a table with a candle behind them, both eyes will move outwards, to see the light, and so induce squinting. Bacon.

Not a period of this epistle but squints towards another over against it. Pope.

To SQUINT. v. a.

1. To form the eye to oblique vision. This is the foul Filbertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the harelip. Shakespeare.

2. To turn the eye obliquely.

Perkin began already to squint one eye upon the crown, and another upon the sanctuary. Bacon, Hen. VII.

SQUINTEYED. adj. [squint and eye.]

1. Having the sight directed oblique.

He was so squinteyed, that he seemed spitefully to look upon them whom he beheld. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

2. Indirect; oblique; malignant.

This is such a false and squinteyed praise,
Which seeming to look upwards on his glories,
Looks down upon my fears. Denham.

SQUINTING GO. adj. Squinting. A cant word.

The timbrel and the squintifogo maid
Of Isis awe thee; lest the gods for sin,
Should, with a swelling dropsy, stuff thy skin.

SQUINTINGLY. * adv. [from squint.] With an oblique look. Sherwood.

TO SQUINT. v. n. To look askint. A cant word.

I remember thine eyes well enough: Dost thou squint at me? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

SQUIRE. n. s. [contraction of esquire; escuyer, Fr. See ESQUIRE.]

1. A gentleman next in rank to a knight.
He will maintain you like a gentlewoman. — Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail under the degree of a squire. Shakespeare.

The rest are princes, barons, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. An attendant on a noble warrior.
Old Butes' form he took, Anchises' squire
Now left to rule Ascanius. Dryden, Æn.
Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

3. An attendant at court.

Return with me —
I could as well be brought
To kneel his throne; and, squire-like, pension beg,
To keep base life a-foot. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

TO SQUIRE. * v. a. To attend as a squire.
This is an ancient as well as a modern gallant word; and I wonder that Dr.
Johnson overpassed it.

He squiereth me both up and down.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prol.
Squiring to tilt-yards, play-houses, and all such publick places. B. Jonson, Cynthia. Bevels.
He [a Frenchman] squiers her to every place
she visits, either on pleasure or business.

Guthrie, France.

SQUIREHOOD. * n. s. [from squire.]
SQUIRESHIP. } Rank and state of an esquire.

What profit hast thou reaped by this thy squire- ship? Shelton, Transl. of Don Quix. iv. 25.

If this should be the test of squirehood, it will go hard with a great number of my fraternity, as well as myself, who must all be unsquired, because a greyhound will not be allowed to keep us company. Swift, Lett. to the King at Arms.

SQUIRELY. * adj. [from squire.] Becoming a squire.

One very fit for this squirely function.

Shelton, Transl. of Don Quix. i. 4.

SQUIRREL. † n. s. [from escureuil, old Fr.; escureuil, modern; from the Gr. σκιόροπος, of σκιά, shade, and ὀπίς, tail; the tail
being a sort of covering for the animal.
Scoré is our old word; which is in the Prompt. Parv.] A small animal that lives in woods, remarkable for leaping from tree to tree.

One chanc'd to find a nut,
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel,
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this fay, Dear queen, be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril. Dryden.

TO SQUIRT. † v. a. [of uncertain etymology. Dr. Johnson. — Sereinus refers it to the Su. Goth. squaetta, which has a similar meaning: and so squaetta, to scatter.] To throw out in a quick stream.

Sir Roger she mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he passed along. Arbuthnot.

TO SQUIRT. v. n. To prate; to let fly.
Low cant.

You are so given to squirting up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a prime minister. L'Estrange.
SQUIRT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.

He with his squirt-fire could disperse

Whole troops. Hudibras.

His weapons are a pin to scratch, and a squirt
to bespatter. Pope.

2. A small quick stream.

Water those with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

SQUIRTER. n. s. [from squirt.] One that plies a squirt.

The squirters were at it with their kennel water,
for they were mad for the loss of their bubble.

Arbuthnot.

TO STAB. v. a. [staven, old Dutch.]

1. To pierce with a pointed weapon.

Hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son;
Stab'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds. Shakespeare.

Porcius, think thou seest thy dying brother
Stab'd at his heart, and all besmear'd with blood, Storming at thee! Addison, Cato.

2. To wound mortally or mischievously.

What tears will then be shed!
Then, to complete her woes, will I espouse
Hermione; — 'twill stab her to the heart!

A. Philips.

TO STAB. v. n.

1. To give a wound with a pointed weapon.

None shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war;
But in fair combat fight. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet are looked on as no distinct species of action; but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name;
as in England, where it is called stabbing. Locke.

2. To offer a stab.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at my frail life. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. To give a mortal wound.

He speaks poniards, and every word stabs.

Shakespeare.

STAB. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A wound with a sharp-pointed weapon.

The elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winds, or with bemockt at stabs
Kill the still closing waters. Shakespeare.

Unworthy was thy fate, thou first of warriors,
To fall beneath a base assassin's stab. Rowe.

2. A dark injury; a sly mischief.

3. A stroke; a blow.

He had a scripture ready to repel them all;
every pertinent text urged home being a direct stab to a temptation. South.

STABBER. n. s. [from stab.] One who stabs; a privy murderer.

STABBINGLY. * adv. [from stab.] With intent to do a dark injury; maliciously.

This intimation against the council is as stab- bingly suggested as the story of Sardanapalus; that a man cannot give a general character of a sacrilegious statesman, but some of his majesty's privy-council must immediately be glanced at,

Bp. Parker, Rep. to Reh. Transp. (1673), p. 287.

STABILIMENT. n. s. [from stabilis, Lat.] Support; firmness; act of making firm.

They serve for stabiliment, propagation, and shade. Denham.

TO STABILITATE. * v. a. [from stabilis,
Lat.] To make stable; to establish.

The soul about itself circumgrates
Her various forms, and what the most do love
She oft before herself stabilitates.

More, Immort. of the Soul, (1647), i. ii. 43.

STABILITY. † n. s. [stabilité, French; from stabilis, Latin.]

1. Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.
Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times. Is. xxxiii. 6.

By the same degrees that either of these happen,
the stability of the figure is by the same lessened.

Temple.

These mighty girders which the fabric bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
Such strength and such stability impart,
That storms above, and earthquakes under ground
Break not the pillars. Blackmore.

He began to try

This and that hanging stone's stability. Cotton.

2. Fixedness; not fluidity.

Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this, that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion. Boyle.

3. Firmness of resolution.

STABLE. adj. [stable, Fr. stabilis, Lat.]

1. Fixed; able to stand.

2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.

If man would be unvariable,
He must be like a rock or stone, or tree;

For ev'n the perfect angels were not stable,
But had a fall more desperate than we. Davies.

He perfect, stable; but imperfect we,
Subject to change. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

3. Strong; fixed in state or condition;
durable.

This region of chance and vanity, where nothing is stable, nothing equal; nothing could be offered to-day but what to-morrow might deprive us of.

Rogers.

TO STABLE. * v. a. To make stable; to fix; to establish. Obsolete.

Articles devised by the king's highness to stable
Christian quietness and unity among the people.

Styrpe, Life of Alp. Cranmer, (under 1586).

STABLE. n. s. [stabulum, Lat.] A house for beasts.

I will make Rabbah a stable for camels.

Ezra, xxv. 5.

Slothful disorder fill'd his stable,
And sluttish plenty deck'd her table. Prior.

TO STABLE. v. n. [stabulo, Latin.] To kennel; to dwell as beasts.

In their palaces,

Where luxury late reign'd, sea monsters whelp'd
And stabbed. Milton, P. L.

TO STABLE. † v. a. [stabulo, Latin.] To put into a stable.

Phœbus, wearie of his yearly taske,
Stabbed hath his steeds in lowly lay.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov.

STABLEBOY. } n. s. [stable and boy, or STABLEMAN. } man.] One who attends in the stable.

As soon as you alight at the inn, deliver your horses to the stableboy. Swift.

If the gentleman hath lain a night, get the stableman and the scullion to stand in his way. Swift.
I would with jockeys from Newmarket dine,
And to rough-riders give my choicest wine;
I would caress some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Bramston.
STABLENESS.† n. s. [from stable.]

1. Power to stand.

Behold the spaces, and the stablesness, and the swift course of heaven. Chaucer, Boeth. L. 3. pr. 8.

2. Steadiness; constancy; stability.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stablesness,
Bounty, perseverance, I have no relish of them. Shakespeare.

Light of understanding, stablesness of persuasion.

Translators of the Bible, Pref.

STABLESTAND. n. s. [In law.] Is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a man is convinced to intend the stealing of the king's deer in the forest: and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest with a cross bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or with a long bow, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip. Cowel.

I'll keep my stablestand where I lodge my wife,
I'll go in couples with her. Shakespeare.

STABLING.* n. s. [from stable.] House or room for beasts.

Her terror once, on Afric's tawny shore,
Now smok'd in dust, a stabbling now for wolves! Thomson, Liberty, P. iii.

To STABLISH. v. a. [establiſh, Fr. stabilio, Lat.] To establish; to fix; to settle.

Then she began a treaty to procure,
And stablish terms betwixt both their requests. Spenser.

Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And stablish quietness on every side. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good work. 2 Thess. ii. 17.

Poor heretics in love there be,
Which think to stablish dangerous constancy;
But I have told them, since you will be true,
You shall be true to them who're false to you. Donne.

His covenant sworn
To David, stablish'd as the days of Heaven. Milton.

STABLY.* adv. [from stable.] Firmly; steadily. Huloet, and Sherwood.

STABULATION.* n. s. [stabulatio, Lat.] Act of housing beasts. Not in use. Cockeram.

STACK.† n. s. [stacca, Italian. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. H. Tooke deduces it from the Sax. stagan, to ascend; making it the past participle, with the pronunciation of k for g. Div. of Purl. ii. 276. 283. The word, however, appears to be a northern substantive, viz. stack, Icel. stack-gardur, an enclosure in which corn or hay stacks are erected. See Dr. Jamieson in V. STACKYARD.]

1. A large quantity of hay, corn, or wood, heaped up regularly together.

Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height, which the watermen that bring wood down the Seine laid there. Watson, D. of Buckingham.

While the marquis and his servant on foot were chasing the kid about the stack, the prince from horseback killed him with a pistol.

While the cock
To the stack or the barn-door
Stoutly struts his dame before. Milton, L' All.
Stacks of moist corn grow hot by fermentation. Newton.

An inundation, says the fable,
O'erflow'd a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born. Swift.

2. A number of chimneys or funnels standing together.

A mason making a stack of chimneys, the foundation of the house sunk. Wiseman, Surgery.

To STACK. v. a. [from the noun.] To pile up regularly in ricks.

So likewise a hovel will serve for a room,
To stack on the pease. Tusser.

The prices of stacking up of wood I shall give you. Mortimer.

STACTE.† n. s. [σάκτις, Gr. stacte, Latin, stacte, Sax.] An aromatick; the gum that distils from the tree which produces myrrh.

Take sweet spices, stacte, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.

STADBLE.* n. s. See STADLE.

STADE.* n. s. [stade, Fr. stadium, Lat.] A furlong.

The greatness of the town, by that we could judge, stretcheth in circuit some forty stades.

Donne, Hist. of the Sept. (ed. 1633), p. 71.

STADLE.† n. s. [stabel, Saxon, a foundation.]

1. Any thing which serves for support to another.

2. A staff; a crutch. Obsolete.
He cometh on, his weak steps governing
And aged limbs on cypress staddle stout,
And with an ivy twine his waist is girt about. Spenser, F. Q.

3. A tree suffered to grow for coarse and common uses, as posts or rails. Of this meaning I am doubtful. Dr. Johnson.—Saddles are young plants left standing at certain distances, when a wood is cut.

Leave growing for saddles the likeliest and best,
Though seller and buyer dispatched the rest. Tusser.

Coppice-woods, if you leave in them saddles too thick, will run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon.

To STADLE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To leave sufficient saddles when a wood is cut.

First see it well fenced, ere hewers begin;
Then see it well saddled without and within. Tusser.

STADTHOLDER.† n. s. [stadht and houden, Dutch.] The chief magistrate of the United Provinces.

They had secret powers given them, to treat concerning the prince of Orange's being their stadtholder.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times, K. Ch. II.
STAFF.† n. s. plur. staves. [staf, rraf, Saxon; staff, Danish; staf, Dutch.]

1. A stick with which a man supports himself in walking.

It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you would make a staff
To lean upon. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chastisements, that thy rod as well as thy staff may comfort us. King Charles.

Is it probable that he, who had met whole armies in battle, should now throw away his staff, out of fear of a dog? Brome.

2. A prop; a support.

Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts. Shakespeare.

The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shakespeare.

If a subject be a son, then ought he to be a staff unto his father, wherewith not to strike but to sustain him. Holiday.

3. A stick used as a weapon; a club; the handle of an edged or pointed weapon. A club properly includes the notion of weight, and the staff of length.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms are hir'd to bear their staves. Shaks. Macbeth.
He that bought the skin ran greater risks than t' other that sold it, and had the worse end of the staff. L'Estrange.

With forks and staves the felon they pursue. Dryden.

4. Any long piece of wood.

He forthwith from the glittering staff unfurl'd
The imperial ensign. Milton, P. L.
To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dexterously apply'd,
Which in the spacious socket turning round,
Scooped out the big round jelly from its orb. Addison.

5. Round or step of a ladder.

Descending and ascending by ladders, I ascended at one of six hundred and thirty-nine staves, or eighty-nine fathoms. Brown, Trav.

6. An ensign of an office; a badge of authority.

Methought this staff, mine office-badge in court,
Was broke in twain. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
All his officers brake their staves; but at their return new staves were delivered unto them. Hayward on Edw. VI.

7. An establishment of officers, in various departments, attached to generals and armies.

8. [Stef; Icelandic.] A stanza; a series of verses regularly disposed, so as that, when the series concluded, the same order begins again.

Cowley found out that no kind of staff is proper for an heroic poem, as being all too lyrical; yet though he wrote in couplets, where rhyme is freer from constraint, he affects half verses. Dryden.

When Crito once a panegyrick show'd,
He beat him with a staff of his own ode. Harte.

STAFFISH. adj. [from staff.] Stiff; harsh. Obsolete.

A wit in youth not over dull, heavy, knotty, and lumpish, but hard, tough, and though somewhat staffish, both for learning and whole course of living, proveth always best. Ascham.

STAFFTREE. n. s. A sort of ever green privet.

STAG.† n. s. [Of this word I find no derivation. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. H. Tooke pronounces it the past participle of the Sax. stagan, to ascend; a name well applied, he says; the raised and lofty head of the animal being the most striking circumstance at the first sight of him. Div. of Purl. ii. 282. But it is more probably from steggr, Icel. the male of almost all wild beasts. See Dr. Jamieson, in V. STAIG.]

1. The male red deer; the male of the hind.

To the place a poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish. Shakespeare, As you like it.

The swift stag from under ground
Bore up his branching head. Milton, P. L.
Th' inhabitants of seas and skies shall change,
And fish on shore, and stags in air shall range.
Dryden.

The stag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like
more,
And fears his hind legs will o'take his fore.
Pope.

2. A colt or young horse. Old Yorksh.
Gloss. 1697. A horse from one to three years old. Craven Dial. 1824.

STAGE.† n.s. [stage, Fr. Dr. Johnson.
— Stagie, Teut. from stigen, elevare.
Kilian. And thus Mr. H. Tooke calls our stage the past participle of the Sax. stagan, to ascend; as Dr. Jamieson also refers stage, a step, to steg, Germ. stigi, Icel. from steigen, to ascend.]

1. A floor raised to view on which any show is exhibited; a raised floor of temporary use.

We princes, I tell you, are set on stages, in the sight and view of all the world.

Q. Eliz. Speech to Parliament, (1586.)

I have seen the whole front of a mountebank's stage, from one end to the other, faced with patents, certificates, medals, and great seals, by which the several princes of Europe have testified their esteem for the doctor!

Tuller, No. 240.

2. The theatre; the place of scenick entertainments.

And much good do't you then,
Brave plush and velvet men:
Can feed on ort; and, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. B. Jonson.

Those two Mytilene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Herein admire the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play.

Knolles, Hist.

I maintain, against the enemies of the stage, that patterns of piety, decently represented, may second the precepts. Dryden.

One Livius Andronicus was the first stage player in Rome. Dryden, Juv. Ded.
stage, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

3. Any place where any thing is publicly transacted or performed.

When we are born, we cry that we are come
To this great stage of fools. Shakespeare, C. Lear.

4. A place in which rest is taken on a journey; as much of a journey as is performed without intermission. [statio, Lat.
Dr. Johnson. — Perhaps from the Goth. staiga, a way, a road; stige, Sax. the same.]

I shall put in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage; and beseech you to go before me my guide.

Hammond, Pract. Catech.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber. Addison.

From thence compell'd by craft and age,
She makes the head her latest stage. Prior.

We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even. Atterbury.

By opening a passage from Muscovy to China, and marking the several stages, it was a journey of so many days. Baker.

Men drop so fast, ere life's mid stage we tread,
Few know so many friends alive, as dead. Young.

5. A single step of gradual process.

The changes and vicissitude in wars are many;
but chiefly in the seats or stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct.

Bacon, Ess.

This is by some called the first stage of a consumption, but I had rather call it an ill habit preparatory to that distemper. Blackmore.

To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline. Rogers.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion.

Sharp, Surgery.

To STAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To exhibit publicly. Out of use.

I love the people;

But do not like to stage me to their eyes;

Though it do well, I do not relish well

Their loud applause. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

The quick comedians

Extemp'rally will stage us, and present

Our Alexandrian revels. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

STAGECOACH. n. s. [stage and coach.] A coach that keeps its stages; a coach that passes and repasses on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.

The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach. Addison.

When late their miry sides stagecoaches show,
And their stiff horses through the town move slow,
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide. Gay.

STA'GELY.* adj. [from stage.] Belonging to the stage; befitting the stage.

Nor may this be called an histrionick parada, or *stage*ly visard and hypocrisy, while women seek to appear advantaged in stature, or in beauty.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 168.

STA'GEPLAY. n. s. [stage and play.] Theatrical entertainment.

This rough-cast unheewn poetry was instead of stageplays for one hundred and twenty years.

Dryden, Juv. Ded.

STA'GEPLAYER. n. s. One who publicly represents actions on the stage.

Among slaves who exercised polite arts, none sold so dear as stageplayers or actors.

Arbutnot on Coins.

STA'GER. n. s. [from stage.]

1. A player.

You safe in your stage clothes,

Dare quit, upon your oaths,

The stagers and the stage-wrights too. B. Jonson.

2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; a practitioner; a person of cunning.

I've heard old cunning stagers

Say, fools for argument use wagers. Hudibras.

One experienced stager, that had baffled twenty traps and tricks before, discovered the plot.

L'Estrange.

Some stagers of the wiser sort
Made all these idle wonderments their sport:

But he, who heard what ev'ry fool could say,

Would never fix his thought, but trim his time away.

Dryden.

One cries out, these stagers
Come in good time to make more work for wagers.

Dryden.

Be by a parson cheated!
Had you been cunning stagers,

You might yourselves be treated

By captains and by majors. Swift.

STA'GERY.* n. s. [from stage.] Scenic exhibition; show on the stage.

Likening those grave controversies to a piece of *stager*y, or scene-work. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

STA'GEVIL. n. s. A disease in horses.

Dict.

STA'GGARD. n. s. [from stag.] A four year old stag. Ainsworth.

To STA'GGER. v. n. [staggeren, Dutch.]

1. To reel; not to stand or walk steadily.

He began to appear sick and giddy, and to stagger; after which he fell down as dead. Boyle.

He struck with all his might

Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight:

Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow.

Dryden.

Them revelling the Tentyrites invade,
By giddy heads and staggering legs betray'd. Tate.

2. To faint; to begin to give way.

The enemy stagers: if you follow your blow,
he falls at your feet; but if you allow him respite,
he will recover his strength. Addison.

3. To hesitate; to fall into doubt; to become less confident or determined.

A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in this attempt. Shakspeare.

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith. Rom. iv. 20.

Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger.

Bacon.

No heretics desire to spread
Their light opinions, like these Epicures;

For so their staggering thoughts are comforted,

And other men's assent their doubt assures.

Davies.

If thou confidently depend on the truth of this, without any doubting or staggering, this will be accepted by God. Hammond.

But let it inward sink and drown my mind:
Falshood shall want its triumph: I begin

To stagger; but I'll prop myself within. Dryden.

To STA'GGER. v. a.

1. To make to stagger; to make to reel.
That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That stagers thus my person. Shaks. Rich. II.

2. To shock; to alarm; to make less steady or confident.

The question did at first so stagger me,

Bearing a state of mighty moment in't.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Whoever will read the story of this war, will find himself much staggered, and put to a kind of riddle. Howell.

When a prince falls in honour and justice, 'tis enough to stagger his people in their allegiance.

L'Estrange.

The shells being lodged with the belemnites, selenites, and other like natural fossils, it was enough to stagger a spectator, and make him ready to entertain a belief that these were so too.

Woodward.

STA'GGERING.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act of reeling.
The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are a vertigo, staggering, and loss of memory.

Arbutnot.

2. Cause of staggering or making to stag-ger.

This shall be no grief unto thee, [in the margin,
no staggering, or stumbling.] 1 Sam. xxv. 31.

STA'GGERINGLY.* adv. [from staggering.]

1. In a reeling manner.
Drunkards go staggeringly when they are top-heavy. Granger on Ecccl. (1621.) p. 319.

2. With hesitation.

While we are but staggeringly evil, we are not left without parentheses of consideration, thoughtful rebukes, and merciful interventions, to recall us to ourselves. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 30.

STA'GGERS. n. s. pl. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of horse apoplexy.
His horse past cure of the fives, stark spoil'd with the stagers. Shakspeare.

2. Madness; wild conduct; irregular behaviour. Out of use.

I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the stagers, and the careless lapse

Of youth and ignorance. Shakspeare.

STA'GNANCY.† n. s. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventilation.

Though the country people are so wise
To call these rivers, they're but stagnancies,
Left by the flood.

Cotton, Wonders of the Peake, (1681), p. 55.

STA'GNANT. adj. [stagnans, Lat.] Motionless; still; not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its ample seat,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat.

Blackmore.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant.

Woodward.

Immur'd and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul. Irene.

To STA'GNATE. v. n. [stagnare, Lat.] To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up.

Woodward.

The aliment moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows.

Arbutnot.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate. Thomson.

STAG'NATION. n. s. [from stagnate.] Stop of course; cessation of motion. It is often applied figuratively to moral or civil images.

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast basin, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time.

Addison.

To what great ends subservient is the wind!
Behold, where'er this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the skies:
This from stagnation and corruption saves
Th' aerial ocean's ever-rolling waves. Blackmore.

STAI'D. participial adjective. [from stay.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild; not volatile.

Put thyself

Into a 'haviour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my staid senses. Shaks. Cymbeline.

To our weaker view,

O'erlaid with black, staid wisdom's hue.

Milton, II Pens.

I should not be a persuader to them of studying much in the spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds; but to ride out, with prudent and staid guides, to all the quarters of the land.

Milton on Education.

I am the more at ease in Sir Roger's family, because it consists of sober and staid persons.

Addison.

STA'IDNESS. n. s. [from staid.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

The boiling blood of youth, fiercely agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity and fixed staidness which is necessary to so severe an intentness.

Glauville, Scops.

If sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret gracefulness of youth accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting.

Dryden, Pref. to Ovid.

To STAIN.† v. a. [ystaenio, Welsh, from ys and taenu.

"Rhag Gwyar or Gnowd,
"Afar ystaenawd."

Taliessyn, an old British poet.

Dr. Johnson.—Serenius notices the
VOL. III.

Welsh word, and adds stein, Gothic, color; steina, pingere, bitumine obducere.]

1. To blot; to spot; to maculate.

Lead me a looking-glass;

If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives. Shakspeare.

From the gash a stream

His armour stain'd, erewhile so bright.

Milton, P. L.

Embrace again, my sons: be foes no more,

Nor stain your country with your children's gore.

Dryden.

2. To dye; to tinge.

The Inn is most amiss—

And hath but merely stained-painted walls.

Davies, Wit's Pilgr. sign. L. 3.

3. To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.

Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd.

Milton, P. L.

STAIN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Blot; spot; discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different stains of light that shew themselves in clouds of a different situation.

Addison.

Swift trouts diversify'd with crimson stains,

And pikes, the tyrants of the watery plains. Pope.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy.

To solemn actions of royalty and justice their suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion a stain?

Hooker.

Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stain of heresy.

Hooker.

Then heaven and earth renew'd, shall be made pure

To sanctify, that shall receive no stain.

Milton, P. L.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains;
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains:

The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden, Æn.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots; for if he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judged it a stain upon them for want of merit.

Broome.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.

Hereby I will load her that is the praise, and yet the stain of all womankind.

Südney.

STA'INER. n. s. [from stain.] One who stains; one who blots; one who dyes; a dyer.

STA'INLESS. adj. [from stain.]

1. Free from blots or spots. Not in use.

The phenix' wings are not so rare

For faultless length and stainless hue. Südney.

2. Free from sin or reproach.

I cannot love him;

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth.

Shakspeare.

STAIR.† n. s. [trægen, Sax. stege, Suet. from steigan, M. Goth. stiga, Su. Goth. to ascend, to mount. Serenius. We have thus, in our northern dialect, stee or stey, a ladder, from the old verb sty, to ascend.] Steps by which we ascend from the lower part of a building to the upper. Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps; but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good builder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding almost the full compass about, that the steepness be the more insensible.

Südney.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars!

Shakspeare.

Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol. Shakspeare.

I would have one only goodly room above stairs, of some forty foot high.

Bacon, Ess.

Sir James Tirrel repairing to the Tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the stair-foot, and sent these two villains to execute the murder.

Bacon.

The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw Angels ascending and descending. Milton, P. L.

Satan now on the lower stair,
That scald'd by steps of gold to heav'n gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world. Milton, P. L.

Trembling he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor staid for stairs; but down the depth he threw
His body: on his back the door he drew. Dryden.

STA'IRCASE. n. s. [stair and case.] The part of a fabric that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture.

Wotton.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived.

Addison on Italy.

STAKE.† n. s. [rac, ptace, Saxon; stake, Swedish; from the Su. Goth. sticka, to pierce. Serenius. And in like manner Mr. H. Tooke refers rac to the verb racan, to stick, to pierce.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.

The more I shook the stake, which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it.

Südney.

His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers' foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge.

Hooker.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof sharp stakes, plucked out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground. Shaks. Hen. VI.

In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the raised vines in arbors make but verjuice.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Or sharpen stakes, or head the forks, or twine
The sallow twigs to tie the straggling vine.

Dryden.

2. A piece of long rough wood.

While he whirl'd in fiery circles round
The brand, a sharpen'd stake strong Dryas found,
And in the shoulder's joint inflicts the wound.

Dryden.

3. Any thing placed as a palisade or fence.

That halloo I should know: what are you?
speak:

Come not too near, you fall on iron stakes else.

Milton, Comus.

4. The post to which a beast is tied to be baited.

We are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all the unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrannous heart can think?

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

5. Any thing pledged or wagered. I know not well whence it has this meaning: I suppose it is so named from being at stake, that is, in a state of hazard, like an animal baited, and in hazard from which it cannot be withdrawn. Dr. Johnson.—It is more probably from the Teutonick stecken, to fix; whence to set out or settle.

'Tis time short pleasure now to take,

Of little life the best to make,

And manage wisely the last stake.

Cowley.

O then, what interest shall I make

To save my last important stake,

When the most just have cause to quake!

Roscommon.

He ventures little for so great a stake. More.

The increasing sound is borne to either shore,

And for their stakes the throwing nations fear.

Dryden.

The game was so contrived, that one particular cast took up the whole stake; and when some others came up, you laid down.

Arbuthnot.

6. The state of being hazarded, pledged, or wagered.

When he heard that the lady Margaret was declared for it, he saw plainly that his kingdom must again be put to the stake, and that he must fight for it.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Are not our liberties, our lives,

The laws, religion, and our wives,

Enough at once to lie at stake,

For covenant and the cause's sake?

Hudibras.

The honour of the nation being in a manner at stake to make good several deficiencies. Davenant.

Of my crown thou too much care dost take;

That which I value more, my love, 's at stake.

Dryden.

Hath any of you a great interest at stake in a distant part of his fortune? Hath he ventured a good share of his fortune?

Atterbury.

Every moment Cato's life 's at stake. Addison.

7. The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the work-bench, to remove as occasion offers; or else it hath a strong iron spike at the bottom let into some place of the work-bench, not to be removed. Its office is to set small cold work straight upon, or to cut or punch upon with the cold chisel or cold punch. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

To STAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten, support, or defend with posts set upright.

Stake and bind up your weakest plants and flowers against the winds, before they in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour. Evelyn, Kalend.

2. To wager; to hazard; to put to hazard.

Is a man betrayed in his nearest concerns? The cause is, he relied upon the services of a pack of villains, who designed nothing but their own game, and to stake him while they play'd for themselves.

South.

Persons, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons than stake their miserable lives on the success of a revolution.

Addison.

They durst not stake their present and future happiness on their own chimerical imaginations.

Addison.

I'll stake yon lamb that near the fountain plays, And from the brink his dancing shade surveys.

Pope.

STALACTITES. n. s. [from σάλαξ.]

Stalactites is only spar in the shape of an icicle, accidentally formed in the perpendicular fissures of the stone.

Woodward.

STALACTICAL. adj. Resembling an icicle.

A cave was lined with those stalactical stones on the top and sides.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

STALAGMITES. n. s. Spar formed into the shape of drops. Woodward, Meth. Foss.

STALE.† adj. [stel, Teut.]

1. Old; long kept; altered by time. Stale is not used of persons otherwise than in contempt; when it is applied to beer, it commonly means worse for age.

Nappy ale, good and stale.

Old Ballad of the King and Miller of Mansfield.

This, Richard, is a curious case:

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays

Upon two distant pots of ale,

Not knowing which was mild or stale;

In this sad state your doubtful choice

Would never have the casting voice.

Prior.

A stale virgin sets up a shop in a place where she is not known.

Spectator.

2. Used till it is of no use or esteem; worn out of regard or notice.

The duke regarded not the muttering multitude, knowing that rumours grow stale and vanish with time.

Hayward.

About her neck a packet mail,

Fraught with advice, some fresh, some stale.

Butler.

Many things beget opinion; so doth novelty:

wit itself, if stale, is less taking.

Grew, Cosmol.

Pompey was a perfect favourite of the people; but his pretensions grew stale for want of a timely opportunity of introducing them upon the stage.

Swift.

They reason and conclude by precedent, And own stale nonsense which they ne'er invent.

Pope.

The king asked how far it was to a certain town: they said six miles. Half an hour after he asked again: one said six miles and a half. The king alighted out of his coach, and crept under the shoulder of his led horse: and when some asked his majesty what he meant, I must stalk, said he; for yonder town is shy, and flies me.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

STALK. n. s. [from the verb.] High, proud, wide, and stately step.

Behind it forth there leapt
An ugly fiend, more foul than dismal day;
The which with monstrous stalk behind him stept,
And ever as he went due watch upon him kept.

Spenser.

Great Milton next, with high and haughty stalks, Unfetter'd in majestic numbers walks. Addison.

STALK.† n. s. [Mr. H. Tooke considers this word as the participle of the Saxon ſteagan, to ascend; and says, "that perhaps it should be written stauke, (as we pronounce it,) or stak, (the a, as formerly, broad; and indeed the l may have been introduced to give the broad sound to our modern a. This, however, is only my conjecture; being unable otherwise to account for the introduction of l into this word." Div. of Purl. ii. 283. This conjecture and etymology must give place to the derivation offered by Serenius, namely the Swedish stolk, or stielke, the same as our stalk; (and he also mentions "A. Sax. stalc," which, however, I do not find;) and this he deduces from the ancient word stall, basis, foundation, which is from staa, to stand.]

1. The stem on which flowers or fruits grow.

A stock-gillyflower, gently tied on a stick, put into a steep glass full of quicksilver, so that the quicksilver cover it; after five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was. Bacon.

Small store will serve, where store,
All seasons, ripe for use hangs on the stalk.

Milton, P. L.

That amber attracts not basil, is wholly repugnant unto truth; for if the leaves thereof, or dried stalks, be stripped unto small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics, no otherwise than those of wheat and rye. Brown.

Roses unbud, and ev'ry fragrant flow'r,
Flew from their stalks to strew thy nuptial bow'r.

Dryden.

2. The stem of a quill.

Cæsar entreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st
Further than he is Cæsar. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.
To heaven I do appeal,
I have lov'd my king and common-weal;
As for my wife, I know not how it stands.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

29. To be resolutely of a party.

The cause must be presumed as good on our part as on theirs, till it be decided who have stood for the truth, and who for error, Hooker.

Shall we sound him?

I think he will stand very strong with us. Shaks.

It remains,
To gratify his noble service, that Hath thus stood for his country. Shaks. Corin.

30. To be in the place; to be representative.

Chilon said, that kings' friends and favourites were like casting counters, that sometimes stood for one, sometimes for ten. Bacon.

I will not trouble myself, whether these names stand for the same thing, or really include one another. Locke.

Their language being scanty, had no words in it to stand for a thousand. Locke.

31. To remain; to be fixed.

Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like

Where Ufens glides along the lowly lands,
Or the black water of Pomptina stands. Dryden.

37. To be with respect to chance.

Yoursell, renowned prince, then stood as fair
As any comer I have looked on,
For my affection. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Each thinks he stands fairest for the great lot,
and that he is possessed of the golden number.
Addison, Spect.

He was a gentleman of considerable practice at the bar, and stood fair for the first vacancy on the bench. Roue.

38. To remain satisfied.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stand so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shakespeare.

39. To be without motion.

I'll tell you who time ambles withal, who time gallops withal.—Whom stands it still withal?—
With lawyers in the vacation; for they sleep between term and term, and then they perceive not how time moves. Shakespeare.

40. To make delay.

They will suspect they shall make but small progress, if, in the books they read, they must stand to examine and unravel every argument. Locke.

41. To insist; to dwell with many words, or much pertinacity.

To stand upon every point, and be curious in particulars, belongeth to the first author of the story. 2 Maccab. ii. 30.

It is so plain that it needeth not to be stood upon.
Bacon.

Have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of English?

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

43. To persist; to persevere.

Never stand in a lie when thou art accused, but ask pardon and make amends.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

The emperor standing upon the advantage he had got by the seizure of their fleet, obliged them to deliver. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

Hath the prince a full commission,
To hear, and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

44. To persist in a claim.

45. To adhere; to abide.

Despair would stand to the sword,
To try what friends would do, or fate afford.
Daniel.

46. To be consistent.

His faithful people, whatsoever they rightly ask,
the same shall they receive, so far as may stand with the glory of God, and their own everlasting good; unto either of which it is no virtuous man's purpose to seek any thing prejudicial. Hooker.

Some instances of fortune cannot stand with some others; but if you desire this, you must lose that.
Bp. Taylor.

It stood with reason, that they should be rewarded liberally out of their own labours, since they received pay. Davies.

Sprightly youth and close application will hardly stand together. Felton.

Stand no more off,
But give thyself unto my sick desires. Shakespeare.

55. To STAND off. To forbear friendship or intimacy.

Our bloods pour'd altogether
Would quite confound distinction; yet stand off
In differences so mighty. Shakespeare.

Such behaviour frights away friendship, and makes it stand off in dislike and aversion.

Though nothing can be more honourable than an acquaintance with God, we stand off from it, and will not be tempted to embrace it. Atterbury.

56. To STAND off. To have relief; to appear protuberant or prominent.

Picture is best when it standeth off, as if it were carved; and sculpture is best when it appeareth so tender as if it were painted: when there is such a softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroked them in oil. Wolton on Architecture.

57. To STAND out. To hold resolution;
to hold a post; not to yield a point.

King John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church. Shaks.
Pontinius knows not you,
While you stand out upon these traitorous terms.

Let not men flatter themselves, that though they find it difficult at present to combat and stand out against an ill practice; yet that old age would do that for them, which they in their youth could never find in their hearts to do for themselves.

Scarce can a good-natured man refuse a compliance with the solicitations of his company, and stand out against the railery of his familiars.

58. To STAND out. Not to comply; to secede.

Thou shalt see me at Tullus' face:
What, art thou stiff? stand'st out? Shakespeare.

My thoughts press! ere that the tempest roars,
Stand to your tackles, mates, and stretch your oars.

61. To STAND to. To remain fixed in a purpose.

He that will pass his land,
As I have mine, may set his hand
And heart unto this deed, when he hath read;
And make the purchase spread
To both our goods if he to it will stand. Herbert.
I still stand to it, that this is his sense, as will appear from the design of his words. Stillingfleet.

62. To STAND to. To abide by a contract or assertion.

As I have no reason to stand to the award of my enemies; so neither dare I trust the partiality of my friends. Dryden.

63. To STAND under. To undergo; to sustain.

If you unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

The king knowing well that it stood him upon,
by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time, by so much the sooner to dispatch with the rebels. Bacon.

It stands me much upon
To enervate this objection. Hudibras.

Does it not stand them upon, to examine upon what grounds they presume it to be a revelation from God? Locke.

68. To STAND upon. To value; to take pride.

Men stand very much upon the reputation of their understandings, and of all things hate to be accounted fools: the best way to avoid this imputation is to be religious. Tillotson.

We highly esteem and stand much upon our birth, though we derive nothing from our ancestors but our bodies; and it is useful to improve this advantage, to imitate their good examples.

69. To STAND upon. To insist.

A rascally, yea-fur-smooth knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and thence stand upon security.

To STAND. v. a.

Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze. Shaks.

The Earl of Northampton followed the horse so closely, that they made a stand, when he furiously charged and routed them. Clarendon.

Once more the fleeting soul came back,
To inspire the mortal frame,
And in the body took a doubtful stand,
Hovering like expiring flame,
That mounts and falls by turns. Dryden.

At every turn she made a little stand,
And thrust among the thorns her lily hand
To draw the rose. Dryden.

4. Stop; interruption.

The greatest part of trade is driven by young merchants, upon borrowing at interest; so as, if the usurer either call in, or keep back his money, there will ensue presently a great stand of trade.

Should this circulation cease, the formation of bodies would be at an end, and nature at a perfect stand. Woodward.

5. The act of opposing.

We are come off
Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Shakespeare.

6. Highest mark; stationary point; point from which the next motion is regressive.

Our sons but the same things can wish and do;
Vice is at stand, and at the highest flow:
Then, satiate, spread thy sails; take all the winds can blow. Dryden.

In the beginning of summer the days are at a stand, with little variation of length or shortness;
because the diurnal variation of the sun partakes more of a right line than of a spiral. Dryden.

The sea, since the memory of all ages, hath continued at a stand, without considerable variation.

7. A point beyond which one cannot proceed.

Every part of what we would,
Must make a stand at what your highness will.

Flora vouchsaf'd the growing work to view;
Finding the painter's science at a stand,
The goddess snatch'd the pencil from his hand:
And finishing the piece, she smiling said,
Behold one work of mine that ne'er shall fade. Prior.

8. Difficulty; perplexity; embarrassment; hesitation.

A fool may so far imitate the mien of a wise man, as at first to put a body to a stand what to make of him. L'Estrange.

The well-shaped changeling is a man, has a rational soul, though it appear not: this is past doubt.
Make the ears a little longer, then you begin to boggle: make the face yet narrower, and then you are at a stand. Locke.

9. A frame or table on which vessels are placed.

Such squires are only fit for country towns,
To stink of ale, and dust a stand with clowns;
Who, to be chosen for the land's protectors,
Tope and get drunk before the wise electors.

After supper a stand was brought in, with a brass vessel full of wine, of which he that pleas'd might drink; but no liquor was forced.

Laugh'd all the powers who favour tyranny,
And all the standing army of the sky. Dryden.

Money being looked upon as the standing measure of other commodities, men consider it as a standing measure, though when it has varied its quantity, it is not so. Locke.

Thus doth he advise them to erect among themselves standing courts by consent. Kettellwell.

Such a one, by pretending to distinguish himself from the herd, becomes a standing object of railleury. Addison.

The common standing rules of the Gospel are a more powerful means of conviction than any miracle. Atterbury.

Great standing miracle, that Heaven assign'd!
'Tis only thinking gives this turn of mind. Pope.

2. Lasting; not transitory.

The landlord had swelled his body to a prodigious size, and worked up his complexion to a standing crimson. Addison.

3. Stagnant; not running.

He turned the wilderness into a standing water. Psalm civii.

This made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb. Milton, P. L.

4. Fixed; not moveable.

There's his chamber,
His standing bed and trundle bed. Shakespeare.

5. Continuing erect; not fallen; not cut down.

He let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines. Judges, xv. 5.

STANDING. n. s. [from stand.]

1. Continuance; long possession of an office, character, or place.

Nothing had been more easy than to command a patron of a long standing. Dryden.
Although the ancients were of opinion that Egypt was formerly sea; yet this tract of land is as old, and of as long a standing as any upon the continent of Africa. Woodward.

I wish your fortune had enabled you to have continued longer in the university, till you were of ten years' standing. Swift.

2. Station; place to stand in.

Such ordnance as he brought with him, because it was fitter for service in field than for battery, did only beat down the battlements, and such little standings. Knolles, Hist.

His coming is in state; I will provide you a good standing to see his entry. Bacon.

3. Power to stand.

I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing. Ps. lxi.

4. Rank; condition.

STANDISH.† n. s. [stand and dish.] A case for pen and ink.

I have newly made at least an essay of my invention in the structure of a little pen standish. Wotton, Rem. p. 339.

A Grub-street patriot does not write to secure, but get something; should the government be overturned, he has nothing to lose but an old standish. Addison.

I bequeath to Dean Swift, esq. my large silver standish, consisting of a large silver plate, an ink-pot, and a sand-box. Swift.

STANE.† n. s. [stæn, Sax.] Our northern word for stone.

STANG.† n. s. [stæng, Saxon; ystang, Welsh; stæng, Su. Goth.]

1. A perch; a measure of land.

These fields were intermingled with woods of half a stang, and the tallest tree appeared to be seven feet high. Swift.

2. A long bar; a wooden pole; the shaft of a cart: used in several parts of the north of England.

3. To ride the STANG. The preceding sense, and the present expression connected with it, Dr. Johnson has overpassed. It is still remembered in parts of the north of England; and may be traced to a very ancient origin. See Mr. Callander's account of the Gothick, nid stang, the spear or pole of infamy, in his Two Anc. Scott. Poems, 1782, p. 153. To ride the stang, is to be mounted on a strong pole, borne on men's shoulders, and carried about from place to place; the rider representing usually a henpecked husband, and sometimes the husband who had beaten his wife. To ride skimmington, is, in some parts of England, of much the same import. See SKIMMINGTON, and Dr. Jamieson's Scott. Dict. in V. STANG.

A custom [is] still prevalent among the country people of Scotland; who oblige any man, who is so unmanly as to beat his wife, to ride astride on a long pole, borne by two men, through the village, as a mark of the highest infamy. This they call riding the stang; and the person, who has been thus treated, seldom recovers his honour in the opinion of his neighbours. When they cannot lay hold of the culprit himself, they put some young fellow on the stang or pole, who proclaims that it is not on his own account that he is thus treated, but on that of another person, whom he names. Callander, Two Anc. Scott. Poems, p. 154.

The riding of the stang on a woman that hath beat her husband is, as I have described, by one's riding upon a long piece of wood, carried by two others on their shoulders, where, like a herald, he proclaims the woman's name, &c.

Notes to Allan Ramsay's Poems, cited by Brand. There used formerly, and I believe it is still now and then retained, to be a kind of ignominious procession in the north of England, called riding the stang, when, as the glossary to Douglas's Virgil informs us, one is made to ride on a pole for his neighbour's wife's fault.

Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 107.

TO STANG.* v. n. [stanga, Icel.] To shoot with pain. North. Grose.

STANK.† adj. [stanco, Italian. Dr. Johnson.—Probably, as Serenius also notices, from the Icel. and Su. Goth. stanka, to pant for breath; and to stank is, in some parts of the north of England, to sigh.] Weak; worn out.

Diggon, I am so stiff and so stank,
That unneath I may stand any more,
And how the western wind bloweth sore,
Beating the withered leaf from the tree. Spenser.

TO STANK.* v. n. To sigh. See the adj. STANK.

STANK.* n. s. [stanc, Sax. ystanc, Welsh.] A dam, or bank, to stop water. Bailey. It has this meaning in the south and east of England. Ray. In old English, it meant a pond or dam of water. Mr. G. Chalmers.

The lighted and abiden beside a water stank.

R. of Brunne, Transl. of Langtoft.

STANK. The preterite of stink.

The fish in the river died, and the river stank.

Exod. vii.

STA'NNARY.* n. s. [from stannum, Latin; stén, tin, Cornish; stener, a tinner, pl. stenner. Pryce, Corn. Gramm.] A tin mine.

If by public law the mint were ordained to be only supplied by our stannaries, how currently would they pass for more precious than silver mines!

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 17.

STA'NNARY. adj. Relating to the tin-works.

A steward keepeth his court once every three weeks: they are termed stannary courts, of the Latin stannum, and hold plea of action of debt or trespass about white or black tin. Carew.

STA'NNYEL.* n. s. The common stone-hawk. See Mr. Steevens's note on Shakspeare. Dr. Jamieson and Mr. Mason consider the name as the Sax. stangula, which means the pelican. This may be doubted. It is called also stanchil in the north.

With what wing the stannyel checks at it!

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

STA'NZÁ. n. s. [stanza, Ital. stanc, Fr.] A number of lines regularly adjusted to each other; so much of a poem as contains every variation of measure, or relation of rhyme. Stanza is originally a room of a house, and came to signify a subdivision of a poem; a staff.

So bold as yet no verse of mine has been,

To wear that gem on any line,

Nor till the happy nuptial house be seen,

Shall any stanza with it shine. Cowley.

Horace confines himself strictly to one sort of verse or stanza in every ode. Dryden.

In quatrains, the last line of the stanza is to be considered in the composition of the first. Dryden.

VOL. III.

Before his sacred name flies every fault,
And each exalted stanza teems with thought.

Pope.

STAPLE.† n. s. [stapel, Belg. et Sueth. emporium, ab antiquiori et Goth. stapul, columna, ædes columnis compacta. Serenius. See also Lye and Du Cange in Vocce. Stapel and PATRONUS. "Patronus, Gloss. Sax. Ælfr. ubi de partibus domus, stapul, quæ basim sonat, ut observat Somnerus."]

1. A settled mart; an established emporium.

A staple of romance and lies,

False tears, and real perjuries.

Prior.

The customs of Alexandria were very great, it having been the staple of the Indian trade.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

Tyre Alexander the Great sacked; and, establishing the staple at Alexandria, made the greatest revolution in trade that ever was known.

Arbuthnot.

2. I know not the meaning in the following passage.

Henry II. granted liberty of coining to certain abbeys, allowing them one staple, and two puncheons, at a rate. Camden.

3. The original material of a manufacture.

At Leicester, for her wool whose staple doth excel,
And seems to overmatch the golden Phrygian fell.

Dryden.

STA'PLE. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Settled; established in commerce.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spongy softness made,
Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
To ruin with worse ware our staple trade.

Dryden.

2. According to the laws of commerce.

What needy writer would not solicit to work under such masters, who will take off their ware at their own rates, and trouble not themselves to examine whether it be staple or no?

Swift.

STA'PLE. n. s. [stapul, Saxon, a prop.] A loop of iron; a bar bent and driven in at both ends.

I have seen staples of doors and nails born.

Peacham.

The silver ring she pull'd, the door reclos'd:
The bold, obedient to the silken cord,
To the strong staple's inmost depth restor'd,
Secur'd the valves.

Pope, Odyssey.

STA'PLER.* n. s. [from staple.] A dealer: as, a wool-stapler.

I do not mean only the staplers of Humbergh and Rotterdam.

Howell, Lett. i. vi. 52.

STAR.† n. s. [It may be curious to notice the concurrence of various languages in regard to star. Persian, starra. See Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 315. Teut. sterre; Sax. steorpa; Bretonne, stér; Gr. ἀστὴρ; Germ. stern; Su. Goth. stierne; M. Goth. stairno. The word has been supposed by Wachter and others to have been formed from the verb signifying to rule, to govern, to direct; as sterren, Teut. steuren, Germ. stiuran, Goth.]

1. One of the luminous bodies that appear in the nocturnal sky.

When an astronomer uses the word star in its strict sense, it is applied only to the fix stars; but in a large sense it includes the planets.

Watts.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach

Fillip the stars; —

Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Hither the Syracusan's art translates Heaven's form, the course of things and human fates; .

The included spirit serving the star deck'd signs,
The living work in constant motions winds.

Hawewill.

As from a cloud his fulgent head,
And shape star bright, appear'd. Milton, P. L.

2. The pole-star.

Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more sailing by the star.

Shakspeare, Much Ado.

3. Configuration of the planets supposed to influence fortune.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star cross lovers take their life. Shakspeare.

We are apt to do amiss, and lay the blame upon our stars or fortune.

L'Esrange.

4. A mark of reference; an asterisk.

Remarks worthy of ripe observation, note with a marginal star.

Watts.

STAR of Bethlehem. n. s. [ornithogalum, Latin.] A flower. Miller.

Miller.

STARBOARD. n. s. [στερβορν, Saxon.] The right hand side of the ship, as larboard is the left.

Harris.

On shipboard the mariners will not leave their starboard and larboard, because some accounts it gibbish.

Bramhall.

STARCH.† n. s. [from stark, German, rigidus, durus, solidus; which Stiler and Wachter deduce from starren, rigere, indurare; hence the sense of stiff to the word: "a stark, durus, rigidus, derivatur starken, facere ut rigeat, à quo rursus fit starke et starke-mehl, gluten farinaceum, quo lintea solidantur." Wachter.]

1. A kind of viscous matter made of flour or potatoes, with which linen is stiffened, and was formerly coloured.

Has he

Dislik'd your yellow starch, or said your doublet was not exactly Frenchified?

Fletcher, Qu. of Corinth.

With starch thin laid on, and the skin well stretched, prepare your ground.

Peacham on Drawing.

2. A stiff, formal manner.

This professor is to infuse into their manners that beautiful political starch, which may qualify them for levees, conferences, visits.

Addison, Spect. No. 305.

STARCH.* adj. [starp, Sax.] Stiff; precise; rigid.

If this will not do, 'tis but misrepresenting sobriety as a starch and formal, and virtue as a laborious and slavish thing.

Killingbeck, Sermon. p. 230.

TO STARCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To stiffen with starch.

Her goodly countenance I've seen

Set off with kerchief starch'd and pinners clean.

Gay.

STA'RCHAMBER. n. s. [camera stellata, Lat.]

A kind of criminal court of equity.

Now abolished.

I'll make a starchamber matter of it: if he were twenty Sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esq.

Shakspeare.

STARCHED.† part. adj. [from starch.]

1. Stiffened with starch.

Who? this in the starched beard?

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

2. Stiff; precise; formal.

As supercilious — as a starcht gallant is of any thing that may disorder his dress.

Hammond, Works, iv. 614.

Does the Gospel any where prescribe a starcht squeezed countenance, a stiff formal gait, or a singularity of manners?

Swift.

STARCHEDNESS.* n. s. [from starcht.]

Stiffness; formality.

Chancing to smile at the Moor's deportment, as not answering the starchedness of his own nation.

L. Addison, West Barbary, (1671,) p. 105.

STARCHER.† n. s. [from starch.] One whose trade is to starch.

The tailors, starchers, semsters.

Marston, Com. of What you will.

STARCHLY.† adv. [from starch.] Stiffly; precisely.

In answer to all this, I might with good pretence enough talk starchly, and affect ignorance of what you would be at.

Swift, Lett. (in Sheridan's Life,) 1704.

STARCHNESS, n. s. [from starch.] Stiffness; preciseness.

To STARE.† v. n. [crapan, Sax. stara, Icel. et Sueth. fortiter adspectare. Serenius.]

1. To look with fixed eyes; to look with wonder, impudence, confidence, stupidity, or horror.

Her modest eyes, abashed to behold

So many gazers, as on her do stare,

Upon the lowly ground affixed are.

Spenser.

Their staring eyes, sparkling with fervent fire,
And ugly shapes, did nigh the man dismay,
That, were it not for shame, he would retire.

Spenser.

Look not big, nor stare nor fret:

I will be master of what is mine own.

Shaks.

They were never satisfied with staring upon their masts, sails, cables, ropes, and tacklings.

Abbott.

I hear

The tread of many feet steering this way;

Perhaps my enemies, who come to stare

At my affliction, and perhaps to insult.

Milton, S. A.

A satyr that comes staring from the woods,

Must not at first speak like an orator.

Waller.

And, while he stares around with stupid eyes,

His brows with berries and his temples dyes.

Dryden.

What dost thou make a shipboard?

Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?

Stark staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea?

Dryden.

Struggling, and wildly staring on the skies

With scarce recover'd sight.

Dryden.

Trembling the miscreant stood;

He star'd and roll'd his haggard eyes around.

Dryden.

Break out in crackling flames to shun thy snare,

Or hiss a dragon, or a tiger stare.

Dryden.

She paid a tradesman once, to make him stare.

Pope.

Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,

While the fops envy, and the ladies stare?

Pope.

Through nature and through art his rang'd,

And gracefully her subject chang'd:

In vain; her hearers had no share

In all she spoke, except to stare.

Swift.

2. To stand out prominent.

Take off all the staring straws and jaggs in the hive, and make them smooth.

Mortimer.

3. To stand up. [starren, Germ. rigere.] Obsolete.

His hair starreth, or standeth on end.

Barret, Alv. (1580.)

To STARE.* v. a.

1. To affect or influence by stares.

Why dost thou not

Try but the virtue of that Gorgon face,

To stare me into statue?

Dryden.

A bear, as I approached with my present, threw his eyes in my way, and stared me out of my resolution.

Addison, Guardian.

The wit at his elbow gave him a touch upon the shoulder, and stared him in the face with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres.

Addison, Spect.

2. To STARE in the face. To be undeniably evident to. Both the following and the preceding examples are among those under the neuter verb, in Dr. Johnson's dictionary; but improperly.

Is it possible for people without scruple to offend against the law, which they carry about them in indelible characters, and that stares them in the face whilst they are breaking it?

Locke.

STARE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fixed look.

I' the name of something holy, sir, why stand you

In this strange stare?

Shakspeare, Tempest.

The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,

And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red:

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,

And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair.

Dryden.

2. [Stæp, Sax. sterre, Teut. stare, Su. Goth. sturnus, Latin.] The staring, a bird.

He, that hath nothing but language only, may be no more praised than a popinjay, a pye, or a stare, when they speake feately.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 40.

STARER. n. s. [from stare.] One who looks with fixed eyes.

One self-approving hour whole years outweighs

Of stupid stares, and of loud huzzas.

Pope.

L'Estrange.

2. A fish so called.

Chambers.

STARHAWK. n. s. [astur, Lat.] A sort of hawk.

Ainsworth.

STARK.† adj. [crap, Sax. stark, Germ. stark, Teut. and sterk, Icel. are all used for strong, robust. The use of stark for stiff is shewn under the etymology of the substantive starch.]

1. Stiff; strong; unbending; unyielding.

I fele my limmes stark and sufficient

To don all that a man belongeth to.

Chaucer, March. Tale.

His heavy head devoid of careful care,
Whose senses all were straight benumbed and stark.

Spenser.

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff

Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The north is not so stark and cold. B. Jonson.
So soon as this spring is become stark enough,
it breaks the case in two, and slings the seed.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

That he hath been in love an hour.

Donne.

Those seditious, that seemed moderate before, became desperate, and those who were desperate seemed stark mad; whence tumults, confused halloosings and howlings.

Hayward.

Who, by the most cogent arguments, will disrobe himself at once of all his old opinions, and turn himself out stark naked in quest of new notions?

Locke.

In case squire South, all dressed up in feathers and ribands, stark staring mad, brandishing his sword.

Arbutnot.

STARGLY. adv. [from stark.] Stiffly; strongly.

As fast lock'd up in sleep as guiltless labour,
When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones.

Shakspeare.

STARLESS. adj. [from star.] Having no light of stars.

A boundless continent,
Dark, waste, and wild, under the frown of night,
Starless expos'd.

Milton, P. L.

Cato might give them furlous for another world;
But we, like sentries, are obliged to stand
In starless nights, and wait th' appointed hour.

Dryden.

STARLIGHT. n. s. [star and light.] Lustre of the stars.

Now they never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear or spangled starlight shewn.

Which in star-read were wont have best insight.
Spenser, F. Q.

STARRED. adj. [from star.]

1. Influenced by the stars with respect to fortune.

My third comfort,
Star'd most unluckily, is from my breast
Hal'd out to murder. Shaks. Wint. Tale.

2. Decorated with stars.

That star'd Ethiop queen, that strove
To set her beauty's praise above
The sea-nymphs. Milton, Il Pens.

He furious hurl'd against the ground
His sceptre star'd with golden studs around. Pope.

STAR'RING.† adj. [stellans, Latin; from star.] Dr. Johnson. — I doubt if there be any such word in the language as starring. The true word, in the passage from Crashaw given by Dr. Johnson, is staring; and I wonder that the sense did not convince him that starring could be only the mistake of the copyist. I shall leave Dr. Johnson's definition of starring to be fitted with an example by others, if such a word there be. And here I will give the forcible lines of Crashaw, which are a translation from the Italian of Marino:

"His eyes, the sullen dens of death and night,

"Startle the dull air with a dismal red:

"Such his fell glances as the fatal light

"Of staring comets, that look kingdoms dead."

See Crashaw's Poems, edit. 1670. p. 35.]
Shining with stellar light; blazing with sparkling light.

STAR'RY. adj. [from star.]

1. Decorated with stars; abounding with stars.

Deplne wond'ring mounts on high,
Above the clouds, above the starry sky! Pope.

2. Consisting of stars; stellar.

Such is his will, that paints
The earth with colours fresh,
The darkest skies with store
Of starry lights. Spenser.

Heaven and earth's compacted frame,
And flowing waters, and the starry flame,
And both the radiant lights, one common soul
Inspires and feeds, and animates the whole.
Dryden.

3. Resembling stars.

Tears had dimm'd the lustre of her starry eyes.
Shakespeare, Illustr.

STARSHOOT. n. s. [star and shoot.] An emission from a star.

I have seen a good quantity of that jelly, by the vulgar called a starshoot, as if it remained upon the extinction of a falling star. Boyle.

STARSTONE.* n. s. [star and stone.] A kind of stone, having joints resembling the form of a star.

Hereabout are found star-stones; but I was not then advised of it. Ray, Rem. p. 107.

TO START.† v. n. [from to stir; Sax. scrypan, to move. Scott, and Mr. H. Tooke. But it is the Su. Goth. stoerta, to start; and our word was, anciently, stert.]

1. To feel a sudden and involuntary twitch or motion of the animal frame, on the apprehension of danger.

Starting is an apprehension of the thing feared, and in that kind it is a motion of shrinking; and likewise an inquisition, in the beginning, what the matter should be, and in that kind it is a motion of erection; and, therefore, when a man would listen suddenly to any thing, he starteth; for the starting is an erection of the spirits to attend.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A shape appear'd
Bending to look on me: I started back;
It start'd back. Milton, P. L.

An open enemy to flattery, especially from a friend, from whom he started to meet the slightest appearance of that servile kindness. Felt.

I start as from some dreadful dream,
And often ask myself if yet awake. Dryden, Span. Friar.

As his doubts decline,
He dreads just vengeance, and he starts at sin. Dryden.

He starts at every new appearance, and is always waking and solicitous for fear of a surprise. Collier on Covetousness.

2. To rise suddenly; commonly with up.
There started up, in Queen Elizabeth's reign, a new Presbyterian sect, which tendered a form of discipline to the queen, and to the state. White.

Charm'd by these strings, trees starting from the ground

Have follow'd with delight the powerful sound. Roscommon.

They starting up beheld the heavy sight. Dryd.

The mind often works in search of some hidden idea, though sometimes they start up in our minds of their own accord. Locke.

Might Dryden bless once more our eyes,
New Blackmores and new Milbourns must arise;

Nay, should great Homer lift his awful head,
Zoilus again would start up from the dead. Pope.

3. To move with sudden quickness.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start, and raise up their drowsy heads. Cleveland.

A spirit, fit to start into an empire,
And look the world to law. Dryden, Cleomenes.

She at the summons roll'd her eyes around,
And snatch'd the starting serpents from the ground. Pope.

4. To shrink; to winch.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakspeare.

5. To deviate.

The lords and gentlemen take all the meanest sort upon themselves; for they are best able to bring them in, whensoever any of them starteth out. Spenser on Ireland.

Th' old drudging sun from his long-beaten way
Shall at thy voice start and misguide the day;
The jocund orbs shall break their measur'd pace,
And stubborn poles change their allotted place. Cowley.

I rank him with the prodigies of fame,
With things which start from nature's common rules,
With bearded infants, and with teeming mules. Creech.

Keep your soul to the work when ready to start aside, unless you will be a slave to every wild imagination. Watts.

6. To set out from the barrier at a race.

It seems to be rather a terminus à quo than a true principle, as the starting post is none of the horse's legs. Boyle.

Should some god tell me, that I should be born
And cry again, his offer I should scorn;
Asham'd, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting place. Denham.

When from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race. Dryden.

STATE.† n. s. [status, Lat.]

1. Condition; circumstances of nature or fortune.

I do not, brother,
Infer as if I thought my sister's state Secure.

Milton, Comus.

I found the whole city highly concerned for the hazardous state of Candia, which was lost soon after. Dominico Cantarini, the present duke, was sedulous in that affair.

Brown, Trav.

Their sins have the aggravation of being sins against grace, and forsaking and departing from God, which respect makes the state of apostates as the most unexcusable, so the most desperately dangerous state.

Hammond.

Thus have his prayers for others altered and amended the state of his own heart.

Law.

Relate what Latium was,
Declare the past and present state of things.

Dryden, Æn.

Like the papists is your poet's state,
Poor and disarm'd.

Pope.

2. Modification of any thing.

Keep the state of the question in your eye.

Boyle.

3. Stationary point; crisis; height; point from which the next movement is regression.

The deer that endureth the womb but eight months, and is compleat at six years, cannot live much more than thirty, as having passed two general motions; that is, its beginning and increase; and having but two more to run through, that is, its state and declination.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Tumours have their several degrees and times;
as beginning, augment, state, and declination.

I hear her talk of state matters and the senate.

B. Jonson.

What he got by fortune,
It was the state that now must make his right.

Daniel.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land for the space of six weeks.

Bacon.

It is better the kingdom should be in good estate, with particular loss to many of the people, than that all the people should be well, and the state of the kingdom altogether lost.

Hayward.

It is a bad exchange to wound a man's own conscience, thereby to save state sores.

King Charles.

For you we stay'd, as did the Grecian state
Till Alexander came.

Waller.

Since they all live by begging, it were better for the state to keep them.

Graunt.

These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
And awful Rhadamantus rules the state;

Dryden, Æn.

7. Hence single state in Shakspeare for individuality.

My thought, whose murder is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise.

True to herself, shall barb'rous aid refuse.

Roscommon.

There kings receiv'd the marks of so'reign
pow'r:

In state the monarchs march'd, the lictors bore
The awful axes and the rods before.

Dryden, Æn.

Let my attendants wait: I'll be alone,
Where least of state, where most of love is shown.

Dryden.

To appear in their robes would be a troublesome piece of state.

Collier.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud;
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears,
His very state acknowledging his fears.

Prior.

If God has delivered me up to evil spirits, to be dragged by them to places of torments, could it be any comfort to me, that they found me upon a bed of state?

Law.

12. Dignity; grandeur.

She instructed him how he should keep state,
And yet with a modest sense of his misfortunes.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

The swan—rows her state with oily feet.

He was staid, and in his gait
Preserv'd a grave majestic state.

Butler.

Such cheerful modesty, such humble state,
Moves certain love.

Waller.

Can this imperious lord forget to reign,
Quit all his state, descend, and serve again?

Pope, Statius.

He will consider, not what arts, or methods, or application will soonest make him richer and greater than his brethren, or remove him from a shop to a life of state and pleasure; but will consider what arts, what methods, what application can make worldly business most acceptable to God, and make a life of trade a life of holiness, devotion, and piety.

Law.

13. A seat of dignity.

This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

As she affected not the grandeur of a state with a canopy, she thought there was no offence in an elbow chair.

Arbutnot.

The brain was her study, the heart her state room.

Arbutnot.

14. A canopy; a covering of dignity.

Over the chair is a state made round of ivy, somewhat whiter than ours; and the state is curiously wrought with silver and silk.

Bacon.

His high throne,—under state
Of richest texture spread, at th' upper end
Was plac'd.

Milton, P. L.

15. A person of high rank. Obsolete. See STATES.

The archbishop of Grenada saying to the arch-my life hath rather been contemplative than active.

Bacon.

Council! What's that? a pack of bearded slaves,

The scavengers that sweep state nuisances,
And are themselves the greatest.

Dryden, Cleom.

I am accus'd of reflecting upon great state- folks.

Swift.

TO STATE. v. a. [constater, Fr.]

1. To settle; to regulate.

This is so statèd a rule, that all casuists press it in all cases of damage.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

This is to state accounts, and looks more like merchandise than friendship.

Collier of Friendship.

He is capable of corruption, who receives more than what is the statèd and unquestioned fee of his office.

Addison.

2. To represent in all the circumstances of modification.

Many other inconveniences are consequent to this statèd of this question; and particularly that, by those which this state it, there hath never yet been assigned any definite number of funda-mentals.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Its present state stateth it to be what it now is.

Hale.

Were our case statèd to any sober heathen, he would never guess why they who acknowledge the necessity of prayer, and confess the same God, may not ask in the same form.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

To state fairly, imitation is the most advantageous way for a translator to shew himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the memory of the dead.

Dryden.

I pretended not fully to state, much less demonstrate, the truth contained in the text.

Atterbury.

Though I don't pretend to state the exact degree of mischief that is done by it, yet its plain and natural tendency to do harm is sufficient to justify the most absolute condemnation of it.

Law.

STA'TEDLY.* adv. [from the part. stated.] Regularly; not occasionally.

Why should not the body assume statedly the air of a thing, to which it is so often obliged to suit itself?

Ld. Keeper Williams, Lett. (in 1622.) Cabal. p. 111.

STA'TEROOM. n. s. [from state and room.]

A magnificent room in a palace or great house.

STATES.† n. s. pl. [from state.] Nobility.

Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Mason thus hastily cavils at the definition: "What is here put as a general meaning of the word, seems only applicable to a certain number of the Dutch nobility." Mr. Mason had not noticed the fifteenth sense of state, which Dr. Johnson defines "a person of high rank," and illustrates by a citation from Latimer, whose word, however, he had before given as estate, and which certainly had the same meaning. See the sixth sense of ESTATE. States, in the plural, for nobility, persons of high rank, was formerly not unusual.

The other scepter-bearing states arose.

Chapman, Il. 2.

Kings, queens, and states, Maids, matrons.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

STA'TESMAN.† n. s. [state and man.]

Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be.

Shakespeare, Othello.

It is a weakness which attends high and low; the statesman, who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the plough.

South.

Absolute power is not a plant that will grow in this soil; and statesmen who have attempted to cultivate it here, have pulled on their own and their master's ruin.

Davenant.

A British minister must expect to see many friends fall off, whom he cannot gratify, since, to use the phrase of a late statesman, the pasture is not large enough.

Addison.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom

Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home.

Pope.

3. One who occupies his own estate; a small landholder. Used in several parts of England, but especially in the northern.

STA'TESWOMAN. n. s. [state and woman.]

A woman who meddles with publick affairs: in contempt.

How she was in debt, and where she meant

To raise fresh sums: she's a great stateswoman!

Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. A place where any one is placed.

The seditious remained within their station, which, by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp.

Hayward.

The planets in their station listening stood.

Milton, P. L.

4. Post assigned; office.

Michael in either hand leads them out of Paradise, the fiery serpent waving behind them, and the cherubims taking their stations to guard the place.

Milton.

5. Situation; position.

To single stations now what years belong,
With planets join'd, they claim another song.

Creech.

The fig and date, why love they to remain
In middle station and an even plain;
While in the lower marsh the gourd is found,
And while the hill with olive-shade is crown'd?

Prior.

6. Employment; office.

No member of a political body so mean, but it may be used in some station or other. L' Etrange.
By spending this day in religious exercises, we acquire new strength and resolution to perform God's will in our several stations the week following.

Nelson.

They believe that the common size of human understanding is fitted to some station or other.

Swift.

Whether those who are leaders of a party arrive at that station more by a sort of instinct, or influence of the stars, than by the possession of any great abilities, may be a point of much dispute.

Swift.

7. Character; state.

Far the greater part have kept their station.

Milton.

8. Rank; condition of life.

I can be contented with an humbler station in the temple of virtue, than to be set on the pinnacle.

To STA'TION.† v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a certain post, rank, or place.

He gained the brow of the hill, where the English phalanx was stationed.

Ld. Lyttelton.

STA'TIONARY.† adj. [stationnaire, Fr. Cotgrave.]

1. Fixed; not progressive.

Mine own businesses are rather stationary than retrograde.

Wotton, Rem. p. 565.

Between the descent and ascent, where the image seemed stationary, I stopped the prism, and fixed it in that posture, that it should be moved no more.

Newton, Opt.

2. Respecting place.

The same harmony and stationary constitution, as it happened in many species, so doth it fall out in individuals.

Brown.

3. Belonging to a stationer.

STA'TIONER.† n. s. [from station.]

1. A bookseller. ["The term stationers was appropriated to booksellers in the year 1622.—The company of stationers existed long before the invention of printing. A stationer, therefore, was a dealer who kept a shop or stall, as distinguished from an itinerant vender, whether of books or broomsticks." Pegge, Anec. of the Eng. Lang. 2d edit.]

p. 336. Mr. Pegge might have illustrated this curious circumstance by the following passage from a forgotten book: "Such other places, where like markets are kept; as, at Brussels, Lovaine, &c. I will not enter into particulars concerning such places; your own consciences are best witnesses what pernicious projects, what calumnious detractions, are there on foot: I only say, that your standing stationers, and assistants at your miracle-markets, and miracle-forges, are for most part of lowliest life." Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, 1616, p. 174.]

Some modern tragedies are beautiful on the stage, and yet Tryphon the stationer complains they are seldom asked for in his shop. Dryden.

With authors, stationers obey'd the call; Glory and gain the industrious tribe provoke, And gentle dulness ever loves a joke.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. A seller of paper.

STA'TISM.* n. s. [from state.] Policy; the arts of government.

The greatest politician is the greatest fool; for he turns all his religion into hypocrisy, into statism, yea into atheism; making Christianity a very foot-stool to policy.

Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639), p. 613.

Hence it is that the enemies of God take occasion to blaspheme, and call our religion statism.

South, Serm. i. 151.

STA'TIST. n. s. [from state.] A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government.

I do believe,

Statist though I am none, nor like to be, That this shall prove a war. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Their orators tho' then extoll't, as those

The top of eloquence, statists indeed,

And lovers of their country. Milton, P. R.

STATISTICAL.* adj. [from statistical.] Political. This word, as well as the substantive, is of very recent date in our language.

STATISTICS.* n. s. pl. [from statism or statist.]

That part of municipal philosophy which states and defines the situation, strength, and resources of a nation. Mr. B. P. Capper, Statistical Account of the Population, &c. of England and Wales, 1801.

2. One that practises or professes the art of making statues.

As the statuary,

That, by the large size of Alcides' foot, Guess'd at his whole proportion.

Beaum. and Fl. Prophets.

On other occasions the statuaries took their subjects from the poets.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit and cheerfulness, when he considers that he will be read with pleasure but a very few years? This is like employing an excellent statuary to work upon mouldering stone. Swift.

STATUE.† n. s. [statue, Fr. statua, Latin.

The Latin form, Dr. Johnson might have added, was anciently followed by our writers; and continued to be in use till late in the seventeenth century. "Let there be a fountain, or some fair work of statuas, in the midst of this court." Bacon, Ess. 45. "The Greeks in that place raised him a statua." Sir T. Herbert, Trav. 242. "Crosses—famous for the excellencies of the statuas which were placed in them." Heylin, Hist. of the Presbyterians, 1670, p. 465.] An image; a solid representation of any living being.

The princess heard of her mother's statue, a piece many years in doing, and now newly perform'd by that rare Italian master.

Gibson's Camden.

STEAD.† n. s. [stads, Goth. stæb, Sax. sted, Dan. and Germ. stede, Dutch.]

1. Place. Obsolete in writing; but retained in our northern dialect: as, it lies in such a stead. Mr. Horne Tooke has mistaken Dr. Johnson, as if the great lexicographer had pronounced this substantive wholly obsolete. "The substantive stead is by no means obsolete, as S. Johnson calls it; nothing being more common and familiar than You shall go in their STEAD." Divers. of Purley, i. 438. True: and Dr. Johnson accordingly gives, as the second sense of stead, room, &c. without any notion of its being obsolete in this respect, and with abundance of examples according to Mr. Tooke's common and familiar usage, as he terms it.

Fly therefore, fly this fearful stead anon, Lest thy foolhardize work thee sad confusion.

Spenser, F. Q.

They nigh approached to the stead

Where as those mermaids dwelt.

Spenser, F. Q.

The term of life is limited,

Ne may a man prolong nor shorten it;

The soldier may not move from watchful stead,

Nor leave his stand until his captain bid.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Room; place which another had or might have. It is scarcely used but with the preposition in.

If we had taken them clean away, or else removed them, so as to place in their stead others, we had done worse.

Hooker.

There fell down many slain, and they dwell in their steads until the captivity.

1 Chron. v. 22.

Nor do the bold'st attempts bring forth

Events still equal to their worth;

But sometimes fail, and in their stead

Fortune and cowardice succeed.

Butler.

Jealousy then fir'd his soul,

And his face kindled like a burning coal;

Now look despair succeeding in her stead,

To livid paleness turns the glowing red.

Dryden.

VOL. III.

3. Use; help. To stand in stead; to be of great use; to help; to advantage.

A compleat man hath some parts, whereof the want could not deprive him of his essence; yet to have them standeth him in singular stead, in respect of special uses.

Hooker.

He makes his understanding the warehouse of lumber rather than a repository of truth, which will stand him in stead when he has occasion for it.

Locke.

The smallest act of charity shall stand us in great stead.

1. Fast in place; firm; fixed.

Such was this giant's fall, that seem'd to shake This steadfast globe of earth, as it for fear did quake.

Spenser.

Laws ought to be like stony tables, plain, steadfast, and immovable.

Spenser on Ireland.

How rev'rend is the face of this tall pile,

Whose massy pillars rear their aged heads

To bear aloft its arch'd and pond'rous roof,

By its own weight made steadfast and immovable,

Looking tranquillity! it strikes an awe

And terror on my aking sight.

Congreve.

2. Constant; resolute.

I hope her stubborn heart to bend, And that it then more steadfast will endure.

Spenser.

Be faithful to thy neighbour in his poverty;

South, Serm.

2. Without variation or irregularity.

So steadily does fickle fortune steer Th' obedient orb that it should never err.

Blackmore.

STEADINESS.† n. s. [from steady; Saxon, stæbignýtt.]

1. State of being not tottering nor easily shaken.

2. Firmness; constancy.

John got the better of his choleric temper, and wrought himself up to a great steadiness of mind, to pursue his interest through all impediments.

Arbuthnot.

3. Consistent unvaried conduct.

Steadiness is a point of prudence as well as of courage.

L'Estrange.

A friend is useful to form an undertaking, and secure steadiness of conduct.

Collier of Friendship.

STEADY. adj. [stæb, Sax.]

1. Firm; fixed; not tottering.

Their feet steady, their hands diligent, their eyes watchful, and their hearts resolute.

Sidney.

2. Regular; constant; undeviating; unremitted.

He—sails between worlds and worlds with steady wing.

Milton, P. L.

Steer the bounding bark with steady toil,

When the storm thickens and the billows boil.

Pope.

3. Not wavering; not fickle; not changeable with regard to resolution or attention.

Now reach I understand,

What oft my steadiest thoughts have search'd in vain.

Milton, P. L.

Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have, by the blessing of God, overcome all difficulties.

Dryden, Æn.

A clear sight keeps the understanding steady.

Locke.

To STEADY.* v. a. [from the adjective.]

To make steady.

The bird not only clings with its claws, but partly supports itself by strongly inclining its tail against the wall, making that a fulcrum; and thus, steadied, it works and plasters the materials into the face of the brick or stone.

White.

STEAK.† n. s. [stæck, Icelandic and Erse, a piece; steka, Swedish, to broil. Dr. Johnson.—It is the Sax. stæcce; which Mr. H. Tooke considers as the past participle of stæcan, to stick; a steak being "a piece or portion of flesh so small, as that it may be taken up and carried, stuck upon a fork, or any slender sticking instrument." Div. of Purl. ii. 221. With much greater probability may the word be referred to the Su. Goth. stæcka, to shorten, to cut off; stæcce is a slice, a piece of any thing. See Dr. Jamieson in V. STEIK.] A slice of flesh broiled or fried; a collop.

The surgeon protested he had cured him very well, and offered to eat the first steak of him.

Taiter.

Fair ladies who contrive

To feast on ale and steaks.

Swift.

To STEAL.† v. a. preterite, I stole; part. pass. stolen. [stilan, Goth. stela, Icel. stelan, Sax.]

1. To take by theft; to take clandestinely; to take without right. To steal generally implies secrecy; to rob, either secrecy or violence. Dr. Johnson. The primitive is still, (Teut. stille), tacitly, hiddenly. Callander.

Thou rann'st a tilt in honour of my love,
And stol'st away the ladies' hearts of France.

Shakespeare.

There are some shrewd contents in yon same paper,

That steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek ;

Some dear friend dead. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

A schoolboy finding a bird's nest, shews it his companion, and he steals it. Shakespeare.

How should we steal silver or gold?

Gen. xlv. 8.

2. To withdraw or convey without notice.

The law of England never was properly applied to the Irish, by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage and submission.

Spenser.

Let us shift away, there's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left.

Shakespeare.

3. To gain or effect by private and gradual means.

Young Lorenzo

Stole her soul with many vows of faith,

And ne'er a true one. Shakespeare.

Were it not that my fellow-schoolmaster

Doth watch Blanca's steps so narrowly,

'Twere good to steal our marriage. Shakespeare.

They hate being alone, for fear some affrighting apprehensions should steal or force their way in.

Calamy.

Variety of objects has a tendency to steal away
the mind from its steady pursuit of any subject.

Watts.

To STEAL. v. n.

1. To withdraw privily; to pass silently.

Fixt of mind to avoid further entreaty, and to fly
all company, one night she stole away. Sidney.

My lord of Amiens and myself

Did steal behind him as he lay along

Under an oak. Shakespeare.

I cannot think it,

That he would steal away so guilty like,

Seeing you coming. Shakespeare.

The most peaceable way, if you take a thief, is to let him shew what he is, and steal out of your company. Shakespeare.

At time that lover's flights doth still conceal,

Through Athen's gate have we devis'd to steal.

Shakespeare.

In my conduct shall your ladies come,

From whom you now must steal and take no leave.

Shakespeare.

Others weary of the long journey, lingering behind, were stolen away ; and they which were left, moiled with dirt and mire. Knolles.

A bride

Should vanish from her clothes into her bed,

As souls from bodies steal, and are not spy'd.

Donne.

The vapour of charcoal hath killed many ;
and it is the more dangerous, because it cometh without any ill smell, and stealthily on by little and little.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A soft and solemn breathing sound,
Rose like a steam of rich distill'd perfumes,
And stole upon the air, that even silence

Was took ere she was ware. Milton, Comus.

As wise artists mix their colours so,

That by degrees they from each other go ;

Black steals unheeded from the neighbouring white,

So on we stole our blessed change. Dryden.

At a time when he had no steward, he stole away.

Swift.

Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury glow,

Now sighs steal out, and tears begin to flow. Pope.

2. To practise theft ; to play the thief ; to take any thing thievishly ; to have the habit of thieving.

Stealing is the taking from another what is his,
without his knowledge or allowance. Locke.

The good humour is to steal at a minute's rest.

— Convey, the wise it call ; steal ! a fico for the phrase ! Shakespeare.

STEAL.* n. s. A handle. So it is sometimes written, as well as stale, and stele ;
which see.

STEALER. n. s. [from steal.] One who steals ; a thief.

The transgression is in the stealer. Shakespeare.

STEALINGLY.† adv. [from stealing.] Slyly ;
by invisible motion ; by secret practice.

They were diverse motions, they did so stealthily slip one into another, as the latter part was ever in hand before the eye could discern the former was ended. Sidney.

She draws towards the countenance of her sister
Stanhope more and more, but stealthily.

Wolton, Rem. p. 462.

STEALTH. n. s. [from steal.]

1. The act of stealing ; theft.

The owner proveth the stealth to have been committed upon him by such an outlaw, and to have been found in the possession of the prisoner.

Spenser on Ireland.

In the secret dark that none reproves,
Their pretty stealths shall work, and snares shall spread. Spenser.

The stealth of mutual entertainment

With character too gross is written on Juliet.

Shakespeare.

The gods persuaded Mercury,

Their good observer, to this stealth.

Chapman, Iliad.

2. The thing stolen.

On his back a heavy load he bare
Of nightly stealths, and pillage several.

Spenser, F. Q.

Store of cabbins are but sluttish dens, that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealths, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with splinters.

Raleigh.

3. Secret act ; clandestine practice. By stealth means secretly ; clandestinely ; with desire of concealment ; but, like steal, is often used in a good sense.

The wisdom of the same spirit borrowed from melody that pleasure, which, mingled with heavenly mysteries, causeth the smoothness and softness of that which toucheth the ear, to convey as it were by stealth the treasure of good things into man's mind. Hooker.

I feel this youth's perfections,
With an invisible and subtle stealth,

To creep in at mine eyes. Shaks. Tw. Night.

The monarch, blinded with desire of wealth,

With steel invades his brother's life by stealth

Before the sacred altar. Dryden.

Let humble Allen, with an awkward shame,

Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame.

Pope.

STEALTHY. adj. [from stealth.] Done clandestinely ; performed by stealth.

Now wither'd murder, with his stealthy pace,

Moves like a ghost. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

STEAM. n. s. [†teme, Sax.] The smoke or vapour of any thing moist and hot.

Sweet odours are, in such a company as there is steam and heat, things of great refreshment.

Bacon.

His offering soon propitious fire from heaven

Consum'd with nimble glance and grateful steam.

Milton, P. L.

While the temple smok'd with hallow'd steam,

They wash the virgin. Dryden.

Such the figure of a feast

Which, were it not for plenty and for steam,

Might be resembled to a sick man's dream. King.

Some it bears in steams up into the air, in such a quantity as to be manifest to the smell, especially the sulphur. Woodward.

To STEAM. v. n. [†reman, Sax.]

1. To smoke or vapour with moist heat.

Let the crude humours dance

In heated brass, steaming with fire intense. Philips.

2. To send up vapours.

Ye mists that rise from steaming lake.

Milton, P. L.

See, see, my brother's ghost hangs hovering
there,

O'er his warm blood, that steams into the air.

Dryden.

O wretched we ! Why were we hurry'd down

This lubric and adulterate age ;

Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,

T' increase the steaming ordures of the stage ?

Dryden.

3. To pass in vapours.

Scarcely had Phœbus in the gloomy east

Got harnessed his fiery-footed team,

Ne rear'd above the earth his flaming crest,

When the last deadly smoke aloft did steam.

Spenser.

The dissolved amber plainly swam like a thin film upon the liquor, whence it steamed away into the air. Boyle.

These minerals not only issue out at these larger exits, but steam forth through the pores of the earth, occasioning sulphureous and other offensive stenches. Woodward.

To STEAM.* v. a. To exhale ; to evaporate.

How ill did him beseeome

In slouthful sleepe his molten heart to stema.

Spenser, F. Q.

STEARN.† n. s. Applied by Spenser to the urn of Aquarius. [†æna, Saxon, a pot.]

A vessel of stone. See STEEN. Dr.

Johnson merely notices stearn as used for stone by Spenser ; and Mr. Mason gravely adds, that it is uncertain whether Spenser means it as an adjective or substantive. Stearn is a jar, and still so called in the west of England.

Upon a huge great earth-pot stearn he stood,

From whose wide mouth there flowed forth the Romane flood. Spenser, F. Q. vii. 42.

STEATOMA. n. s. [†στέατομα.] A species of wen.

If the matter in a wen resembles milk-curds,
the tumour is called atheroma ; if like honey,
meliceris ; and if composed of fat, steatoma.

Sharp, Surgery.

STEE, or Stey.* n. s. A ladder. See

STAIR. Common in the north of England.

STEED. n. s. [†stēde, Saxon.] A horse for state or war.

My noble steed I give him ;

With all his trim belonging. Shakespeare, Macb.

Impresses quaint, caparisons and steeds.

Milton, P. L.

Stout are our men, and warlike are our steeds.

Waller.

She thought herself the trembling dame who fled,

And him the grisly ghost that spurr'd the infernal steed. Dryden.

Who, like our active African, instructs

The fiery steed, and trains him to his hand ?

Addison, Cato.

See ! the bold youth strain up the threatening steep ;

Hang o'er their coursers' heads with eager speed,

And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed.

Pope.

Some nymphs affect a more heroic breed,

And vault from hunters to the manag'd steed.

Young.

STEEL.† n. s. [†stal, †stēle, Sax. stael,

Dutch, stal, Icel. à stel, Su. Goth. rigi- dus : sic Icel. staela, indurare. Serenius.]

1. A kind of iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain closer and finer than common iron. Steel, of all other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered; whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Steel is made from the purest and softest iron, by keeping it red-hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood-ashes, or other substances that abound in the phlogiston, for several hours in a close furnace.

Hill, Mat. Med.

At her back a bow and quiver gay,
Stuff'd with steel-headed darts wherewith she quell'd

The savage beasts in their victorious play. Spenser.
With mighty bars of long-enduring brass
The steel-bound doors and iron gates he ties.

Fairfax.

They are not charm'd against your points, of steel nor iron framed. Chapman.

A looking-glass, with the steel behind, looketh whiter than glass simple. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not readily strike fire with steel, much less with one another; nor a flint easily with a steel, if they both be wet; the sparks being then quenched in their eruption.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure
As might the strokes of two such arms endure.

Dryden.

2. It is often used metonymically for weapons or armour.

Brave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carr'd out his passage till he had fac'd the slave.

Shakespeare.

Polish'd steel from far severely shines. Dryden.

He sudden as the word,

In proud Plixiippus' bosom plung'd the sword;
Toxews amaz'd, and with amazement slow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood.

Dryden.

3. Chalybeate medicines.

After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an antiacid. Arbuthnot.

4. It is used proverbially for hardness: as, heads of steel.

STEEL. adj. Made of steel.

A lance then took he, with a keene steale head,
To be his keepe off, both 'gainst men and dogges.

Chapman.

To STEEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To point or edge with steel.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. To make hard or firm. It is used, if it be applied to the mind, very often in a bad sense.

Lies well steel'd with weighty arguments.

Shakespeare.

So service shall with steeld fingers toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

From his metal was his party steel'd;
Which, once in him rebated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead.

Shakespeare.

O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts,
Possess them not with fear. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms?

Addison.

Man, foolish man!
Scarce know'st thou how thyself began;
Yet, steel'd with study'd boldness, thou dar'st try
To send thy doubted reason's dazzled eye
Through the mysterious gulph of vast immensity.

Prior.

Let the steel'd Turk be deaf to matron's cries,
See virgins ravish'd with relentless eyes. Tickell.
So perish all whose breasts the furies steel'd,
And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield.

Pope.

STEELY.† adj. [from steel.]

1. Made of steel.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance.

Shakespeare.

Here smokes his forge, he bares his sinewy arm,
And early strokes the sounding anvil warm;
Around his shop the steely sparkles flew,
As for the steed he shap'd the bending shoe. Gay.

2. Hard; firm; unmoved; unfeeling.

That she would unarm her noble heart of that steely resistance against the sweet blows of love.

Sidney.

That steely heart yet relents not!

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

STEELYARD.† n. s. [steel and yard.]
A kind of balance, in which the weight is moved along an iron rod, and grows heavier as it is removed farther from the fulcrum.

Hither your steelyards, butchers, bring to weigh
The pound of flesh Antonio's bond must pay!

Warton, Prolog. on the Winc. Playhouse.

The muscle at the shoulder, by which the arm is raised, is fixed nearly in the same manner as the load is fixed upon a steelyard, within a few decimals, we will say, of an inch from the centre upon which the steelyard turns.

Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 9.

STEEN, or STEAN.† n. s. A vessel of clay or stone. See STEAN.

STEEN'NKIRK. n. s.* Formerly a cant term for a neckcloth.

A quaker is proud of his diminutive cravat, than a beau of his steenkirk.

Lacocks, &c. (1701.) p. 53.

As for ruffles and steenkirks, they were never added in the very splendor and luxury of the empire!

King, Miscell. p. 221.

STEEP.† adj. [steep, Saxon; steepa, Su.
Goth. to fall or run down with violence;
stupa, Swed. to fall. Serenius.] Rising or descending with great inclination;
precipitous.

The mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall. Ezek. xxxviii. 20.

He now had conquer'd Ansur's steep ascent.

Addison.

STEEP. n. s. Precipice; ascent or descent approaching to perpendicularity.

As that Theban monster that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spight

Cast herself headlong from the Ismenian steep.

Milton, P. R.

As high turrets for their airy steep
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humility.

Dryden.

Instructs the beast to know his native force,
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong steep of anarchy.

Dryden.

We had on each side naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thousand irregular steeps and precipices.

Addison.

Leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,

Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep.

Gay.

To STEEP. v. a. [stippen, Dutch.] To soak; to macerate; to imbue; to dip.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellness loud he gan to weep. Spenser.

He, like an adder, lurking in the weeds,
His wandering thought in deep desire does steep;
And his frail eye with spoil of beauty feeds.

Spenser.

A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland. Shaks. Hen. VI.

The conquering wine hath steep'd our sense
In soft and delicate Lethe. Shakspeare.

Many dream not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favours. Shaks. Cymbeline.

Four days will quickly steep themselves in night:
Four nights will quickly dream away the time.

Shakspeare.

Most of the steepings are cheap things, and the goodness of the crop is a great matter of gain.

Bacon.

Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood;
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours and their irksome years.

Dryden.

Wheat steeped in brine twelve hours prevents the smuttiness. Mortimer, Husbandry.

STEE'PINESS. n. s.* [from steeply.] State or quality of being steep.

The cragginess and steepiness of places up and down is a great advantage to the dwellers, and makes them inaccessible.

Howell, Instr. For. Trav. p. 132.

STEE'PLE. n. s. [tepel, teipel, Saxon.]
A turret of a church generally furnished with bells; a spire.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage,
blow!

You cataracts and hurricanoes, spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks. Shakspeare.

What was found in many places, and preached for what fallen on the ground from the clouds, was but the seed of ivyberries, and though found in steeples or high places, might be conveyed thither or muted by birds.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

A raven I saw steepie-high, just over your house.

L'Estrange.

They, far from steeples and their sacred ground,
In fields their sullen conventicles found. Dryden.

STEE'PLED. adj.* [from steeply.] Towered;
adorned as with towers.

A steepled turbant on her head she wore.

Fairfax.

STEE'PLEHOUSE. n. s.* [steeply and house.]

A term given by separatists, with profane but impotent mockery, to the churches of the established religion of the land.

Anabaptist: the word in the original is ecclesia, not templum, which never signifieth your steeply- house! Featley, Dippers Dipt. (1645.) p. 14.

About caps and hoods, vestures and gestures,
*steeply*houses and churches, what fierce conflicts!

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 154.

These are the weathercocks not on, but against,
*steeply*houses, as churches are styled in our New Children's dictionary!

Whitlock, Man. of the Engl. (1654.) p. 161.

He maketh amends at a *steeply*house, as those sacred oratories are in derision called.

Whitlock, ut sup. p. 186.

Their scorn cast upon the material edifices or churches wherein divine service is celebrated, calling them *steeply*houses in derision.

Hallywell, Acc. of Familism rev. by the Quakers, p. 35.

STEEPLY. adv. [from steep.] With precipitous declivity.

STEE'PNES. n. s. [from steep.] Precipitous declivity.

The craggedness or steepness of that mountain maketh many parts of it inaccessible.

Brerewood on Language.
Lord Lovel swam over Trent on horseback, but could not recover the farther side, by reason of the steepness of the bank, and so was drowned.

Bacon, Hen. VII.
Vineyards, meadows, and cornfields lie on the borders and run up all the sides of the Alps, where the barrenness of the rocks, or the steepness of the ascent, will suffer them.

STEE'PY. adj. [from steep.] Having a precipitous declivity. A poetical word for steep.

Who hath dispos'd, but thou, the winding way,
Where springs down from the steepy crags do beat?

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
From steepy Othrys' top to Pylus drove
His herd; and for his pains enjoy'd his love.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme.

STEER. † n. s. [stiurs, Goth. stýne, stœp, Saxon; stier, German. Wachter and Serenius give the more ancient words, tiur, Su. Goth. tyr, Icel. tarus, Welsh, from the Celt. taro, taru, to but, to strike; whence probably the Latin taurus.] A young bullock.

They think themselves half exempted from law and obedience; and having once tasted freedom, do like a steer that hath been long out of his yoke, grudge and repine ever after to come under rule again.

Lacaon, Neptune's priest,
With solemn pomp then sacrific'd a steer.
Nor has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him.

To STEER. † v. a. [stiuran, Goth. stýra, stiorna, Icel. stœpan, stýpan, Saxon; stieren, Dutch.] To direct; to guide in a passage: originally used of a ship, but applied to other things.

Thus claimeth he the bote to steer.
A comely palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary gray,
That with a staff his feeble steps did steer,
Lest his long way his aged limbs should tire.

If a pilot cannot see the pole star, it can be no fault in him to steer his course by such stars as do best appear to him.

To STEER. v. n.

1. To direct a course at sea.

As when a ship by skilful steersmen wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail.

In a creature, whose thoughts are more than the sands, and wider than the ocean, fancy and passion must needs run him into strange courses, if reason, which is his only star and compass, be not that he steers by.

2. To conduct himself.

STEER.  n. s.* [from the verb.] The instrument at the stern of a vessel by which its course is regulated.

A naked ship without stere.

STEE'RAGE. n. s. [from steer.]

Having got his vessel launched and set afloat, he committed the steerage of it to such as he thought capable of conducting it.

2. Direction; regulation of a course.

He that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my suit.

3. That by which any course is guided.

His costly frame
Inscrib'd to Phœbus, here he hung on high,
The steerage of his wings, and cut the sky.

4. Regulation, r management of any thing.

You raise the honour of the peerage,
Proud to attend you at the steerage.

5. The stern or hinder part of the ship.

STEERER.  n. s.* [from steer.] A steers-man; a pilot.

Now what the artificer is to works of art, who orders and disposes them to other ends than by nature they were made; that is the Maker of all things to all natural agents, directing all their operations to ends which they cannot apprehend; and thus appears the Maker to be the Steerer of this great ship, the Law of this universal commonwealth, the General of all the hosts of heaven and earth.

STEERLESS.  adj.* [steer and less.] Having no steer or rudder.

He the childes mother fonde
Upon the sea, from every londe,
Within a ship was sterless.

In a ship sterless (God wot)
They han her set, and bidden her lerne sayle.

STEERSMAN. † n. s. [steer and man, or STEERSMAN. † mate; stœper-mon, Saxon.] A pilot; one who steers a ship.

The steersman seeks a reader course to run,
The souldier stirs, the gunner hies to gun.

What pilot so expert but needs must wreck,
Embark'd with such a steersmate at the helm?

In a storm, though the vessel be pressed never so hard, a skilful steersman will yet bear up against it.

Through it the joyful steersman clears his way,
And comes to anchor in his inmost bay.
STEG.  n. s.* [See STAG. Dr. Jamieson also mentions stegge, Icel. the male of birds, in V. STAIG.] A gander: common in the north of England.

STELLAR. adj. [from stella.] Astral; relating to the stars.

In part shed down
Their stellar virtue, on all kinds that grow
On earth; had merely apter to receive Perfection from the sun's more potent ray.

Salt dissolved, upon fixation, returns to its affected cubes, and regular figures of minerals, as the hexagonal of crystal, and stellar figure of the stone asteria.

STELLARY.* adj. [from stellar.] Astral; stary.

The milky way — is made up of infinite orbs of stars, such as that we view around us in a stary night; an infinite infinity of such groups of stellar orbs.

STELLATE. adj. [stellatus, Latin.] Pointed in the manner of a painted star.

One making a regulus of antimony, without iron, found his regulus adorned with a more conspicuous star than I have seen in several stellate reguluses of antimony and mars.

STELLATION. n. s. [from stella.] Emission of light as from a star.

STELLED. adj. Stary.

And quench'd the stelled fires.

STELLI'FEROUS. adj. [stella and fero.] Having stars.

To STELLIFY.* v. a. [stella and facio, Latin.] To make a star; to turn into a star. This is a frequent word in our old poetry.

Whether Jove will me stellify.
Chaucer, House of Fame, ii. 78.
By him who strives to stellify her name.

Chloris, in a general council of the gods, was proclaimed goddess of the flowers; and was to be stelled on earth.

STELLION. n. s. [stellio, Lat.] A newt.

STELLIONATE. n. s. [stellionat, Fr. stellionatus, Lat.] A kind of crime which is committed [in law] by a deceitful selling of a thing otherwise than it really is: as, if a man should sell that for his own estate which is actually another man's.

It discerneth of crimes of stellionate, and the inchoations towards crimes capital, not actually committed.

STELO'GRAPHY.* n. s. [στελογραφία, from στήλη, Gr. a pillar, and γραφω, to write; stélographie, Fr.] The art of writing upon a pillar.

This pillar (of Jacob) thus engraved gave probably the origin to the invention of stélography.

STEM. † n. s. [stemma, Lat. stemma, Sax. stamm, Germ. which Wachter derives from stan, to stand.]

1. The stalk: the twig.

Two lovely berries molded on one stem,
So with two seeming bodies, but one heart.

After they are first shot up thirty foot in length, they spread a very large top, having no bough nor twig in the trunk or stem.

Set them aslope a reasonable depth, and then they will put forth many roots, and so carry more shoots upon a stem.

This, ere it was in the earth,
God made, and every herb, before it grew
On the green stem.

The stem thus threaten'd and the sap in thee,
Drops all the branches of that noble tree.
Farewell, you flowers, whose buds with early care

I watch'd, and to the cheerful sun did rear:
Who now shall bind your stems? or, when you fall,
With fountain streams your fainting souls recall?

The louting Spring with lavish rain
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain.

2. [Staemma, Swed. stamm, Germ.] Family; race; generation. Pedigrees are drawn in the form of a branching tree.

I will assay her worth to celebrate,
And so attend ye toward her glittering state;
Where ye may all, that are of noble stem, Approach.

Milton, Arcades.

Whosoever will undertake the imperial diadem must have of his own wherewith to support it; which is one of the reasons that it hath continued these two ages and more in that stem, now so much spoken of.

Howell, Voc. For.

Dost thou in bounds aspire to deathless fame?
Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem.

Tickell.

3. Progeny; branch of a family.

This is a stem

Of that victorious stock, and let us fear
His native mightiness.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

4. [Stafu, Icel. prora.] The prow or forepart of a ship.

Orante's barque, ev'n in the hero's view,
From stem to stern, by waves was overborne.

Dryden.

To STEM.† v. a. [staemma, Su. Goth. which Serenius deduces from damm, repagulum.] To oppose a current; to pass cross or forward notwithstanding the stream.

They on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the cape,
Fly, stemming nightly tow'rd the pole.

Milton, P. L.

Above the deep they raise their scaly crests,
And stem the flood with their erected breasts.

Denham.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untought Indian on the stream did glide,
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,

Or fin-like oars did spread from either side.

Dryden.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

Pope.

STENCH. n. s. [from stencan, Sax.]

1. A stink; a bad smell.

Death, death! oh amiable and lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench, sound rottenness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night.

Shakespeare, K. John.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,

Are from their hives, and houses, driv'n away.

Shakespeare.

Physicians, by the stench of feathers, cure the rising of the mother.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The ministry will be found the salt of the earth, the thing that keeps societies of men from stench and corruption.

South.

The hoary Nar,
Corrupted with the stench of sulphur flows,
And into Tiber's streams the infected current throws.

Addison.

2. I find it used once for a good smell.

Black bulls and bearded goats on altars lie,
And clouds of savoury stench involve the sky.

Dryden.

To STENCH.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make to stink. Not proper.

The foulness of the ponds only stencheth the water.

Mortimer.

Dead hards stench every coast.

2. [For stanch, corruptly.] To stop; to hinder to flow.

They had better skill to let blood than stench it.

King Charles.

Restringents to stench and incrustatives to thicken the blood.

Harvey on Consumptions.

STENCHY.* adj. [from stench.] Having a bad smell.

Far nobler prospects these
Than gardens black with smoke in dusty towns,
Where stenchy vapours often blot the sun.

Dyer.

STENOGRAPHY.† n. s. [στένος and γραφία,
Gr. stenographie, Fr.] The art of writing in short hand.

Some will preambles a tale impertinently, and cannot be delivered of a jest, till they have travelled an hour in trivials, as if they had taken the whole tale by stenography, and now were putting it out at large.

Feltham, Res. i. 93.

O the accurst stenography of state!
The princely eagle shrunk into a bat.

Cleaveland.

To STENT.* v. a. To restrain; to stint.

To stent is the Scottish word for cease or stop. Spenser uses it merely for the sake of his rhyme. See the verb active STINT.

Therewith Sir Guyon left his first emprise,
And turning to that woman, fast her hent
By the hoare lockes that hong before her eyes,
And to the ground her threw: yet nould she stent
Her bitter rayling and foule revilement.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. iv. 12.

STENTORIAN.* adj. [from Stentor. See STENTOROPHONIC. The French have an old word like our stentorian, viz.
stentoré; as, "voix stentorée, a huge voice, such a one as the Grecian Stentor had." Cotgrave.] Loud; uncommonly loud.

Cockeram.

They echo forth in stentorian clamours.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 326.

STENTOROPHONICK.† adj. [from Stentor, the Homeric herald, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty men, and φωνή, a voice.] Loudly speaking or sounding.

I heard a formidable noise,
Loud as the stent'rophonick voice,
That roar'd far off!

Hudibras, iii. 1.

Of this stentorophonick horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican.

Derham, Phys. Theol.

To STEP. v. n. [stæppan, Saxon; stap-pen, Dutch.]

1. To move by a single change of the place of the foot.

One of our nation hath proceeded so far, that he was able, by the help of wings, in a running pace, to step constantly ten yards at a time.

Wilkins, Math. Mag.

2. To advance by a sudden progression.

Whosoever first after the troubling the water stepped in, was made whole.

John, v. 4.

Ventidius lately
Bury'd his father, by whose death he's stepp'd into a great estate.

Shakespeare, Timon.

3. To move mentally.

When a person is hearing a sermon, he may give his thoughts leave to step back so far as to recollect the several heads.

Watts.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, the only true mirror of that ancient world.

Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

4. To go; to walk.

I am in blood
Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. To come as it were by chance.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medalist.

Addison.

6. To take a short walk.

See where he comes: so please you, step aside;
I'll know his grievance.

Shaks. Rom. and Jul.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,
Stepp'd, as they said, to the next thicket-side.
To bring me berries.

Milton, Comus.

When your master wants a servant who happens to be abroad, answer, that he had but that minute stept out.

Swift.

7. To walk gravely, slowly, or resolutely.
Pyrrhus, the most ancient of all the bashaws, stept forth, and appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage,

In scorn of your soft locks and tender age!

Cowley.

Home the swain retreats,
His flock before him stepping to the fold.

Thomson, Summer.

STEP. n. s. [stæp, Saxon; stap, Dutch.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou sound and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend
You and your ways.

Shaks. Tempest.

Who was the first to explore the untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in every step?

Addison, Cato.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops, slain in battle, were set in order upon a wooden step.

Knolles.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches.

Wotton.

Those heights where William's virtue might have staid,

And on the subject world look'd safely down,
By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made

Sublimar yet to raise his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, truth lies in a well; and, to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logic does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water.

Watts.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace.

Arbutnot on Coins.

4. A small length; a small space.

There is but a step between me and death.

1 Sam. xx. 3.

5. Walk; passage; (in the plural.)

O may thy pow'r, propitious still to me,
Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree

In this deep forest!

Dryden, Æn.

6. Gradation; degree.

The same sin for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof one man becometh
a more heinous offender than another.

Perkins.

7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered.

Newton.

One injury is best defended by a second, and this by a third: by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general, during pleasure, might have grown into a general for life,
and a general for life into a king.

Swift.

The querist must proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence, the final conclusion will arise. Watts.

8. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astrea took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear.

Dryden, Virg.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

10. Action; instance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage.† [Steop, Saxon, from repan, to deprive or make an orphan; for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter, or step-son; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Horne Tooke has lavishly insulted this remark of Dr. Johnson; but, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, has not himself hit upon the proper origin of step. “One easy corruption, Mr. Tooke says, of the word sted (place, or stead,) in composition, has much puzzled all our etymologists. Thus, viewing step as, in this connexion, a corruption of sted, he refers to the ‘Dan. collateral language,’ in which, he says, ‘the compounds remain uncorrupted; stedfader, stedmoder, &c. i. e. in the place of, instead of a father, &c.’ Div. of Purl. i. 441. But had this acute writer turned his eye to the Sw. or Germ. he would have found something, that would have lent more plausibility to his idea, as to the original meaning of the term; while he must have seen that there was no necessity for supposing so great a change of its form.” Dr. Jamieson, Scott. Dict. in V. GUD SONNE. Accordingly Dr. Jamieson cites the Su. Goth. stufader, stufmoder, stufson, and Germ. stiefvater, stiefmutter, stiefsohn; corresponding to the Sax. reop-fæder, reop-mobep, &c. and adds, that “sted being common in A.-Sax. as signifying place, it is incongruous to all the rules of analogy to suppose, that, in a solitary instance, without any apparent reason, it should be transformed in the same language into steop.” He then gives Wachter’s derivation of steop and stief from the A. Sax. stow, place, with his explanation of stief-fader as vice-father, which would have answered Mr. Tooke’s object better than the Danish words; but observes that Ihre prefers the etymon of Junius, which Dr. Johnson has also given, viz. repan or reopan, orbare; citing St. John, xiv. 18. Ne lære ic eop reopcilb, “I will not leave you orphans.” See more examples of a stepchild called an orphan in Lye. Step-father, step-son, and step-daughter, are terms almost obsolete in our language.]

How should their minds chuse but misdoubt, lest this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother? Hooker.

His wanton step-dame loved him the more;
But when she saw her offered sweets refuse,
Her love she turn’d to hate. Spenser.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill-ey’d unto you. Shakspeare.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false. Shakspeare.
Cato the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

This queene endured some troubles in the reign of her step-sonne King Henry the fifth. Weever.
The name of step-dame, your practis’d art,
By which you have estrang’d my father’s heart,
All you have done against me, or design,
Shews your aversion, but begets not mine. Dryden.

A step-dame too I have, a cursed she,
Who rules my hen-peck’d sire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

STEPPING.* n. s. [from step.] The act of going forward by steps.

Though short he fall of old Corvino’s age,
His steppings with the other footsteps fit.
More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 82.

STEPPINGSTONE. n. s. [step and stone.] Stone laid to catch the foot, and save it from wet or dirt.

Like steppingstones to save a stride,
In streets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STER.* Used in composition, as webster, malster, spinster, &c. Sonner derives this from the Sax. reope, direction, the power of a master. See Lye in V.
Sceope.

STERCORACEOUS. adj. [stercorosus, Lat.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body; then a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid flesh, and in small human faeces.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

STERCORATION. n. s. [from stercora, Lat.]
The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The first help is stercoration: the sheeps’ dung is one of the best, and the next dung of kine, and that of horses. Bacon.

Stercoration is seasonable. Evelyn, Kalendar.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves not only for the security of the seed, whilst it hangs upon the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the stercoration of the soil, and promotion of the growth, though not the first germination of the seminal plant. Ray on the Creation.

STEREOGRAPHIC.* adj. [from stereogra-phy.] Delineated on a plane; done according to the rules of stereography.

The angles made by the circles of the sphere are equal to the angles made by their representatives in the stereographic projection. Reid, Inquiry.

STEREOGRAPHY. n. s. [στερεός and γραφία;

stereographie, Fr.] The art of drawing the forms of solids upon a plane. Harris.

STEREOMETRY. n. s. [στερεός and μετρώ; stereometrie, Fr.] The art of measuring all sorts of solid bodies. Harris.

STEREOTOMY.* n. s. [στερεός and τέμνω; stereotomie, Fr.] The art of cutting solids; as walls, arches, &c.

STEREOTYPE.* n. s. [from στερεός, solid, and τύπος, type; stereotype, Fr.] A multi-form solid type; a type-metal plate to print from at the letter-press; the art of making type-metal plates, or other solid multiform types. Entick. The word is modern.

STEREOTYPE.* adj. Pertaining to ste-STEREOTYPICK. reotype. Entick.

TO STEREOTYPE.* v. a. [stereotype, Fr.]
To make type-metal plates to print from at the letter-press, or any other multi-form solid types. Entick.

STEREOTYPER.* n. s. One who stereotypes. Entick.

STEREOTYPOGRAPHER.* n. s. A stereotype printer. Entick.

STEREOTYPOGRAPHY.* n. s. The art of stereotype printing. Entick.

STERILE.† adj. [sterile, Fr. sterilis, Lat. from στειρός, Gr. which has the same meaning, and which is usually derived from στειρία, to deprive.] Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chace,
Shake off their sterile curse. Shaks. Jul. Cas.
Thy sea marge sterile, and rocky hard.

Shakspeare, Tempest.
In very sterile years corn sown will grow to another kind. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and sterile swim. Brown, Vulg. Err.
She is grown sterile and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable.

More against Atheism.
When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERILITY. n. s. [sterilité, Fr. sterilitas, from sterilis, Lat.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories. Bacon, War with Spain.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specifick gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley, Serm.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses.

Pope, Ess. on Homer.

TO STERILIZE. v. a. [from sterile.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity; or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STERLING. adj. [of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the East-erlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated.

The king's treasure that he left at his death amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in sesterces than in pounds sterling.

Addison.

2. Genuine; having passed the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentic.

Swift, Polite Conversation.

STERLING.† n. s. [sterlingum, low Lat. from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wise:
By useful observation he can tell

The sacred charms that in true sterling dwell;
How gold makes a patrician of a slave,
A dwarf an Atlas, a Thersites brave.

Garth.

Great name, which in our rolls recorded stands,
Leads honours, and protects the learned bands,
Accept this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in English sterling view.

C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

Sterling was the known and approved standard in England in all probability from the beginning of king Henry the Second's reign.

Leake.

STERN.† adj. [στερν, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Stern is the same word, and has the same meaning, whether we say a stern countenance, i. e. a moved countenance, moved by some passion; or the stern of a ship, i. e. the moved part of a ship, or that part by which the ship is moved. It is the past participle of the verb στερναι, στερναι, which we now in English write differently, according to its different application, to stir, or to steer. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 73. — Mr. Tooke's statement may be thought ingenious; but it is unsound. The primary meaning of stern is severe of countenance; and is to be referred to the verb stare, to look steadfastly. Serenius accordingly mentions the M. Goth. staurran, and Sueth. stirra, torvè adspicere. But let us pass to the Sax. verb στερναι, which we shall find so used as to shew its connection with stern. Dæp he to rcpandne egeþlic for eoplum: Ubi ille fixis oculis intuitus est terribilibus coram satellitibus. Cæd. 90. 13. See Lye, in V. Scapian. See also the Germ. STARREN: under which Wachter first notices the meaning of "fixis oculis intueri," to stare; and then "trucibus oculis intueri," to look sternly; adding, (what is exactly the case in the English language,) "sensus ab aspectu defixo ad atrocem translatus, quia defixo similis est: inde starr, et stern, torvus:" i. e. from the fixed or stern look the meaning is transferred to a cruel person, because unrelenting, unmoved; whence the German starr, or stier, grim, stern.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Oubrave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man.

Knolles, Hist.

Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' the woods.

Milton, Comus.

The judge supreme soon cast a stedfast eye,
Stern, yet temper'd with benignity.

Harte.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible:
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.

Shakespeare.

The common executioner,
Whose heart the accustom'd sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be,
Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops?

Shakespeare.

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Then shall the war, and stern debate and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy fame the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung.

Dryden.

How stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward.

Dryden, Pers.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscrib'd.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Mischief stood,
And with his stern steele drew in streams the blood.

Chapman.

STERN.† n. s. [στερπε, Saxon. Dr. Johnson.

— The past participle of στερναι, or στερναι, to move, to stir, to steer, according to Mr. H. Tooke. See what is said under the adjective stern. But it is rather from the Icel. stiorna, which means both a rudder and a star. The Saxon word is στερναι, as well as στερπε. They are to be referred, like star, to the verbs signifying to govern, to direct; styr, Su. Goth. στερναι, Sax. See STAR.]

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it.

Watts on the Mind.

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land.

Dryden.

2. Post of management; direction.

The king from Eltam I intend to send,
And sit at chiefest stern of public weal.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. The hinder part of any thing.

She all at once her beastly body raised,
With doubled forces high above the ground;
Though wrapping up her wreathed stern around,
Lept fierce upon his shield.

Spenser.

Like an idle whelp, he runs about after his own stern.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Cl. p. 7.

STERNAGE. n. s. [from stern.] The steerage or stern. Not used.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still.

Shakespeare.

STERNED.* adj. [from stern.] Having a particular kind of stern: a naval expression; as, a square-sterned, or a pink-sterned vessel.

STERNER.* n. s. [from stern.] A government; or a director. An uncommon word. He that is "regens sidera," the sterner of the stars.

Dr. Clarke, Stern. (1637), p. 15.

STERNLY.† adv. [from stern; Sax. στερν-lic.] In a stern manner; severely; truculently.

No mountain lion tore
Two lambs so sternly.

Chapman.

The rigid interdiction.
Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face the same,
Nor thy limbs moulded in so soft a frame;

Milton, P. L.

Thou look'st more sternly, dost more strongly move,
And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love.

Dryden.

STERNNESS. n. s. [from stern.]

1. Severity of look.

Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,
That sons of men amaz'd their sternness to behold.

Spenser.

How would he look to see his work so noble Wildly bound up! or how Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold
The sternness of his presence!

Shakespeare.

2. Severity or harshness of manners.

I have sternness in my soul enough
To hear of soldiers' work.

Dryden, Cleomenes.

STERNON. n. s. [στερνων.] The breast-bone.

A soldier was shot in the breast through the sternon.

Wiseman.

STERNUTATION. n. s. [sternutatio, Lat.] The act of sneezing.

Sternutation is a convulsive shaking of the nerves and muscles, occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils.

Quincy.

Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as sneezed died.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

STERNUTATIVE. adj. [sternutatif, Fr. from sternulo, Lat.] Having the quality of provoking to sneeze.

Physicians, in persons near death, use sternutatives, or such medicines as provoke unto sneezing; when, if the faculty arise, and sternutation ensueth, they conceive hopes of life.

Brown.

STERQUILINUS.* adj. [sterquilinum, Lat. a dunghill.] Mean; dirty; paltry. Not in use.

Now—any sterquilinous rascal is licensed to throw dirt in the faces of sovereign princes in open printed language.

Howell, Lett. (date 1644.) ii. 48.

STETHOSCOPE.* n. s. [σθησκόπ and σκωπία, Gr.] A tube for distinguishing diseases of the chest by sounds; upon which Dr. Scudamore has recently published "Observations."

To STERVE.* v. n. [stæppian, Sax. sterfen, Germ.] To perish. Spenser often uses it, for the sake of his rhyme, instead of starve. It is also used by Chaucer. Obsolete in this general sense.

Seven months he so her kept in bitter smart,
Because his sinful lust she would not serve,
Untill such time as noble Britomart
Released her, that else was like to sterve
Through cruel knife that her deare heart did keve.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 4.

STEVEN. n. s. [stæfen, Sax.] A cry, or loud clamour.

Ne sooner was out, but swifter than thought,
Fast by the hide, the wolf Lowder caught;
And had not Roffy renne to the steven,
Lowder had been slain thilke same even. Spenser.

To STEW. v. a. [stewer, Fr. stoven, Dutch.] To seethe any thing in a slow moist heat, with little water.

Ere I was risen from the place that show'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathless.

Shakespeare, C. Lear.

I bruised my skin with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, three veneys for a dish of stew'd prunes.

Shakespeare.

To STEW. v. n. To be seethed in a slow moist heat.

STEW.† n. s. [estuwe, Fr. stufa, Ital. estufa, Spanish; stufwa, Su. Goth.]

1. A bagnio; a hot-house.

As burning Ætna from his boiling stew
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrap in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke.

Spenser.

The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews.

Abbot.

2. A brothel; a house of prostitution. This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or fish-ponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use. It may be doubted whether it has any singular. South uses it in a plural termination with a singular sense. Shakespeare makes it singular.

There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor falsehood, and never brake promise.

Ascham.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans. Bacon, New Atlantis.
Her, though seven years she in the stews had laid,
A nunnery durst receive and think a maid,
And though in childbirth's labour she did lie,
Midwives would swear 'twere but a tympany.

Donne.

What moderate fop would rake the park or stews,
Who among troops of faultless nymphs can choose?

Roscommon.

Making his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instil the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children.

South.

3. A prostitute. [from the preceding sense.]

It was so plotted betwixt the lady her husband, and Bristol, that instead of that beauty he had a notorious stew sent him.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 146.

4. [Stowen, Dutch, to store.] A store-pond; a small pond where fish are kept for the table.

Full many a fat partrich had he in mewe,
And many a breme, and many a lucc in stew.

Chaucer, C. T. Prolog.

5. Meat stewed: as, a stew of veal, beef, or the like.

I have seen corruption boil and bubble,

Till it o'er-run the stew.

Shakespeare.

6. Confusion: as when the air is full of dust, smoke, or steam; which is a northern expression, as Grose observes.

STEWARD.† n. s. [stæpawb, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — From stewardur, Cimbr. of stia, work, and wardur, warden, overlooker. See Lye, and Serenius.]

1. One who manages the affairs of another.

There sat yclad in red,

Down to the ground, a comely personage,

That in his hand a white rod managed;

He steward was, high diet, ripe of age,

And in demeanour sober, and in council sage.

Spenser.

Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.

Shakespeare, Timon.

Take on you the charge

And kingly government of this your land;

Not as protector, steward, substitute,

Or lowly factor for another's gain.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

St. Luke, xvi.

Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but stewards, and must give an account of them.

Nelson.

When a steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice.

Swift.

What can be a greater honour than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency than to consider, that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives?

Swift.

Just steward of the bounty he receiv'd,
And dying poorer than the poor reliev'd. Harte.

2. An officer of state.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims

To be high steward.

Shakespeare.

To STEWARD.* v. a. [from the noun.] To manage as a steward.

Did he thus requite his mother's care in stewarding the state?

Fuller, Holy War, p. 85.

STEWARDLY.* adv. [from steward.] With the care of a steward.

It is with a provident deliberation, not a rash and prodigal hand, to be dealt; and to be stewardly dispensed, not wastefully spent.

Tooker, Fabr. of the Ch. (1604), p. 48.

STEWARDSHIP. n. s. [from steward.] The office of a steward.

The earl of Worcester

Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship.

Shakespeare.

Shew us the hand of God

That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship.

Shakespeare.

If they are not employed to such purposes, we are false to our trust, and the stewardship committed to us, and shall be one day severely accountable to God for it.

Calamy, Serm.

STEWISH.* adj. [from stew.] Suiting the brothel or stews.

Rhymed in rules of stewish ribaldry.

Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 9.

STEW'PAN. n. s. [from stew and pan.] A pan used for stewing.

STIBIAL. adj. [from stibium, Lat.] Antimonial.

The former depend upon a corrupt incinerated melancholy, and the latter upon an adust stibial or eruginous sulphur.

Harvey.

STIBIARIAN. n. s. [from stibium.] A violent man; from the violent operation of antimony. Obsolete.

This stibiarian preseth audaciously upon the royal throne, and, after some sacrifice, tendereth a bitter pill of sacrilege and cruelty; but, when the same was rejected because it was violent, then he presents his antimonialian potion. White.

STIBIUM.* n. s. [Latin.] Antimony.

Ceruse nor stibium can prevail,

No art repair where age makes fail.

Collop, Poesie Reviv'd, (1656.)

STICADOS. n. s. [sticadis, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

STICH.* n. s. [stichos, Gr.]

In some ancient Greek New Testaments, at the close of the Epistles, there were some numeral letters added, signifying how many stichs were in the Epistle. What these stichs were, the learned Suicerus informs us. A stich in poetry was a verse, whatsoever kinds or parts it may consist of: a verse is a measured line, whether it be iambick, heroick, or any other length. In rural affairs, a stich is an order or rank of trees; and a verse a furrow, or as much as the plowman turns up in one line. In military matters it is an order of ten men. This term is used in numbering the books of Scripture. Verses are applied to prose as well as metre, and were distinguished by great letters or arithmetical notes. The Jewish and Christian writers have computed these stichs in Scripture books, and have added them at the end of each book. — Suicerus endeavours to show, by sundry instances, that a stich is not a line, but a sentence or part of it, either comma, or colon; and that it answers to a verse in our Bible. Mather, Vindict. of the Holy Bible, 1723, p. 67.

STICHOMETRY.* n. s. [stichos and metron, Gr. stichometrie, Fr.] A catalogue of books of Scripture, to which is added the number of the verses which each book contains. Chambers. And see Lardner's Credibility of the Gospel History, P. II. vol. xi. p. 248.

STICK.† n. s. [sticca, Saxon, from stican; as sticka, Swed. a stake, from the verb sticka, to pierce, to stick. Serenius, and Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A piece of wood small and long. Onions as they bang will shoot forth, and so will the herb orpin, with which in the country they trim their houses, binding it to a lath or stick set against a wall.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some strike from clashing flints their fiery seed,
Some gather sticks the kindled flames to feed.

Dryden.

2. Many instruments long and slender are called sticks.

3. [Stick, Swed.] A thrust; a stab.

To STICK. v. a. preterite stuck; participle pass. stuck. [stican, stician, Saxon.]

To fasten on so as that it may adhere.

Two troops in fair array one moment show'd;
The next, a field with fallen bodies strow'd;

The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,

The knights unhors'd. Dryden.

Would our ladies, instead of sticking on a patch against their country, sacrifice their necklaces against the common enemy, what decrees ought not to be made in their favour? Addison.

O for some pedant reign,
Some gentle James to bless the land again;
To stick the doctor's chair unto the throne,
Give law to words, or war with words alone.

Pope.

TO STICK. v. n.

1. To adhere; to unite itself by its tenacity or penetrating power.

I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales. Ezek. xxix. 4.

The green caterpillar breedeth in the inward parts of roses not blown, where the dew sticketh. Bacon.

Though the sword be put into the sheath, we must not suffer it there to rust, or stick so fast as that we shall not be able to draw it readily, when need requires. Raleigh.

If on your fame our sex a blot has thrown,
'Twill ever stick, through malice of your own.

Young.

2. To be inseparable; to be united with anything. Generally in an ill sense.

Now does he feel

His secret murders sticking on his hands.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He is often stigmatized with it, as a note of infamy, to stick by him whilst the world lasteth.

Stenderson.

In their quarrels they proceed to calling names, till they light upon one that is sure to stick. Swift.

3. To rest upon the memory painfully.

The going away of that which had staid so long, doth yet stick with me. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To stop; to lose motion.

None of those, who stick at this impediment, have any enemies so bitter and implacable as they found theirs. Kettellwell.

I shudder at the name!

My blood runs backward, and my faltering tongue sticks at the sound. Smith, Phæd. and Hypol.

5. To resist emission.

Wherefore could I not pronounce amen?

I had most need of blessing, and amen

Stuck in my throat. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

6. To be constant to; to adhere with firmness: sometimes with to, and sometimes with by.

The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out, he is true bred.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The first contains a sticking-stick to Christ, when the Christian profession is persecuted; and the second a rising from sin, as he rose, to a new Christian life. Hammond.

Some stick to you, and some to t' other side.

Dryden.

They could not but conclude that to be their interest, and, being so convinced, pursue it and stick to it. Tillotson.

We are your only friends; stick by us, and we will stick by you. Davenant.

The advantage will be on our side, if we stick to its essentials. Addison, Freeholder.

7. To be troublesome by adhering; with by or to.

I am satisfied to trifle away my time, rather than let it stick by me. Pope, Lett.

8. To remain; not to be lost.

Proverbial sentences are formed into a verse, whereby they stick upon the memory. Watts.

9. To dwell upon; not to forsake.

If the matter be knotty, the mind must stop and buckle to it, and stick upon it with labour and thought, and not leave it till it has mastered the difficulty. Locke.

Every man, besides occasional affections, has beloved studies which the mind will more closely stick to. Locke.

10. To cause difficulties or scruple.

VOL. III.

This is the difficulty that sticks with the most reasonable of those who, from conscience, refuse to join with the Revolution. Swift.

11. To scruple; to hesitate.

It is a good point of cunning for a man to shape the answer he would have in his own words and propositions; for it makes the other party stick the less. Bacon.

The church of Rome, under pretext of exposition of Scripture, doth not stick to add and alter.

Bacon.

Rather than impute our miscarriages to our own corruption, we do not stick to arraign proposition itself. L'Estrange.

Every one without hesitation supposes eternity, and sticks not to ascribe infinity to duration. Locke.

That two bodies cannot be in the same place is a truth that nobody any more sticks at, than at this maxim, that it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be. Locke.

To stick at nothing for the public interest is represented as the refined part of the Venetian wisdom. Addison on Italy.

Some stick not to say, that the parson and attorney forged a will. Arbuthnot.

12. To be stopped; to be unable to proceed.

If we should fail.

—We fail!

But send your courage to the sticking place, And we'll not fail. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

They never doubted the commons; but heard all stuck in the lord's house, and desired the names of those who hindered the agreement between the lords and commons. Clarendon.

He threw: the trembling weapon pass'd
Through nine bull-hides, each under other plac'd
On his broad shield, and stuck within the last. Dryden.

13. To be embarrassed; to be puzzled.

Where they stick, they are not to be farther puzzled by putting them upon finding it out themselves. Locke.

They will stick long at part of a demonstration, for want of perceiving the connection of two ideas, that, to one more exercised, is as visible as any thing. Locke.

Souls a little more capacious can take in the connection of a few propositions; but if the chain be prolix, here they stick and are confounded. Watts on the Mind.

14. To STICK out. To be prominent with deformity.

His flesh is consumed away that it cannot be seen, and his bones that were not seen stick out. Job, xxxiii. 21.

15. To STICK out. To refuse compliance.

To STICK. v. a. [trician, Saxon; sticken, Teut.]

1. To stab; to pierce with a pointed instrument.

The Heruli, when their old kindred fell sick, stuck them with a dagger. Grew.

2. To fix upon a pointed body: as, he stuck the fruit upon his knife.

3. To fasten by transfixion.

Her death!

I'll stand betwixt: it shall first pierce my heart: We will be stuck together on his dart. Dryden, Tyr. Love.

4. To set with something pointed.

A lofty pile they rear;

The fabric's front with cypress twigs they strew,
And stick the sides with boughs of baleful yew. Dryden.

STICKINESS. n. s. [from sticky.] Adhesive quality; viscosity; glutinousness; tenacity.

To STICKLE. v. n. [from the practice of prize-fighters, who placed seconds with staves or sticks to interpose occasionally.]

1. To take part with one side or other.

Fortune, as she's wont, turn'd fickle,
And for the foe began to stickle. Hudibras.

2. To contest; to altercation; to contend rather with obstinacy than vehemence.

Let them go to 't, and stickle,

Whether a conclave, or a conventicle. Cleaveland.

Heralds stickle, who got who,
So many hundred years ago. Hudibras.

3. To trim; to play fast and loose; to act a part between opposites.

When he sees half of the Christians killed, and the rest in a fair way of being routed, he stickles betwixt the remainder of God's host and the race of fiends. Dryden.

To STICKLE.* v. a. To arbitrate. See Cotgrave in V. ARBITRER. "To stickle, to compound, to award, to adjudge by award."

Here Weever, as a flood affecting godly peace,
His place of speech resigns; and to the Muse refers

The hearing of the cause, to stickle all these stirs.

Drayton, Polyol. S. 11.

STICKLEBAG. n. s. [Properly stickleback, from stick, to prick; pungitius, Latin.] The smallest of freshwater fish.

A little fish called a sticklebag, without scales, hath his body fenced with several prickles.

Walton, Angler.

STICKLER.† n. s. [from stickle.]

1. A sidesman to fencers; a second to a duellist; one who stands to judge a combat; an arbitrator.

Basilus came to part them, the sticklers' authority being unable to persuade cholerick years; and part them he did. Sidney.

Basilus, the judge, appointed sticklers and trumpets, whom the others should obey. Sidney.

The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler like, the armies separates.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Our former chiefs, like sticklers of the war,
First fought t' inflame the parties, then to poison:

The quarrel lov'd, but did the cause abhor;
And did not strike to hurt, but make a noise. Dryden.

2. An obstinate contender about anything.

Quercetanus, though the grand stickler for the tria prima, has this concession of the irresolubleness of diamonds. Boyle.

The inferior tribe of common women have, in most reigns, been the professed sticklers for such as have acted against the true interest of the nation. Addison, Freeholder.

The Tory or high church clergy were the greatest sticklers against the exorbitant proceedings of king James II. Swift.

All place themselves in the list of the national church, though they are great sticklers for liberty of conscience. Swift.

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

He stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning into the Lord. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13.

The poor, by them desrobed, naked lie,
Veil'd with no other covering but the sky;
Expos'd to stiffening frosts, and drenching showers,
Which thicken'd air from her black bosom pours. Sandys.

Her eyes grow stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn. Dryden.

2. To make torpid.

Her stiffening grief,
Who saw her children slaughter'd all at once,
Was dull to mine. Dryden and Lee.

To STIFFEN, v. n.

1. To grow stiff; to grow rigid; to become unpliant.

Aghast, astonish'd, and struck dumb with fear,
I stood; like bristles rose my stiff'ning hair. Dryden.

Fix'd in astonishment I gaze upon thee,
Like one just blasted by a stroke from heaven,
Who pants for breath, and stiffens yet alive;
In dreadful looks, a monument of wrath. Addison, Cato.

2. To grow hard; to be hardened.

The tender soil, then stiffening by degrees,
Shut from the bounded earth the bounding seas. Dryden.

3. To grow less susceptible of impression; to grow obstinate.

Some souls we see
Grow hard and stiffen with adversity. Dryden.

In matters divine, it is still maintained stiffly, that they have no stiffnecked force. Hooker.

I commended them that stood so stiffly for the Lord. 2 Esdr. ii. 47.

The Indian fig of itself multiplieth from root to root; the plenty of the sap and the softness of the stalk making the bough, being overladen and not stiffly upheld, to weigh down. Bacon.

2. Strongly.

Hold, hold, my heart;
And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
But bear me stiffly up! Shaks. Hamlet.

STIFFNECKED. adj. [stiff and neck.] Stubborn; obstinate; contumacious.

An infinite charge to her majesty, to send over such an army as should tread down all that standeth before them on foot, and lay on the ground all the stiffnecked. Spenser.

This stiffneck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.

STIFFNESS. † n. s. [from stiff; Sax. stīfneſse.]

1. Rigidity; inflexibility; hardness; ineptitude to bend.

The stiffness and dryness of iron to melt, must be helped by moistening or opening it. Bacon.

The willow bows and recovers, the oak is stubborn and inflexible; and the punishment of that stiffness is one branch of the allegory. L' Etrange.

2. Ineptitude to motion; torpidness.

The pillars of this frame grow weak,
My sinews slacken, and an icy stiffness
Benumbs my blood. Denham.

3. Tension; not laxity.

To try new shrouds, one mounts into the wind,
And one below, their ease or stiffness notes. Dryden.

4. Obstinacy; stubbornness; contumaciousness.

The suppleness of obedience is to be plied by parents, before the stiffness of will come on too fast. Wotton on Education, Rem. p. 79.

The vices of old age have the stiffness of it too; and as it is the unfittest time to learn in, so the unfitness of it to unlearn will be found much greater. South, Serm.

Firmness or stiffness of the mind is not from adherence to truth, but submission to prejudice. Locke.

These hold their opinions with the greatest stiffness; being generally the most fierce and firm in their tenets. Locke.

5. Unpleasing formality; constraint.

All this religion sat easily upon him, without any of that stiffness and constraint, any of those forbidding appearances which disparage the actions of the sincerely pious. Atterbury.

6. Rigorosity; harshness.

There fill yourself with those most joyous sights;
But speak no word to her of these sad plights,
Which her too constant stiffness doth constrain. Spenser.

7. Manner of writing, not easy but harsh and constrained.

Rules and critical observations improve a good genius, where nature leadeth the way, provided he is not too scrupulous; for that will introduce a stiffness and affectation, which are utterly abhorrent from all good writing. Felton.

To STIFLE. v. a. [estouffer, Fr.]

1. To oppress or kill by closeness of air; to suffocate.

Where have you been broiling?
— Among the crowd 't the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more; I am stifled. Shaks.

With the mere rankness of their joy.
Prayer against his absolute decree
No more avails than breath against the wind;
Blown stifling back on him that breathes it forth. Milton, P. L.

That part of the air that we drew out, left the more room for the stifling steams of the coals to be received into it. Boyle.

Stifled with kisses, a sweet death he dies. Dryden.

At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to stifle them with care; and all on a sudden, the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

I took my leave, being half stifled with the closeness of the room. Swift, Acc. of Partridge's Death.

2. To keep in; to hinder from emission.

Whilst bodies become coloured by reflecting or transmitting this or that sort of rays more copiously than the rest, they stop and stifle in themselves the rays which they do not reflect or transmit. Newton, Opt.

3. To extinguish by hindering communication.

4. To extinguish by artful or gentle means.

Every reasonable man will pay a tax with cheerfulness for stifling a civil war in its birth. Addison, Freeholder.

5. To suppress; to conceal.

If 't prove thy fortune, Polydore, to conquer,
Trust me, and let me know thy love's success,
That I may ever after stifle mine. Otway, Orphan.

6. To suppress artfully or fraudulently.

These conclusions have been acknowledged by the disputers themselves, till with labour and study they had stifled their first convictions. Rogers.

On these two pillars will our faith for ever stand, firm and unmoveable, against all attempts; whether of vain philosophy, to better the doctrine, or of valner criticism, to corrupt or stifle the evidence. Waterland.

You excel in the art of stifling and concealing your resentment. Swift.

STIFLE.* n. s. The first joint above a horse's thigh next the buttock. Mason.

STIFLEMENT.* n. s. [from stifle.] Something that might be suppressed or concealed.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (ed. 1657.) A. 1. S. 1.

To STIGH.* See To STY.

STIGMA.† n. s. [stigma, Lat.]

1. A brand; a mark with a hot iron.

2. A mark of infamy.

All such slaughters were from thence called Bartelmies, simply in a perpetual stigma of that butchery. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646.) p. 63.

Happily is it for him, that the blackest stigma, that can be fastened upon him, is that his robes were whiter than his brethren's. Prof. to Bp. Hall's Rem.

STIGMATICAL.† adj. [from stigma.]

STIGMATICK. } Branded or marked with some token of infamy, or deformity.

He is deformed, crooked, old and sere,
Vicious, ungente, foolish, blunt, unkind,
Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.
What could that apish and stigmatical friar have done either more or worse?

Bp. Hall, Pharisaism and Christianity.
The crook'd, the halt, the stigmatical.

Drayton, Ep. K. John to Matilda.

STIGMATICK.* n. s.

1. A notorious lewd fellow, who hath been burnt with a hot iron; or beareth other marks about him, as a token of his punishment. Bullok.

2. One on whom nature has set a mark of deformity. Steevens.

Foul stigmatical, that's more than thou canst tell.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

Thou art neither like thy sire nor dam;
But like a foul misshapen stigmatical,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

STIGMATICAL.* adv. [from stigmatical.]
With a mark of infamy or deformity.

If you spy any man that hath a look Stigmatically drawn, like to a fury.

Wonder of a Kingdom, (1635.)

To STIGMATIZE.† v. a. [stigmatiser, Fr.
from stigma.] To mark with a brand;
to disgrace with a note of reproach.

They had more need have their cheeks stigmatised with a hot iron, some of our Jeezebels, instead of painting! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 479.

But my clothes

To be defac'd and stigmatiz'd so foully!

I take it as a contumely done me,

Above the wisdom of our laws to right.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Men of learning who take to business, discharge
it with greater honesty than men of the world;
because the former in reading have been used to find virtue extolled and vice stigmatized, while the latter have seen vice triumphant and virtue dis-countenanced. Addison.

Sour enthusiasts affect to stigmatize the finest and most elegant authors both ancient and modern,
as dangerous to religion. Addison.

The privileges of juries should be ascertained, and whoever violates them stigmatized by publick censure. Swift.

STILAR. adj. [from stile.] Belonging to the stile of a dial.

At fifty-one and a half degrees, which is London's latitude, make a mark, and, laying a ruler to the centre of the plane and to this mark, draw a line for the stilar line. Moxon.

STILE. n. s. [stigele, from stigan, Sax. to climb.]

1. A set of steps to pass from one enclosure to another.

There comes my master, and another gentleman from Frogmore, over the stile this way. Shakespeare.

themselves upon every gate or stile they come at.

L'Estrange.

The little strutting pile,

You see just by the church-yard stile. Swift.

2. [Stile, Fr.] A pin to cast the shadow in a sun-dial. This should rather be style.

Erect the stile perpendicularly over the substilar line, so as to make an angle with the dial-plane equal to the elevation of the pole of your place.

Moxon, Mech. Ex.

STILE'TTO.† n. s. [Italian; stilet, Fr.
from the Lat. stilus.] A small dagger, of which the blade is not edged but round, with a sharp point.

When a senator should be torn in pieces, he hired one who, entering into the senate-house, should assault him as an enemy to the state; and, stabbing him with stilettoes, leave him to be torn by others. Hakewill on Providence.

To STILL.† v. a. [stillan, Saxon; stillen, Dutch; stillen, German, which has the substantive stille, rest; the Saxon, the adjective raile, quiet.]

1. To silence; to make silent.

Is this the scourge of France?

Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,

That with his name the mothers still their babes?

Shakespeare.

The third fair morn now blaz'd upon the main,
Then glassy smooth lay all the liquid plain,
The winds were hush'd, the billows scarcely curl'd,
And a dead silence still'd the wat'ry world. Pope.

2. To quiet; to appease.

In all refrainings of anger, it is the best remedy to make a man's self believe, that the opportunity of revenge is not yet come; but that he foresees a time for it, and so to still himself in the mean time, and reserve it. Bacon.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

3. To make motionless.

to still and compose it, as well as to move and disturb it. Woodward.

STILL.† adj. [stille, Sax. stil, Dutch.]

1. Silent; uttering no noise. It is well observed by Junius, that st is the sound commanding silence.

We do not act, that often jest and laugh:

'Tis old but true, still swine eat all the draugh.

Shakespeare.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour
Demuring upon me. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

The storm was laid, the winds retir'd

Obedient to thy will;

The sea, that roar'd at thy command,

At thy command was still.

Addison.

2. Quiet; calm.

Atin when he spied

Thus in still waves of deep delight to wade,

Fiercely approaching to him, loudly cry'd Spenser.

From hence my lines and I depart,

I to my soft stil walks, they to my heart;

I to the nurse, they to the child of art. Donne.

Religious pleasure moves gently, and therefore constantly. It does not affect by rapture, but is like the pleasure of health, which is still and sober.

South.

Hope quickens all the still parts of life, and keeps the mind awake in her most remiss and indolent hours. Addison.

Silius Italicus has represented it as a very gentle and still river, in the beautiful description he has given of it. Addison.

How all things listen, while thy muse complains!
Such silence waits on Philomela's strains

In some stil ev'ning, when the whisp'ring breeze

Pants on the leaves, and dies upon the trees. Pope.

3. Motionless.

Grecia sit still, but with no still pensiveness.

Sidney.

Though the body really moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with other bodies, as fast as the ideas of our minds follow in train, the thing seems to stand still, as we find in the hands of clocks. Locke.

That, in this state of ignorance, we short-sighted creatures might not mistake true felicity, we are endowed with a power to suspend any particular desire. This is standing still, where we are not sufficiently assured. Locke.

Thy stone, O Sisyphus, stands still;

4. Continual; constant.

But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boy's,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I, of these, will wrest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know the meaning.

Titus Andronicus.

5. Gentle; not loud. This, as well as the preceding sense, is overpassed in Dr.
Johnson's and other dictionaries.

A still small voice. 1 Kings, x. 12.

Still music. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Me softer airs befit, and softer strings
Of lute or viol still, more apt for mournful things.

Milton, Ode.

Usher'd with a shower still. Milton, Il Pens.

The gentle blasts of western winds shall move
The trembling leaves, and through their close boughs breathe

Still music, whilst we rest ourselves beneath
Their dancing shade. Carew, Poems, p. 70.

STILL.† n. s. [stille, German.] Calm;
silence; quiet.

He had never any jealousy with his father, which might give occasion of altering court or council upon the change; but all things passed in a still. Bacon, Hen. VII.

STILL. adv. [stille, Saxon.]

1. To this time; till now.

It hath been anciently reported, and is still received, that extreme applauses of great multitudes have so rarified the air, that birds flying over have fallen down. Bacon.

Thou, O matron!

Here dying, to the shore hast left thy name:
Cajeta still the place is call'd from thee,
The nurse of great Æneas' infancy. Dryden, Æn.

2. Nevertheless; notwithstanding.

The desire of fame betrays the ambitious man into indecencies that lessen his reputation; he is still afraid lest any of his actions should be thrown away in private. Addison.

3. In an increasing degree.

As God sometimes addresses himself in this manner to the hearts of men; so, if the heart will receive such motions by a ready compliance, they will return more frequently, and still more and more powerfully. South.

The moral perfections of the Deity, the more attentively we consider, the more perfectly still shall we know them. Atterbury.

4. Always; ever; continually.

Unless God from heaven did by vision still shew them what to do, they might do nothing.

Hooker.

My soul the father; and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts. Shaks.

Whom the disease of talking still once possesseth,
he can never hold his peace. B. Jonson.

He told them, that if their king were still absent from them, they would at length crown apes.

Davies on Ireland.

Chymists would be rich, if they could still do in great quantities, what they have sometimes done in little. Boyle.

Trade begets trade, and people go much where many people are already gone: so men run still to a crowd in the streets, though only to see.

Temple.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.

5. After that.

In the primitive church, such as by fear being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, after repenting, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel. Whitgift.

6. In continuance.

I with my hand at midnight held your head;
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,

Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time,
Saying, what want you? Shakespeare, K. John.

STILL. n. s. [from distil.] A vessel for distillation; an alembick.

Nature's confectioner, the bee,
Whose suckets are moist alchimy;
The still of his refining gold,
Minting the garden into gold. Cleveland.

In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still. Newton, Opt.

This fragrant spirit is obtained from all plants in the least aromatically, by a cold still, with a heat not exceeding that of summer.

To STILL. v. a. [from distil.] To distill; to extract or operate upon by distillation.

Still'd water. Barret, Alv. (1580.)

Then starts she suddenly into a throng
Of short thick sobs, whose thundering volleys float,
And roll themselves over her lubric throat
In panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That ever bubbling spring. Crashaw, Musick's Duel.

To STILL. v. n. [stillo, Latin.] To drop; to fall in drops. Out of use.

His sceptre 'gainst the ground he threw,
And tears still'd from him which mov'd all the crew. Chapman.

STILL-LIFE.* n. s. [A term in painting.] Things that have only vegetable life.

Even that, which according to a term of art we commonly call still-life, must have its superiority and just preference in a tabature of its own species. Ld. Shaftesbury.

STILLATI'OUS. adj. [stillatus, Latin.] Falling in drops; drawn by a still.

STILLATORY. n. s. [from still or distil.]

1. An alembick; a vessel in which distillation is performed.

In all stillatories the vapour is turned back upon itself, by the encounter of the sides of the stillatory. Bacon.

2. The room in which stills are placed; laboratory.

All offices that require heat, as kitchens, stillatories, stoves, should be meridional.

These are nature's stillatories, in whose caverns the ascending vapours are congealed to that universal aquavite, that good fresh water. Wotton on Architecture.

STILLBORN. adj. [still and born; Sax. reille-borene.] Born lifeless; dead in the birth.

Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be stillborn; and that we now possess
The utmost man of expectation; we are
A body strong enough to equal with the king. Shakespeare.

Many casualties were but matter of sense, as whether a child were abortive or stillborn. Shakespeare.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd:
The stillborn sounds upon the palate hung,
And died imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryden.

I know a trick to make you thrive;
O, 'tis a quaint device!
Your stillborn poems shall revive,
And scorn to wrap up spice. Swift.

STILLER.* n. s. [from still.] One who quiets or stills.

Empedocles got the title of wind-stiller.

M. Casaubon, Of Credulity, &c. (1668), p. 60.

STINGINESS. † n. s. [from stingy.] Avarice; covetousness; niggardliness.

Another sort — out of stinginess, or some other folly, will apply themselves only to quacks and mountebanks. Goodman, Wint. Ep. Conf. P. III.

Here our author, in pure good nature to make amends for his stinginess in the matter we last remarked, gives us three rules.

Johnson, Noctes Nottingh. p. 18.

STINGLESS. † adj. [from sting.] Having no sting.

To tread under foot the head of their lustes, as of a stingleless serpent.

Martin, Marr. of Pr. (1550.) M m. ii. b.

What harm can there be in a stingleless snake?

Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

This merry jest you must excuse;

You are but a stingleless nettle.

Old Ballad, Percy's Anc. Rel. iii. 15.

He hugs this viper when he thinks it stingley.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

STINGO. † n. s. [from the sharpness of the taste.] Old beer. A cant word, Dr. Johnson says, without any example. It appears, however, to be old.

Returning with a large quart of mighty ale, that might compare with stingo, for it would cut a feather, they tossed the cannikin lovingly one to another. Comment. on Chaucer, (1665,) p. 32.

Shall I set a cup of old stingo at your elbow?

Addison, Drummer.

STINGY. † adj. [A low cant word. In this word, with its derivatives, the g is pronounced as in gem. Dr. Johnson. — I consider stingy as a corruption of a very old word, rather than a low expression; and that word is chinchy. "The rich chinchy grede." Chaucer, Rom. R. 6002. And so chinc: "Chinc and feloun is richesse." Ib. 5998. In both places meaning stingy, niggardly: So chincherie is used for covetousness, stinginess. See the Gloss. to Urry's Chaucer. The old Fr. chiche, miserable, niggardly, covetous, is considered as its origin; and Chaucer once uses chiche. But Gower as well as he uses chinc.] Covetous; niggardly; avaricious.

A stingy narrow-hearted fellow that had a deal of choice fruit, had not the heart to touch it till it began to be rotten.

L'Estrange.

God can easily accomplish whatsoever he promises or threatens; he can be straitened in nothing, nor need any thing, having all things in himself; and, consequently of that, it is impossible to conceive of him as a narrow-hearted, stingy being, that can envy or malign his creatures; but contrariwise, he must be unspeakably good, and take delight in nothing more than in communicating of his own fullness to them.

Goodman, Wint. Ep. Conf. P. III.

He relates it only by parcels, and won't give us the whole; which forces me to bespeak his friends to engage him to lay aside that stingy humour, and gratify the publick at once.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

To STINK. v. n. pret. stunk or stank. [stincan, Sax. stincken, Dutch.] To emit an offensive smell, commonly a smell of putrefaction.

2 Sam. x. 6.

What a fool art thou, to leave thy mother for a nasty stinking goat?

L'Estrange.

Most of smells want names; sweet and stinking serve our turn for these ideas, which is little more than to call them pleasing and displeasing. Locke.

Chloris, this costly way to stink give o'er, 'Tis throwing sweet into a common shore;

Not all Arabia would sufficient be; Thou smell'st not of thy sweets, they stink of thee.

Granville.

STINK. † n. s. [stinc, Sax.] Offensive smell.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor are not most pernicious, but such airs as have some similitude with man's body, and so betray the spirits.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They share a sin; and such proportions fall, That, like a stink, 'tis nothing to them all.

Dryden.

By what criterion do ye eat, d'ye think?

If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink. Pope.

STINKARD. † n. s. [from stink.] A mean stinking paltry fellow.

You perpetual stinkard, go; talk to tapsters and ostlers, you slave.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

The reason hereof is the end which he hath proposed, and the law whereby his wisdom hath stinted the effects of his power in such sort, that it doth not work infinitely, but correspondently unto that end for which it worketh.

Hooker.

Nature wisely stints our appetite, And craves no more than undisturb'd delight.

Dryden.

I shall not go about to extenuate the latitude of the curse upon the earth, or stint it only to the production of weeds, but give it its full scope in an universal diminution of the fruitfulness of the earth.

Woodward.

A supposed heathen deity might be so poor in his attributes, so stinted in his knowledge, that a Pagan might hope to conceal his perjury from his notice.

Addison.

Few countries, which, if well cultivated, would not support double their inhabitants, and yet fewer where one third are not extremely stinted in necessities.

Swift.

She stints them in their meals, and is very scrupulous of what they eat and drink, and tells them how many fine shapes she has seen spoiled in her time for want of such care.

Law.

To STINT.* v. n. To cease; to stop; to desist: a northern expression.

Oh would she tell

Her wretchedness, and cursing never stint

To sob and sigh. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

The pretty wench left crying, and said Ay; — And, pretty fool, it stinted, and said, Ay.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

STINT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Limit; bound; restraint.

We must come at the length to some pause: for if every thing were to be desired for some other without any stint, there could be no certain end proposed unto our actions, we should go on we know not whither.

Hooker.

The exteriors of mourning, a decent funeral, and black habits, are the usual stints of common husbands.

Dryden.

2. A proportion; a quantity assigned.

Touching the stint or measure thereof, rites and ceremonies, and other external things of the like nature, being hurtful unto the church, either in respect of their quality, or in regard of their number; in the former there could be no doubt or difficulty what would be done; their deliberation in the latter was more difficult.

Hooker.

Our stint of woe

Is common; every day a sailor's wife, The masters of some merchant, and the merchant Have just our theme of woe.

Shakespeare.

He that gave the hint,

This letter for to print,

Must also pay the stint.

STIPENDIARY. n. s. [stipendiaire, Fr. stipendiarius, Latin.] One who performs any service for a settled payment.

This whole country is called the kingdom of Tunis; the king whereof is a kind of stipendiary unto the Turk.

Abbot.

If thou art become

A tyrant's vile stipendiary, with grief That valour thus triumphant I behold, Which, after all its danger and brave toil, Deserves no honour from the gods or men.

Gloucester.

To STIPPLE.* v. n. To engrave, not in stroke or line, but in dots. A modern term of art.

STIPTICK. See STYPTICK.

To STIPULATE.† v. n. [stipulator, Latin; stipuler, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—This word is derived by some Latin etymologists from stipe, the ablative of stips, or stipis, a piece of money; quod stipem, i. e. pecuniam, posceret creditor, debitor sponderet, quod erat stipulari et restipulari.] Ainsworth in V. STIPULATOR. But this is not the origin of the word. It comes from the Lat. stipula, a straw: "Dicta autem stipulatio a stipulā; veteres enim quando sibi aliquid promittebant, stipulam tenentes frangebant, quam iterum jungentes, sponsiones suas agnoscebant." Du Cange in V. STIPULATORIO. So an old English writer: "Their bargains (in the Isle of Man) are completed, and confirmed, by the giving and taking of as mean a matter as a straw; as of old also, per traditionem stipulæ; from whence the phrase of stipulation came." Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, 1649, p. 175.] To contract; to bargain; to settle terms.

The Romans very much neglected their maritime affairs; for they stipulated with the Carthaginians to furnish them with ships for transport and war. Arbutnot.

STIPULATION.† n. s. [stipulation, French, from stipulate.] Bargain.

Nor any politic composition made by mutual stipulation. Fotherby, Atheom. (1692,) p. 165.

We promise obediently to keep all God's commandments; the hopes given by the gospel depend on our performance of that stipulation. Rogers.

STIPULATOR.† n. s. [stipulateur, French.] One who contracts or bargains.

To STIR.† v. a. [stirpan, Saxon; stooren, Teut. Formerly written stere; and by Spenser more than once, for the sake of his rhyme, 1634. Butler, in his English Grammar, 1634, states our western dialect to be stoor.]

1. To move; to remove from its place.

My foot I had never met in five days been able to stir but as it was lifted. Temple.

Other spirits

Shoot through their tracts, and distant muscles fill: This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod, Restrains or sends his ministers abroad, Swift and obedient to his high command, They stir a finger, or they lift a hand. Blackmore.

2. To agitate; to bring into debate.

Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction, and rather assume thy right in silence than voice it with claims. Bacon.

One judgement in parliament, that cases of that nature ought to be determined according to the common law, is of greater weight than many cases to the contrary, wherein the question was not stirred; yea, even though it should be stirred, and the contrary affirmed. Hale.

3. To incite; to instigate; to animate.

With him is come the mother queen; An Atē stirring him to blood and strife. Shaks.
If you stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much To bear it tamely. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Nestor next beheld

The subtle Pylian orator range up and downe the field, Emballtelling his men at armes, and stirring all to blows. Chapman.

4. To raise; to excite.

The soldiers love her brother's memory;
And for her sake some mutiny will stir. Dryden.

5. To STIR up. To incite; to animate; to instigate by inflaming the passions.

This would seem a dangerous commission, and ready to stir up all the Irish in rebellion.

Spenser on Ireland.

The greedy thirst of royal crown,
That knows no kindred, no regards, no right,
Stirred Porrex up to put his brother down.

Spenser.

The words of Judas were very good, and able to stir them up to valour. 2 Macc. xiv. 17.

Having overcome and thrust him out of his kingdom, he stirred up the Christians and Numidians against him. Knolles.

The vigorous spirit of Montrose stirred him up to make some attempt, whether he had any help or no. Clarendon.

The improving of his own parts and happiness stir him up to so notable a design.

More against Atheism.

Thou with rebel insolence didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

6. To STIR up. To put in action; to excite; to quicken.

Hell is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee. Isa. xiv. 9.
Such [mirth] the jocund flute or gamesome pipe
Stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds.

Milton, Comus.

To stir up vigour in him, employ him in some constant bodily labour. Locke.

The use of the passions is to stir up the mind, and put it upon action, to awake the understanding and to enforce the will. Addison.

To STIR. v. n.

1. To move one's self; to go out of the place; to change place.

No power he had to stir, nor will to rise. Spenser.

They had the semblance of great bodies behind on the other side of the hill, the falsehood of which would have been manifest as soon as they should move from the place where they were, and from whence they were not to stir. Clarendon.

We acknowledge a man to be mad or melancholy, who fancies himself to be glass, and so is afraid of stirring; or, taking himself to be wax, dares not let the sun shine upon him. Law.

2. To be in motion; not to be still; to pass from inactivity to motion.

3. To become the object of notice.

If they happen to have any superior character, they fancy they have a right to talk freely upon every thing that stirs or appears. Watts.

4. To rise in the morning. This is a colloquial and familiar use.

If the gentleman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio entreats of her a little favour of speech. Shakspeare, Othello.

STIR. n. s. [stur, Runick, a battle; ysturf, noise, Welsh.]

1. Tumult; bustle.

What hallooing and what stir is this to-day?
These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase. Shaks.
Tumultuous stirs upon this strife ensue.

Drayton.

He hath spun a fair thread, to make all this stir for such a necessity as no man ever denied.

Ep. Bramhall.

Tell, said the soldier, miserable sir,
Why all these words, this clamour, and this stir,
Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?

Denham.

The great stirs of the disputing world are but the conflicts of the humours.

Glennville.

After all this stir about them, they are good for nothing.

Filolston.

Consider, after so much stir about genus and species, how few words we have yet settled definitions of. Locke.

Silence is usually worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it proceeds from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain or make a stir. South, Serm.

2. Commotion; publick disturbance; tumultuous disorder; seditious uproar.

Whenever the earl shall die, all those lands are to come unto her majesty; he is like to make a foul stir there, though of himself of no power, yet through supportance of some others who lie in the wind. Spenser on Ireland.

He did make these stirs, grieving that the name of Christ was at all brought into those parts. Abbot.

Being advertised of some stirs raised by his unnatural sons in England, he departed out of Ireland without a blow. Davies.

Raphael, thou hear'st what stir on earth,
Satan from hell 'scap'd through the darksome gulf,
Hath rais'd in paradise, and how disturb'd
This night the human pair. Milton.

2. Agitation of thoughts; conflicting passion.

He did keep

The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief
Still waving, as the stirs and fits of 's mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

STIRABOUT.* n. s. [stir and about.] A Yorkshire dish, formed of oatmeal boiled in water to a certain consistency, and then eaten either with a bit of cold butter put into it and salt, or with milk. It is also a common breakfast among the lower orders in the north of Ireland. Malone.

STIRIOUS. adj. [from stiria, Latin.] Resembling icicles.

Crystal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirious or stillicious dependencies of ice. Brown, Vulg. Err.

STIRK.* See STURK.

STIRP. n. s. [stirps, Lat.] Race; family; generation. Not used.

Sundry nations got footing in that land, of the which there yet remain divers great families and stirps. Spenser.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than when there are stirps of nobles. Bacon.

All nations of might and fame resorted hither; of whom we have some stirps and little tribes with us at this day. Bacon.

STIRRAGE.* n. s. [from To stir.] Motion; act of stirring.

They cannot sleep soundly, but the crowing of the cock, the noise of little birds,—every small stirrage waketh them.

Granger on Eccl. (1621,) p. 320.

STIRRER.† n. s. [from stir.]

1. One who is in motion; one who puts in motion.

Here's one outliv'd his peers,
And told forth fourscore years:
He vexed time, and busied the whole state;
Troubled both foes and friends,
But ever to no ends:
What, did this stirrer but die late?
How well at twenty had he fall'n or stood,
For three of his fourscore he did no good.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. A riser in the morning.
Come on; give me your hand, sir; an early stirrer. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

3. An inciter; an instigator.

4. STIRRER up. An inciter; an instigator.
A perpetual spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the sun's neighbourhood, the life and stirrer up of nature in a perpetual activity. Raleigh.

Will it not reflect on thy character, Nic, to turn harrier in thy old days; a stirrer up of quarrels betwixt thy neighbours? Arbutnot.

STIRRING.* n. s. [stirring, Saxon.] The act of moving.

The great Judge of all knows every different degree of human improvement, from these weak stirrings and tendencies of the will, which have not yet formed themselves into regular purposes, to the last entire consummation of a good habit.

STIRRUP. n. s. [stirzap, stirap, from stiran, Sax. to climb, and zap, a cord.] An iron hoop suspended by a strap, in which the horseman sets his foot when he mounts or rides.

Neither is his manner of mounting unseemly, though he lack stirrups; for in his getting up, his horse is still going, whereby he gaineth way; and therefore the stirrup was called so in scoria, as it were a stay to get up, being derived of the old English word sty, which is to get up, or mount.

Spenser.
Hast thou not kiss'd my hand, and held my stirrup? Shakspeare.

His horse hipped with an old motby saddle, the stirrups of no kindred. Shaks. Tam. of the Shrew.

My friend, judge not me,
Thou seest I judge not thee.
Between the stirrup and the ground,
Mercy I ask'd, mercy I found. Camden, Rem.
At this the knight began to cheer up,
And raising up himself on stirrup,
Cried out Victoria. Hudibras.

Harming in secret guise the flocks:
Ne priest unworth of Goddes coat
To swine ydrunk, or filthy stoat. Prior, Imit. of Chaucer.

STO'CAH.† n. s. [Irish; stochk, Erse.] An attendant; a wallet-boy. Not in use.

The strength of all that nation is the kerne, galloglasse, stocah, horseman, and horseboy. Spenser on Ireland.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work; — which he saith is the life of a peasant: but thenceforth becometh an horseboy, or a stocah to some kern, inuring himself to his sword, and the gentlemanly trade of stealing. Spenser on Ireland.

STOCCA'DE.* n. s. [stockade, Teut. (vulgò stoccada), sica, a dagger. Kilian.] An enclosure or fence made with pointed stakes.

Extend a rail of elm, securely arm'd
With spiculated paling, in such sort
As round some citadel the engineer
Directs his sharp stockade. Mason, Eng. Garden, B. 2.

STOCCA'DO.† n. s. [estoccade, Fr. a thrust. See STOCCADE. From the Teut. stock, a sword, a dagger; stocco, Italian.] A thrust with a rapier.

You stand on distance, your passes, stoccadoes, and I know not what. Shaks. M. W. of Windsor.

STOCK.† n. s. [stockr, stock, Su. Goth. truncus, trabs; stoc, Sax. stock, Dutch; estoc, Fr.]

1. The trunk; the body of a plant.
That furious beast
His precious horn, sought of his enemies,
Strikes in the stock, ne thence can be releas'd. Spenser.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again, though the root wax old in the earth, and the stock die in the ground. Job, xiv. 8.
2. The trunk into which a graft is inserted.

The cion over-rueth the stock quite; and the stock is passive only, and giveth aliment but no motion to the graft. Bacon.

As fruits, ungrateful to the planter's care,
On savage stocks inserted, learn to bear;
The surest virtues thus from passions shoot,
Wild nature's vigour working at the root. Pope.

3. A log; a post.
Men, serving either calamity or tyranny, did ascribe unto stones and stocks the incommunicable Name. Wisd. xiv. 21.

Them who kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshipp'd stocks and stones,
Forget not. Milton, Sonnet.

Why all this fury? What's the matter,
That oaks must come from Thrace to dance?

Must stupid stocks be taught to flatter?
And is there no such wood in France? Prior.

4. A man proverbially stupid.
What tyranny is this, my heart to thrall,
And eke my tongue with proud restraint to tie,
That neither I may speak nor think at all,
But like a stupid stock in silence die? Spenser.

While we admire
This virtue and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoicks, nor no stocks. Shakspeare.
5. The handle of any thing.

6. A support of a ship while it is building.
Fresh supplies of ships,
And such as fitted since the fight had been,
Or new from stocks were fall'n into the road. Dryden.

7. [Stock, Teut. stocco, a rapier, Italian.] A thrust; a stoccado.

To see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy puncto, thy stock, thy reverse. Shaks.

8. Something made of linen; a cravat; a close neck-cloth. Anciently a cover for the leg, now stocking.

His lackey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boothose on the other. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

9. A race; a lineage; a family.

Say what stock he springs of. —
The noble house of Marcus. Shaks. Coriol.
His early virtues to that ancient stock
Gave as much honour as from thence he took. Waller.

The like shall sing
All prophecy, that of the royal stock
Of David, so I name this king, shall rise
A son, the woman's seed. Milton, P. L.
Thou hast seen one world begin, and end,
And man, as from a second stock, proceed. Milton, P. L.

To no human stock
We owe this fierce unkindness; but the rock,
That cloven rock produc'd thee. Waller.

Thy mother was no goddess, nor thy stock
From Dardanus; but in some horrid rock,
Perfidious wretch, rough Caucasus thee bred. Denham.

10. The principal; capital store; fund already provided. In this sense the word is rarely found in the plural; nor, among the numerous examples given by Dr. Johnson, is there such an instance. I have found one; but the form may be pronounced obsolete.

We cast our eyes upon all sorts of good that is to be done: The poor in extremity must be holpen; orphans and aged must be provided for; our poor friends that are behind-hand; prisoners, and distressed householders, young tradesmen that want stocks, must be thought on.

Dr. White, Sermon. (1615.) p. 69.

Prodigal men
Feel not their own stock wasting.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign; so the stock of the kingdom shall yearly increase; for the then balance of trade must be returned in money or bullion.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

A king, against a storm, must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure.

Bacon.

'Tis the place where God promises and delights to dispense larger proportions of his favour, that he may fix a mark of honour on his sanctuary, and recommend it to the sons of men, upon the stock of their own interest as well as his own glory.

South.

Some honour of your own acquire;
Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,
Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe.

Dryden.

Yet was she not profuse; but fear'd to waste,
And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;
That all might be supply'd, and she not grieve,
When crouds appear'd, she had not to relieve;
Which to prevent, she still increas'd her store;
Laid up, and spar'd, that she might give the more.

Dryden.

Beneath one law bees live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive:
All is the state's, the state provides for all.

Dryden.

Nor do those ills on single bodies prey;
But oft'n bring the nation to decay,
And sweep the present stock and future hope away.

Dryden.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stock of mankind?

Locke.

When we brought it out, it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stock of air that it lived a minute longer the second time.

Addison on Italy.

Be ready to give, and glad to distribute, by setting apart something out of thy stock for the use of some charities.

Atterbury.

Of those stars, which our imperfect eye
Has doom'd and fix'd to one eternal sky,
Each by a native stock of honour great,
May dart strong influence, and diffuse kind heat.

Prior.

They had law-suits, but, though they spent their income, they never mortgaged the stock.

Arbutnot.

She has divided part of her estate amongst them, that every one may be charitable out of their own stock, and each of them take it in their turns to provide for the poor and sick of the parish.

Law.

11. Quantity; store; body.

He proposes to himself no small stock of fame in future ages, in being the first who has undertaken this design.

Arbutnot.

12. Cattle in general. North. Pegge.

13. A fund established by the government, of which the value rises and falls by artifice or chance. Dr. Johnson.—The word, in this sense, is also old French: "Stoques, a borrowing or taking up money upon interest; whence faire stoques, so to borrow." Cotgrave.

An artificial wealth of funds and stocks was in the hands of those who had been plundering the publick.

Swift.

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks,
Peeress and butler share alike the box.

Pope.

14. Prison for the legs: commonly also without singular. See STOCKS.

To STOCK.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To store; to fill sufficiently.

If a man will commit such rules to his memory, and stock his mind with portions of Scripture answerable to all the heads of duty, his conscience can never be at a loss.

South.

I, who before with shepherds in the groves,
Sung to my oaten pipe their rural loves,
Manur'd the glebe, and stock'd the fruitful plain.

Dryden.

The world begun to be stock'd with people, and human industry drained those uninhabitable places.

Burnet.

Springs and rivers are by large supplies continually stocked with water.

Woodward.

2. To lay up in store: as, he stocks what he cannot use.

3. To put in the stocks. Dr. Johnson.—

To stock means, anciently, to confine. [stucka, in cippo vel robore tenere aut custodire. Leges ant. Goth. Serenius. So stocken, Teut. to confine in the stocks.†] See also STOCKS.

Rather die I would, and determine
As thinketh me now, stocked in prison.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 381.

Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king,
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, shew too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

4. To extirpate. Sometimes with up.

The time shall quickly come, thy groves and pleasant springs,
Where to the mirthful merle the warbling mavis sings,

The painful labourer's hand shall stock, the roots to burn.

Drayton, Polyb. S. 14.

The wild boar not only spoils her branches, but stocks up her roots.

Dec. of Chr. Piety.

STOCKBROKER.* n. s. [stock and broker.]

One who deals in stock, or the publick funds.

Stockdoves and turtles tell their am'rous pain,
And, from the lofty elms, of love complain.

Dryden.

STOCKFISH.† n. s. [stockevisch, Dutch.]

Dried cod, so called from its hardness.

Saltfish, stockfish, nor herring,

It is not for your wearing. Skelton, Poems, p. 185.

He's to be made more tractable, I doubt not:—
Yes, if they taw him as they do white-leather
Upon an iron, or beat him soft like stock-fish.

Beaumont and Fl. Captain.

STOCKGILLYFLOWER. n. s. [leucolium, Lat.]

A plant.

Miller.

STOCKING.† n. s. [The original word seems to be stock, whence stocks, a prison for the legs. Stock, in the old language, made the plural stocken, which was used for a pair of stocks or covers for the legs. Stocken was in time taken for a singular, and pronounced stocking. The like corruption has happened to chick, chicken, chickens. Dr. Johnson.—It is the past participle of the Saxon stican, to stick; corruptly written for stocken, (i. e. stok, with the addition of the participial termination en,) because it was stuck or made with sticking pins, now called knitting needles. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 221.—Minsheu and Serenius, (among other conjectures,) refer it to the Teut. sticken, to put on.] The covering of the leg.

In his first approach before my lady he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors.

Shakespeare.

By the loyalty of that town he procured shoes, stockings, and money for his soldiers. Clarendon.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of sheep?

More against Atheism.

He spent half a day to look for his odd stocking, when he had them both upon a leg. L'Estrange.

At am'rous Flavio is the stocking thrown,
That very night he longs to lie alone.

Pope.

The families of farmers live in filth and nastiness, without a shoe or a stocking to their feet.

Swift.

To STOCKING. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in stockings.

Stocking'd with loads of fat town-dirt, he goes.

Dryden.

STOCKJOBBER. n. s. [stock and job.] A low wretch who gets money by buying and selling shares in the funds.

The stockjobber thus from 'Change-alley goes down,

And tips you the freeman a wink;
Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink.

Swift.

STOCKJOBBER.* n. s. [stock and job.]

The act of buying and selling stock in the publick funds for the turn of the scale, or on speculation.

Projects for improving old manufactures, or setting up new ones, should not be despised in a trading country; but the making them pretences for stockjobbing hath been a fatal imposition.

Bp. Berkeley, Ess. on Gr. Britain.

A system, that ought to be plainest and fairest imaginable, will become a dark, intricate, and wicked mystery of stockjobbing.

Bolingbroke on Parties, Lett. 17.

STOCKISH. adj. [from stock.] Hard; blockish.

The poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;

Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.

Shakespeare.

There are locks for several purposes; as street-door-locks, called stocklocks; chamber-door-locks, called spring-locks, and cupboard-locks.

Moxon, Mech. Ex.

STOCKS.† n. s. [Commonly without singular.]

1. Prison for the legs. Dr. Johnson.—Stock is our old word for a fetter; which our lexicographers have not known. Hence Minsheu derives the stocks from stock, the trunk of a tree, because made of such; and Dr. Johnson from stock, in the sense of stocking. But the northern verbs, stucka and stocken, signify to confine. See the third sense of To STOCK. And hence stock, our fetter; afterwards transferred to the wooden instrument of confinement for the legs.

Oft times he was bounden in stockis and cheynes, and he hadde broke the cheynes, and hadde broke the stockis to smale gobetis. Wicliffe, St. Mark, v.

Fetch forth the stocks:

As I have life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.

Shakespeare.

Tom is whipt from tything to tything, stockpunish'd, and imprisoned.

Shaks. K. Lear.

Matrimony is expressed by a young man standing, his legs being fast in a pair of stocks.

Penclun.

The stocks hinder his legs from obeying the determination of his mind, if it would transfer his body to another place.

Locke.

2. Wooden work upon which ships are built. See the sixth sense of Stock.
3. Publick funds. See the thirteenth sense of Stock.

STOCKSTILL.† adj. [stock and still.] Motionless as logs.

The polype fish sits all the winter long Stock-still, through sloth.

Our preachers stand stockstill in the pulpit, and will not so much as move a finger to set off the best sermon. Addison.

STOCKY.* adj. [from stock.] Stout: I think it is a provincial word.

They had no titles of honour among them, but such as denoted some bodily strength or perfection; as, such an one the tall, such an one the stocky, such an one the gruff.

STOICAL.* adj. [from Stoick; French, Stoïck.] stoïque.] Of or belonging to the Stoicks; cold; stiff; austere; affecting to hold all things indifferent.

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears To those budge doctors of the Stoick fur, And fetch their precepts from the Cynick tub, Praising the lean and sallow Abstinence!

Milton, Comus.

It is a common imputation to Seneca, that though he declaimed with so much strength of reason, and a stoical contempt of riches and power, he was at the same time one of the richest and most powerful men in Rome. Taitler, No. 170.

The Stoick philosophers discard all passions in general. Addison, Spect. No. 397.

STOICALLY.* adv. [from stoical.] After the manner of the Stoicks; austere; with pretended indifference to all things.

Minsheu.

Be not stoically mistaken in the equality of sins. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

STOICALNESS.* n. s. The state of being stoical; the temper of a Stoick. Scott.

STOICISM.* n. s. [French, stoïcisme.] The opinions and maxims of the Stoicks.

To pretend to virtue and holiness without reference to God and a life to come, is but to fall into a more dull and flat kind of Stoicism. Morse, Conj. Cabb. (1653.) p. 193.

Stoicism, which was the pendency of virtue, ascribes all good qualifications of what kind sever to the virtuous man. Addison, Spect. No. 243.

STOICK.* n. s. [Στωϊκος, Gr. from σώω, a porch.] A disciple of the heathen philosopher Zeno, who taught under a piazza or portico in the city of Athens; and maintained, that a wise man ought to be free from all passions, to be unmoved either by joy or grief, and to esteem all things governed by unavoidable necessity.

Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoicks encountered him. Acts, xvii. 18.

The Stoick last in philosophick pride, By him call'd virtue; and his virtuous man, Wise, perfect in himself, and all possessing Equal to God, oft shames not to prefer, As fearing God nor man, contemning all

Which, pleasure, pain or torment, death and life, Which, when he lists, he leaves, or boasts he can, For all his tedious talk is but vain boast, Or subtle shifts conviction to evade. Milton, P. R.

STOKE, Stoak.† They seem to come from the Sax. rocce, signifying the stock or body of a tree. Cited by Dr. Johnson from Gibson's Camden. But stoke, in composition, comes from the Sax. roc, locus, place: hence the names of many of our towns, &c. as, Basingstoke. See Lye in V. Scoc.

VOL. III.

STOKER.* n. s. One who looks after the fire in a brewhouse: a technical word.

As the plague of happy life,
I run away from party-strife:
A prince's cause, a church's claim,
I've known to raise a mighty flame,
And priest, as stoker, very free
To throw in peace and charity.

Green, Poem of the Spleen, (1754.)

STOLE.† n. s. [stola, Lat. stola, Saxon; stole, old French.] A long vest.

Be ye ware of Scribs that wolen vandre in stolis, [present version, long clothing.]

Over all a black stole she did throw,
As one that inly mourned. Spenser.

The solemn feast of Ceres now was near,
When long white linen stoles the matrons wear. Dryden.

STOLE. The preterite of steal.

A factor stole a gem away. Pope.

STO'LED.* adj. [from stole.] Wearing a stole or long robe.

After them flew the prophets, brightly stol'd
In shining lawn. G. Fletcher, Christ's Victorie.

In vain with timbrell'd anthems dark
The sable-stoled sorcerers bear his worship's ark. Milton, Ode Nativ.

STO'LEN. Participle passive of steal.

Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant. Prov. ix. 17.

STO'RID.* adj. [stolidus, Latin.] Stupid; foolish. Cockeram.

STOLIDITY.† n. s. [stolidus, Lat. stolidité, Fr.] Stupidity; want of sense.

To the end his prince might never, by opening his eyes, come to the knowledge of his own stolidity. Trans. of Boccacini, (1626.) p. 97.

These are the fools in the text, indolent untractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments. Bentley, Serm. i.

STOMACH. n. s. [estomach, Fr. stomachus, Lat.]

1. The ventricle in which food is digested.

If you're sick at sea,
Or stomach qualm'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
This filthy simile, this beastly line,
Quite turns my stomach. Pope.

2. Appetite; desire of food.

Tell me, what is 't that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Shakespeare.
Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,
Such are the poor in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach; such the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

As appetite or stomach to meat is a sign of health in the body, so is this hunger in the soul a vital quality, an evidence of some life of grace in the heart; whereas decay of appetite, and the no manner of stomach, is a most desperate prognostick. Hammond.

3. Inclination; liking.

He which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
The unusual distance of time made it subject to every man's note, that it was an act against his stomach, and put upon him by necessity of state. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The very trade went against his stomach. L'Estrange.

4. [Stomachus, Lat.] Anger; violence of temper.

Disdain he called was, and did disdain
To be so call'd, and who so did him call:
Stern was his look, and full of stomach vain,
His portance terrible, and stature tall. Spenser.
Is 't near dinner time? — I would it were,
That you might kill your stomach on your meat,
And not upon your maid. Shaks. Two Gent. of Ver.
Instead of trumpet and of drum,
That makes the warrior's stomach come. Bulwer.

5. Sullenness; resentment; stubbornness.

Some of the chiefest laity professed with greater stomach their judgements, than such a discipline was little better than popish tyranny disguised under a new form. Hooker.

They plainly saw, that when stomach doth strive with wit, the match is not equal. Hooker.

Whereby the ape in world's rous stomach wox,
Strongly encourag'd by the crafty fox. Spenser.

That nobles should such stomachs bear!
I myself fight not once in forty year.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

It stuck in the camel's stomach, that bulls should be armed with horns, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

Not courage but stomach that makes people break rather than they will bend. L'Estrange.

This sort of crying proceeding from pride, obstinacy, and stomach, the will, where the fault lies, must be bent. Locke.

6. Pride; haughtiness.

Arius, a subtle-witted and a marvellous fair-spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hooker.

He was a man

Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

To STO'MACH. v. a. [stomachor, Lat.] To resent; to remember with anger and malignity.

Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Jonathan loved David, and the people applauded him; only Saul stomached him, and therefore hated him. By. Hall, Contemp.

The lion began to shew his teeth, and to stomach the affront. L'Estrange.

To STO'MACH. v. n. To be angry.

Let a man, though never so justly, oppose himself unto those that are disordered in their ways, and what one amongst them commonly doth not stomach at such contradiction, storm at reproof, and hate such as would reform them? Hooker.

STO'MACHAL.* adj. [stomacal, Fr.] Cordial; helping the stomach.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

STO'MACHED. adj. [from stomach.] Filled with passions of resentment.

High stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;
In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire. Shaks.

STO'MACHER. n. s. [from stomach.] An ornamental covering worn by women on the breast.

Golden quoifs and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth. Is. iii. 24.

Thou marry'st every year
The lyric lark and the grave whispering dove,
The sparrow that neglects his life for love,
The household bird with the red stomacher. Donne.

STO'MACHFUL.† adj. [stomachosus, Latin; stomach and full.] Sullen; stubborn; perverse.

A stomachfull Esau knows that his good father cannot but be displeased with his pagan matches. By. Hall, Rem. p. 138.

A stomachful boy put to school, the whole world could not bring to pronounce the first letter.

L'Estrange.

Obstinate or stomachful crying should not be permitted, because it is another way of encouraging those passions which 'tis our business to subdue.

Locke.

STOMACHFULNESS.† n. s. [from stomachful.] Stubbornness; sullenness; obstinacy.

Pride, stomachfulness, headiness, — avail but little.

Granger on Eccl. (1621.) p. 248.

STOMACHICAL.† adj. [stomachique, Fr.] STOMACHICK. } Relating to the stomach; pertaining to the stomach.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass, Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Nor slept the winds Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad

From the four hinges of the world, and fell

On the vexed wilderness, whose tallest pines,

Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,

Bow'd their stiff necks, loaden with stormy blasts,

Or torn up sheer. Milton, P. R.

Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,

And there the soil a stony harvest yields. Dryden, Virg.

As in spires he stood, he turn'd to stone;

The stony snake retain'd the figure still his own. Dryden.

stack or mow.] A shock of corn containing twelve sheaves. North. See Ray and Grose.

To STOOK.* v. a. [from the noun.] To set up the sheaves in stooks. Ash.

STOOL.† n. s. [stols, Gothick; stol, Saxon; stool, Dutch; stoll, Germ. from stellen, to place, to set. Wachter.]

1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts, Logick.

Thou fearful fool,

Why takest not of the same fruit of gold?

Ne sittest down on that same silver stool,

To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Spenser.

Now which were wise, and which were fools?

Poor Alma sits between two stools:

The more she reads, the more perplex. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.

There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools: those that purge by stool, are such as enter not all, or little, into the mesenteric veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the mesenteric veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The peristaltic motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual need of going to stool. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. STOOL of Repentance, or cutty stool, in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays, in the forenoon; and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forwards to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to public view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvas, analogous to a hairy or monastick vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack or sackcloth, and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreasonable judgement of things brings many a great man to the stool of repentance. L'Estrange.

4. [Stolo, Lat.] A shoot from the trunk of a tree.

STO'OLBALL. n. s. [stool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool.

While Betty dances on the green,

And Susan is at stoolball seen. Prior.

To STOOP.† v. n. [trupian, Sax. stuypen, Dutch.]

1. To bend down; to bend forward.

Like unto the boughs of this tree he bended downward, and stooped toward the earth. Ralegh.

2. To lean forward standing or walking.

When Pelopidas and Ismenias were sent to Artaxerxes, Pelopidas did nothing unworthy; but

Ismenias let fall his ring to the ground, and, stooping for that, was thought to make his adoration. Stillington.

He, stooping, open'd my left side, and took From thence a rib. Milton, P. L.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit.

I am the son of Henry the fifth, Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop. Shakespeare.

Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long, And swept the riches of the world from far; Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong. Dryden.

4. To descend from rank or dignity.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry, it multiplieth riches exceedingly. Bacon.

He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there. Boyle, Seraph. Love.

5. To yield; to be inferior.

Death his death-wound shall then receive, And stoop inglorious. Milton, P. L.

These are arts, my prince, In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome. Addison.

6. To sink from resolution or superiority, to condescend.

They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such concurrence of divided minds, and unmeet that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men and to constrain thereunto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves in suspense from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient. Hooker.

7. To come down on prey as a falcon.

Stooping is when a hawk, being upon her wings at the height of her pitch, bendeth violently down to strike the fowle, or any other prey. Latham's Falconry.

When they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Here stands my dove: stoop at her, if you dare. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

8. To alight from the wing.

Satan ready now

To stoop with wearied wings and willing feet,

On the bare outside of this world. Milton, P. L.

Twelve swans behold in beauteous order move,

And stoop with closing pinions from above. Dryden.

9. To sink to a lower place.

Cowering low

With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton, P. L.

To STOOP.* v. a.

1. To submit.

Sole cause that stoops

Their grandeur to man's eye. Young, Night Th. 9.

2. To bend forward, as a vessel of liquor.

To stoop this vine to the very lees. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 59.

STOOP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act of stooping; inclination downward.

2. Descent from dignity or superiority.

Can any loyal subject see

With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?

An ocean pour'd upon a narrow brook? Dryden.

3. Fall of a bird upon his prey.

Now will I wander through the air,

Mount, make a stoop at every fair. Waller.

An eagle made a stoop at him in the middle of his exaltation, and carried him away. L'Estrange.

4. [Stoppa, Sax. stoope, Dutch.] A vessel of liquor.

Come, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of Othello. Shakespeare.

There's nothing more in me, sir, but may be squeezed out without racking, only a stoop or two of wine. Denham.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,
On the huzzaing mob shall more prevail,
Than if you give them, with the nicest art,
Ragouts of peacocks' brains, or filbert tart. King.
5. A post fastened in the earth : a northern word. [stupa, Lat.] Ray, and Grose.
Written also stoop or stoup.

It might be known hard by an ancient stoop,
Where grew an oak in elder days.

Tamcred and Gismunda.
STO'OPER.* n. s. [from stoop.] One who stoops. Sherwood.

STO'OPINGLY. adv. [from stooping.] With inclination downwards.

Nani was noted to tread softly, to walk stoopingly, and raise himself from benches with laborious gesture. Wotton.

To STOP.† v. a. [estouper, Fr. stoppare, Ital. stoppen, Dutch; stoppa, Su. Goth.]

1. To hinder from progressive motion.

From the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had Shall stop or spur me. Shakspeare.

2. To hinder from successive operation.

Can any dresses find a way
To stop the approaches of decay,
And mend a ruin'd face? Dorset.

3. To hinder from any change of state, whether to better or worse.

Friend, 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shaks. K. Lear.
As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting. 2 Cor. xi. 10.

5. To put an end to the motion or action of any thing; to intercept.

Almon falls, pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war :

Fix'd in his throat the flying weapon stood,
And stopp'd his breath, and drank his vital blood. Dryden.

6. To repress; to suspend.

Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should arrest his confidence, and stop the execution of his purpose with this question : Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not? South.

7. To suppress.

He, on occasion of stopping my play, did me a good office at court, by representing it as long ago designed. Dryden.

8. To regulate musical strings with the fingers.

In instruments of strings, if you stop a string high, whereby it hath less power to tremble, the sound is more treble, but yet more dead. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

9. To close any aperture.

Smite every fenced city, stop all wells of water, and mar land with stones. 2 Kings, iii. 19.

They pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Zech. vii. 11.

A hawk's bell, the holes stopped up, hang by a thread within a bottle-glass, and stop the glass close with wax. Bacon.

10. To obstruct; to encumber.

Mountains of ice that stop the imagin'd way. Milton, P. L.

11. To garnish with proper punctuation.

To STOP. v. n.

1. To cease to go forward.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain : he bites his lip, and starts ;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple ; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.

If the rude thrust pour on with furious pace,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace,
Stop short, nor struggle through. Gay.

2. To cease from any course of action.

Encroachments are made by degrees from one step to another ; and the best time to stop is at the beginning. Lesley.

STOP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cessation of progressive motion.

Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool ;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. Shakspeare.

The marigold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlance
Her at his rise, at his full stop Packs and shuts up her gawdy shop. Cleveland.

A lion, ranging for his prey, made a stop on a sudden at a hideous yelling noise, which startled him. L'Estrange.

2. Hindrance of progress ; obstruction ; act of stopping.

In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides the stop it would make in the whole course of all men's lives and actions. Hooker.

These gates are not sufficient for the communication between the walled city and its suburbs, as daily appears by the stops and embarrasses of coaches near both these gates. Graunt.

My praise the Fabii claim,
Or thou great hero, greatest of thy name,
Ordain'd in war to save the sinking state,
And, by delays, to put a stop to fate. Dryden, Æn.

Occult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected. Newton, Opt.

Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger, and in that circuit more stops, so that the returns must necessarily be slower and scantier. Locke.

Female zeal, though proceeding from so good a principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings, which might have ended in a reformation. Addison.

3. Repression ; hindrance of operation.

'Tis a great step towards the mastery of our desires to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence. Locke.

4. Cessation of action.

Look you to the guard-to-night :
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outpost discretion. Shakspeare.

5. Interruption.

Thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath ;
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more. Shakspeare.

6. Prohibition of sale.

If they should open a war, they foresee the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and salts, wholly taken off by our two nations. Temple.

7. That which obstructs ; obstacle ; impediment.

The proud Duessa, full of wrathful spight
And fierce disdain to be affronted so,

Inforc'd her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser.

On indeed they went : but O ! not far ;
A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course. Daniel.

Blessed be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South.

So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness. Rogers.

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind musick are regulated.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops ; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakspeare.

Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgement are so well com- mingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger,
To sound what stop she please. Shaks. Hamlet.

The harp
Had work, and rested not ; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton, P. L.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen ; his volent touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton, P. L.

A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibiae ; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classic author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison on Italy.

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

The further a string is strained, the less super- straining goeth to a note ; for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all : and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

10. The act of applying the stops in mus- ick.

The organ-sound a time survives the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel, Civ. War.

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been asham'd to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Crashaw.

STO'PCKOCK. n. s. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopped by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but would drivell like some paralytick or fool ; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew, Cosmol.

STO'PGAP. n. s. [from stop and gap.] Something substituted ; a temporary expedient.

STO'PPAGE. n. s. [from stop.] The act of stopping ; the state of being stopped.

The effects are a stoppage of circulation by too great a weight upon the heart, and suffocation. Arbuthnot.

The stoppage of a cough, or spitting, increases phlegm in the stomach. Floyer on the Hunguors.

STO'PPER.* n. s. [from To stop.]

1. One who closes any aperture.

The ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof, were in thee thy talkers, [in the margin stoppers of chinks.] Ezek. xxvii. 9.

2. A stopple. See STOPPLE.

STO'PLESS.* adj. [stop and less.] Not to be stopped; irresistible.

Making a civil and staid senate rude,
And stopless as a running multitude.

Davenant on K. Ch. II.'s Return.

STO'PLE, or Stopper.† n. s. [from stop.]
That by which any hole or the mouth of any vessel is filled up.

Bottles swung, or carried in a wheel-barrow upon rough ground, fill not full, but leave some air; for if the liquor come close to the stopple, it cannot flower. Bacon.

There were no shuts or stopples made for the ears, that any loud or sharp noise might awaken it, as also a soft and gentle murmur provoke it to sleep.

Ray on the Creation.

Little tube of mighty power,—
With my little stopper prest.

J. H. Browne, Imit. of A. Philips.

STO'RAX. n. s. [styrax, Latin.]

1. A plant.

2. A resinous and odourous gum.

I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh,
as galbanum, and sweet storax. Eccles. xxiv. 15.

STORE. n. s. [stór, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stor, Danish; stoor, Icelandick, is great. The Teutonic dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.

The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon.

None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up higher like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin
With vanity had fill'd the works of men.

Milton, P. L.

Jove, grant me length of life, and years good store

Heap on my bended back.

Dryden, Juv.

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded.

We liv'd

Supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more.

Dryden.

Divine Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame:

The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store

Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,

And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.

Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores:

How has she oft exhausted all her stores,

How oft in fields of death thy presence sought!

Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought.

Addison.

Their minds are richly fraught

With philosophick stores. Thomson.

3. The state of being accumulated; hoard.

Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deut. xxxii. 34.

4. Storehouse; magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam,

Concocted and adusted, they reduc'd

To blackest grain, and into store convey'd.

Milton, P. L.

STORE. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.

What floods of treasure have flowed into Europe by that action, so that the cause of Christendom is raised since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and store treasure; but the silver is still growing.

Bacon, Holy War.

To STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish; to replenish.

Wise Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thousand beauties blest;
Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd;
Her power with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.

2. To stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stor'd with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles, Hist.

One having stor'd a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years' end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke.

To store the vessel let the care be mine,
With water from the rocks and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope, Odys.

3. To lay up; to hoard.

Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stor'd up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

STO'REHOUSE. n. s. [store and house.]

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and repositd against a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the Scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Hooker.

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cram'm'd with grain! Shakespeare, Coriol.

Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians. Gen. xli. 56.

To these high powers a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and general reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan flood can wash away. Davies.

My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events.

Milton, P. R.

The image of God was resplendent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South.

As many different sounds can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Holder.

2. A great mass repositd.

They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain.

Spenser, F. Q.

STO'RER.† n. s. [from store.] One who lays up.

A wench of a storer, or Your sutler's wife. B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

Obsolete.

Of storial thing that toucheth gentillesse.
Chaucer, Mill. Prol.

STO'RIED. adj. [from story.] Furnished with stories; adorned with historical pictures.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister pale,
And love the high-embowed roof,
With antic pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton, II Pens.

Some greedy minion or imperious wife
The trophied arches, storied halls, invade. Pope.

STO'RIER.* n. s. [from story.] An historian; a relater of stories. Obsolete.

The storie — made of three moost famese and credible storiers in Greeke lond.
Bp. Pecock, (about 1440,) in Lewis's Life of him, p. 117.

STORK. n. s. [rope, Saxon; ciconia, Lat.] A bird of passage famous for the regularity of its departure.

Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frogs, and insects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings, and also some part of its head and thighs, black:
it sits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs: they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring. Calmet.

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Jer. vii. 7.

Who bid the stork, Columbus like, explore
Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?
Who calls the council, states the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?
Pope.

STO'RKSBILL. n. s. [geranium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

STORM.† n. s. [ystorm, Welsh; rotpm,
Saxon; storm, Dutch; stormo, Italian.
Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of the Sax. ryþmian, to agitate. Mr. H.
Tooke.]

1. A tempest; a commotion of the elements.

We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakespeare.
Them she upstays, mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flower,
From her best prop so far, and storm so nigh.

Milton, P. L.

Sulphurous hail shot after us in storm.
Milton, P. L.

Then stay, my child! storms beat and rolls the main;

Oh! beat those storms, and roll the seas in vain.

Pope.

2. Assault in a fortified place.

How by storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sack'd and burnt the town.

Dryden.

3. Commotion; sedition; tumult; clamour; bustle.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm.

Shakespeare.

Her sister
Began to scold, and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din.

Shakespeare.

4. Affliction; calamity; distress.

A brave man struggling in the storms of fate.

Pope.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.

As oft as we are delivered from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, sensibly, and extraordinarily bestowed. Hooker.

To STORM.† v. a. [from the noun; Sax.
ryþmian, both active and neuter.] To attack by open force.

From ploughs and harrows sent to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storm the shaken town.

Dryden.

There the brazen tower was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold. Pope.

To STORM. v. n.

1. To raise tempests.

So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour.
Spenser.

2. To rage; to fume; to be loudly angry.

Hoarse, and all in rage,
As mock'd they their storm. Milton, P. L.
When you return, the master storms, the lady scolds. Swift.

While thus they rail, and scold, and storm,
It passes but for common form. Swift.

STORM-BEAT.* adj. [from storm and beat.] Injured by storm.

O turn thy rudder hitherward awhile;
Here may thy storm-bell vessel safely ride.

Spenser, F. Q.

STORMINESS.* n. s. [from stormy.] State or quality of being stormy.

STORMY.* adj. [from storm; Saxon, stormig.]

1. Tempestuous.

The rising of some stormic flood.

Mir. for Mag. (1610), p. 634.

Bellowing clouds burst with a stormy sound,
And with an armed winter srew the ground.

Addison.

The tender apples from their parents rent

By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie. Philips.

2. Violent; passionate.

STORY. n. s. [storp, Saxon; storie, Dutch; storia, Italian; ιστορια.]

1. History; account of things past.

The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren, the sons of Noah. Raleigh.

Thée I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance : now hear me relate
My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard.

Milton, P. L.

The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.

Matters of fact, concerning times, places, persons, actions, which depend upon story, and the relation of others, these things are not capable of being proved by such scientific principles.

Wilkins.

Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force; yet by some slight miscarriage, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the least traces of them to be found but only in story. South.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.

In the road between Bern and Soleurre, a monument erected by the republic of Bern tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addison.

3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.

These flaws and starts would well become

A woman's story at a winter's fire,

Authoriz'd by her grandame. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
Beheld of old, what stories had we heard
Of fairies, satyrs, and the nymphs their dames,
Their feasts, their revels, and their anorous flames!

Denham.

My maid left on the table one of her storybooks, which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor servants who came to be ladies. Swift.

STORY.* n. s. [storp, place. Skinner, and
Dr. Johnson. — It is from stage; stagery, stagery, (the a broad) stawry, or story,
i. e. a set of stairs. Mr. H. Tooke. See STAGE.] A floor; a flight of rooms.

Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, and the contrary fault of low distended fronts. Wotton.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris

Might raise a house about two stories;

A lyric ode would slate; a catch

Would tile; an epigram would thatch. Swift.

To STORV. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in history; to relate.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.
Shakespeare, Cymb.

'Tis not vain or fabulous

What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly muse,
Story'd of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell.

Milton, Comus.

It is storied of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the thumbs of it being so big, that no man could grasp one of them with both his arms. Wilkins.

Recite them, nor in erring pity fear,

To wound with storied griefs the filial ear. Pope.

2. To range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed field are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or storied, according to the difference of it; any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley, Serm.

STORYTELLER. n. s. [from story and tell.]

One who relates tales in conversation;
an historian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old storytellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her who miss'd her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon.

Dryden.

Company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry, tedious storytellers. Swift, Polite Conversation.

STOT.* n. s. [stob-hopp, Saxon; "stothorse, caballus," Prompt. Parv. stotte, Saxon, equus vilis; stod, Su. Goth.
equus.]

1. A horse.

This reve sate upon a right good stot,
That was all pomelee gray, and hight Scot.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

2. A young bullock or steer. [stut, Swed.
juvencus, Ihre.] This is common in the north of England.

STOTE. n. s. A kind of weasel. See STOAT.

STOVE. n. s. [stoo, Icelandick, a fireplace; stoa, Saxon; estuve, Fr. stove, Dutch.]

1. A hot-house; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congealed in clods, of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stores, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make,
Fountains in autumn to bring winter back.

Beaumont, Pysche.

The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottos, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stores or sweating-vaults. Woodward.

The most proper place for unction is a stove.

Wiseman.

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smoking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove. Evelyn.

To STOVE.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To keep warm in a house artificially heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange-trees, lemon-trees, and myrtles, if they be stoved; and sweet marjoram warm set. Bacon.

2. To stove.

Birds, beasts, and reptiles, stoved up as in a close hatch.

Parker's Biblioth. Bibl. (1720), vol. 1. p. 203.

STOVER.* n. s. [estover, Fr. from the Lat. fovere, to foster. Minsheu.] Fodder for cattle; coarse hay, or straw;
and sometimes straw for thatch.

The turf mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
And flat meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Sedge and reed, for thatch and stover fit.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 25.

Their browse and stover waxing thin and scant.

Drayton, Muses' Elys.

STOUK.* See STOOK.

To STOUND.* v. n. [stunde, I grieved, Icelandic, from styn, to grieve.] To be in pain or sorrow. Dr. Johnson states it to be out of use. Mr. Mason says, the difficulty would be to shew when it was in use as a verb neuter, or in this sense. Mr. Mason knew nothing of our northern dialect, and rarely troubled himself about etymology. "It sounds,"

i. e. it aches, it smart, is used in the north of England. See also Dr. Jamieson's Scott. Dict. in V. To STOUND. In some parts, it is pronounced stun.

STOUND.* part. For stunned.

So was he stound with stroke of her huge tail.

Spenser, F. Q.

STOUND.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Sorrow; grief; mishap. Out of use.
The Scots retain it.

Begin and end the bitter baleful stound. Spenser.

The fox his copesmate found,

To whom complaining his unhappy stound,

He with him far'd some better chance to find.

Spenser.

2. A shooting pain.

Keep your corpse from the careful stounds
That in my carrion carcase abounds. Spenser.

3. A noise.

With that he roar'd aloud, as he were wood,

That all the palace quaked at the stound. Spenser.

4. Astonishment; amazement.

Thus we stood as in a stound,

And wet with tears, like dew, the ground. Gay.

5. [Stund, Sax.] Hour; time; season; a small space of time. This is still a provincial word.

Till that stound could never wight him harme
By subtilty, nor slight, nor might, nor mighty charme. Spenser.

Marks that will be ever found,
To remember this glad stound. B. Jonson, Masques.

STOUR.* See STOOD.

STOUR. n. s. [stur, Runick, a battle; storp, Sax. to disturb.] Assault; incursion; tumult. Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bow. Spenser.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty powre
Per force subdu'd my poor captiv'd heart,

And raging now therein with restless stour,
Dost tyrannize in every weaker part. Spenser.

The giant struck so mainly merciless,
That could have overthrown a stonny tower,
And were not heavenly grace that him did bless,
He had been poulder'd all as thin as flower,
But he was wary of that deadly stowre. Spenser.
STOUR.* n. s. [ȝrup, Saxon, from the Welsh dwr, water, "Sunt in nostrā
Britanniā plurima flumina appellata es dūr, sive Sturā, Anglorum sermone stour." Baxter, Gloss. Antig. Brit. p.
110.] A river: whence the prefix stour to many of our places: Stourton, Stour- minster, Stourbridge, Sturrey, &c. See Lye in V. Stup.

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dutch; stolz, proud,
German; stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]
1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit;
Cries, I have sense to serve my turn in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.
2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled. Ps. lxxvi. 5.
He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be. Clarendon.

3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.
The lords all stand,

To clear their cause most resolutely stout. Daniel.
There virtue and stout honour pass'd the guard,
Those only friends that could not be debar'd.
Bathurst.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way,
And suck'd through loosen'd planks the rushing sea. Dryden.

STOUT. n. s. A cant name for strong beer.
Should but his muse descending drop

A slice of bread and mutton-chop,
Or kindly, when his credit's out,
Surprise him with a pint of stout;
Exalted in his mighty mind,
He flies and leaves the stars behind. Swift.

STOUTLY. adv. [from stout.] Lustily;
boldly; obstinately.

The general and his wife are talking of it,
And she speaks for you stoutly. Shaks. Othello.
Her genuine laws she stoutly did retain.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 9.

If the western Christians should stoutly invade Turkey with any likelihood to prevail, the Greeks therein would run to aid them.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 178.

The cock, with lively din,
Scatters the rear of darkness thin;
And to the stack or the barn-door
Stoutly struts his dames before. Milton, L' Allegro.

STOUTNESS. n. s. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.
2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let
Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death
With as stout heart as thou. Shakespeare, Coriol.

TO STOW. v. a. [propp, Sax. stoe, old Frisick, a place; stowen, Dutch, to lay up.] To lay up; to reposit in order;
to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief! where hast thou stow'd my daughter?
Shakespeare.

I' th' holsters of the saddle-bow
Two aged pistols he did stow.

Hudibras.

Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides.

Dryden.
All the patriots were beheaded, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines.

Addison.
The goddess shov'd the vessel from the shores,
And stow'd within its womb the naval stores. Pope.
So grieves th' advent'rous merchant, when he throws

All his long-toil'd-of for-treasure his ship stows
Into the angry main. Carew.

STOW. Stoe. Whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Saxon ȝtop, a place. Gibson's Camden.

STOW'AGE. † n. s. [from stow.]

1. Room for laying up.

What were all the fasts and humiliations of the late reformers, but the forbearing of dinners? that is, the enlarging the stowage, and the redoubling
the appetite for a larger supply!

South, Serm. viii. 8.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandize of as great a value. Addison.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form, their value's great;
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage. Shaks. Cymb.

3. The things stowed.

We ha' ne'er better luck,
When we ha' such stowage as these trinkets with us.
Beaumont and Fl. Sea-Voyage.

4. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STRABISM. n. s. [strabisme, Fr. strabismus, Lat.] A squinting; act of looking askint.

TO STRADDLE. † v. n. [Supposed to come from striddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Unskilful statuarys suppose
In forming a Colossus, if they make him
Straddle enough, strut, and look big and gape,
Their work is goodly. Chapman, Bussy D'Ambois.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked strad- dling animal, with bandy legs. Arbutnot and Pope.

TO STRAGGLE. † v. n. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from straviare, Italian, of extra viam, Lat. Dr. Johnson.—The etymology is obvious in the Saxon ȝtragan, ȝtrægan, to scatter, whence to stray, as Mr. H. Tooke has observed. See TO STRAY.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend
A mile or two, and sees the journey's end,
I straggle on too far. Suckling.

A wolf spied out a stragging kid, and pursued him. L'Estrange.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from stragging. Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

He likewise enriched poor stragging soldiers with great quantity. Shakespeare, Timon.
They found in Burford some of the stragging soldiers, who out of weariness stayed behind.

Clarendon.

Form stragging mountaineers for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood;
Houses to build, and them contiguous make,
For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake.

Tate.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine
Of stragging branches, and improve the wine.
Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge that straggle too far out.

Mortimer.

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Sirens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the stragging rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke. Raleigh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a stragging house;
Yet still he was at hand. Dryden.

STRAGGLER. n. s. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief. Spenser on Ireland.

Let 's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash these foreverwearing rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken. Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth.

Dryden.

His pruning hook corrects the vines,
And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines.
Pope.

STRAIGHT. † adj. [strack, old Dutch.

It is well observed by Ainsworth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow strait; but for straight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority. Dr. Johnson.—

It is also the Saxon ȝtrac, right, direct;
strack, Germ. the same; which, as Sere-nius and Dr. Jamieson have observed, are from the verbs signifying to stretch;
as straecka, Su. Goth. ȝreccan, Saxon.
And a straight line, the latter adds, gives us the idea of that which is stretched out between two points.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak; feature, laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva.

Shakespeare.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines;
but there is one only which is straight. Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound;
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round. Prior.

When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea. Watts, Logick.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait; estroit, Fr. [See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments, strait at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, close,
narrow; or to straight, not crooked.
Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it straight about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [strax, Danish; strack, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. This sense is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.

If the devil come and roar for them, I will not send them. I will after straight, And tell him so. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel, are not the most pernicious.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

With chalk I first describe a circle here, Where the æthereal spirits must appear: Come in, come in; for here they will be strait: Around, around the place I fumigate. Dryden.

I know thy generous temper well; Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it, It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze. Addison.

To STRAIGHTEN. v. a. [from straight.]

1. To make not crooked; to make straight. A crooked stick is not straightened, except it be as far bent on the clean contrary side. Hooker.

Of ourselves being so apt to err, the only way which we have to straighten our paths is, by following the rule of his will, whose footsteps naturally are right. Hooker.

2. To make tense; to tighten.

STRAIGHTENER.* n. s. [from straighten.] A director; one who sets right.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

STRAIGHTFORTH.* adv. [straight and forth.] Directly; thenceforth.

She smote the ground, the which straightforth did yield

A fruitful olive tree. Spenser, Muirpotmos.

STRAIGHTLY.* adv. [from straight.]

1. In a right line; not crookedly.

2. Tightly; with tension.

The soul may deem herself too straightly girt up. More, Conf. Cobb. p. 228.

STRAIGHTNESS. n. s. [from straight.]

1. Rectitude; the contrary to crookedness. Some are for masts, as fir and pine, because of their length and straightness. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Tension; tightness.

STRAIGHTWAY. adv. [straight and way.] It is very often written straightways, and therefore is perhaps more properly written straightwise. Immediately; straight.

Let me here for aye in peace remain, Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Spenser.

Soon as he entered was, the door straightway Did shut. Spenser.

Like to a ship, that, having 'scap'd a tempest, Is straightway claim'd and boarded with a pirate. Shakespeare.

The Turks straightway breaking in upon them, made a bloody fight. Knolles.

As soon as iron is out of the fire, it deadeth straightways. Bacon.

The sound of a bell is strong; continueth some time after the percussion; but ceaseth straightways if the bell or string be touched. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The sun's power being in those months greater, it then straightways hurries steams up into the atmosphere. Woodward.

To STRAIN. v. a. [estreindre, French.]

1. To squeeze through something.

Their aliment ought to be light, rice boiled in whey and strained. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To purify by filtration.

Earth doth not strain water so finely as sand. Bacon.

3. To squeeze in an embrace.

I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace; But through my arms he slipt and vanish'd. Dryden.

Old Evander, with a close embrace, Strain'd his departing friend; and tears o'erflow'd his face. Dryden, Æn.

4. To sprain; to weaken by too much violence.

The jury make no more scruple to pass against an Englishman and the queen, though it be to strain their oaths, than to drink milk unstrained. Spenser on Ireland.

Prudes decay'd about may tack, Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

5. To put to its utmost strength.
